Charles N. Smith, third vice-president of the International Typographical Union, and head of the mailers' organization, visited Los Angeles for a few days before going to the convention at Colorado Springs, returning here immediately after the adjournment, when he "went to the bat" for the settlement of the new scale for the mailers. Within three weeks' time a new agreement and scale had been signed up, with back pay for a year. No wonder all the mailers of Los Angeles are wearing smiles these days and sounding the praises of Vice-President Smith.

Philip Johnson and William H. Ellis, delegates to Colorado Springs from San Francisco, spent several days in Los Angeles en route home from the "big doings."

Fred Bebergall, vice-president of No. 21, visited in Los Angeles among friends and relatives for a week the latter part of August.

W. K. Lockwood represented No. 174 at the state federation of labor in Sacramento the first week in October, being elected by a unanimous vote at the August meeting.

Among the first 5 per cent of the drafted men to go to American Lake, Wash., from Los Angeles was "Jack" Scott, assistant machinist of the Herald, and the day before he went away he was called before a "court martial" of the chapel and presented with a gold wrist watch by the members, among whom he served most of his apprenticeship.

In the same party upon departure was Ray A. Hickman, son of E. J. Hickman, assistant foreman of the Herald. Several months ago young Hickman made application to join the navy, but owing to a defect in one eye was declared ineligible. He then made an endeavor to get in the marine corps, but was again turned down for the same cause. However, when called upon to stand an examination for the drafted army, he was passed without hesitation, although he presented both his naval rejection cards. Not really desiring exemption, he made application to go with the first contingent to the training camp and was proud to be among the first bunch who will form the great liberty army.

Still another of the young printers of Los Angeles to go to camp at American Lake is "Mike" F. Hollingsworth, of the Alles chapel, who departed September 19. The Examiner's chapel will be represented by young John Metz, Ralph Haney and G. N. Brown, son of C. E. Brown.

Friends of Hugh A. Saxon will be pleased to learn that he is making a place for himself with the Fox Film Company, having just finished a feature picture entitled "Madame Who," in which Bessie Barriscale was the shining light. The picture is to be released shortly, so look for Hughie's shining light, you movie fiends.

Representative Charles T. Scott has returned from a trip to El Paso, Texas, where he was sent by the executive council on request of El Paso Union to assist that local in getting a new wage scale. At the end of a week's negotiations, Scott and the local scale committee came to an agreement with the publishers of that city, which gave to the members of that union $3 a week increase and two months' back pay. El Paso now has one of the best newspaper scales in the country.

Al C. LaForge, of the Examiner chapel, one of the young live wires of No. 174, spent the month of September in Chicago, his old home town, and report has it that a license of some sort may be bought before long.

Ralph G. Criswell, son of Councilman Ralph L. Criswell, has left the sunny clime of Los Angeles for New York city, the home of his wife's parents, who have been anxious for some time to see their new granddaughter, as well as to meet their new son-in-law.

Once again has the Grim Reaper called one of our members, Everett E. Leach, a man whose daily life was clean and open and whose friendship was valued by those who could claim it. Mr. Leach was sick only a few months and his death was a shock to many of his friends, who were not aware of his sickness. For the past several years he was a member of the firm of Leach & Gilmer, and for several years previous had a machine in the office of the Falkner Printing Company on East Seventh street. He leaves a widow and three children.

W. K. LOCKWOOD.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Bridgeport Union has surely done her share in furnishing men to Uncle Sam. Up to date we have sent seven of our members. We are proud of our boys, and hope to see them back with us soon. The members whose names appear on our roll of honor are: Joe Peck, first-class printer on U. S. dreadnaught Pennsylvania; Andrew Bernat, One-hundred-and-seventeenth aero squadron; Herbert Booth, Henry I. Coates, Clifton J. Bixby, Irving Lynch, Clifford Jennings. At our September meeting it was ordered that a roll of honor be framed and placed beside our charter in order that we should all remember that there were no "quitters" in No. 252 when our country needed men.

The Standard-American has placed a monotype type-casting machine in the jobroom, and the type turned out is first class. Another innovation of the plant is a noon edition and a mail edition, in addition to the regular afternoon edition.

Charles Beerbaum, one of our members, is now employed by the city as street inspector, and is making good.

On Monday morning, September 20, Thomas H. Maloney, machinist-operator at the Graph, was married to Miss Mary O'Neil, of this city. The wedding, which was preceded by a breakfast at the Hotel Stratfield, was solemnized in St. Patrick's church. The happy couple enjoyed a honeymoon trip to Boston, Montello and other points.

Hurrah for Scranton, 1918, and may Albany get the convention in 1919, when they celebrate their fiftieth anniversary. We hope Scranton will see that the streets are well shored up, as we are a heavyweight, and do not care to take a header through the sidewalk and land in a coal mine.

Sam Hawman made a pleasure trip to New London lately. He reports business there in good shape, and informs us that New London has raised its scale without any trouble.

We are anticipating a visit from Representative Brady at our October meeting, which falls on the 16th of that month. Come out, boys, and give Mr. Brady a big welcome.

The Labor day parade at Danbury was well attended. Several of our boys were there and report a great time shown them by our Danbury friends. Jim Coates, our delegate to the state American Federation of Labor convention held there, reported at our September meeting, and, judging from what he told us, much good was accomplished.

We were very sorry to disappoint the "gang" last month, but we took our son and went to see the wonderful sights of Coney Island, the first time in sixteen years. There were some sights. Down there they wear 'em higher than they do in Hawaii. We were too overcome to write a letter for the September JOURNAL.

Clarence Carr, of Warner's, is at Pine Hill, Catskill mountains, endeavoring to regain his health. William H. Bixby is now with the Standard, in the jobroom. Daniel Sauer, of Danbury, has accepted a position at the Graph. Sam Cutting, of Cutting & Worthen, has secured a three-months' relief from conscription. He will report for duty in December. George L'Heureux, one of our old-time members, has secured a position on a Springfield (Mass.) paper. Wilbert Jacob is now employed in the Warner printery.

At the last meeting of the central labor union reports from delegates showed a scarcity of skilled mechanics in all branches. Bridgeport has war contracts of about $50,000,000, and the only trouble is lack of skilled labor in all branches.

ROBERT TARRING.

MISSOURI VALLEY TYPOGRAPHICAL CONFERENCE.

Only a few reports from conference unions show slowness in working conditions, the greater number reporting work unusually good and in some jurisdictions a scarcity of men.

Enid (Okla.) Union is the latest addition to the ranks of the conference, bringing the membership up to thirty-four unions.

Hannibal Union has renewed its book and job and newspaper scales for another year without change.

Mason City (Iowa) Union has secured a scale increase of $2.50 per week in all departments.

Kansas City has been the scene of many strikes during the last two months. The successful ending of a majority of them in favor of the workmen will have a good effect on the organized workers of the city, in the opinion of Secretary Duke.

The recent ruling of the postal department against the Appeal to Reason, published in Girard, Kan., had to do with the mailing of extra copies of the issue of June 30, and did not otherwise affect the publication.

Columbia (Mo.) Union, with the assistance of other unions of the state, is hopeful of bringing the state university printing into a union office.

Ajax Johnson, a member of Wichita Union, was re-elected president of the Kansas State Federation of Labor.

Council Bluffs Union has succeeded in getting the "war clause" attached to all its scale contracts.

Des Moines Union is represented in the army and navy by nine journeymen and four apprentices, while St. Joseph supplies seven journeymen and one apprentice.

Coffeyville (Kan.) Union signed a new scale September 1, to run two years, providing for an increase of $2 per week all around.

A mailers' union is in process of formation in Wichita.

A dearth of operators is reported in several Oklahoma jurisdictions.

St. Joseph, Mo. CHARLES RHODE.

CONCORD, N. H.

North Adams and 5,000 members!

Charles H. Abbott, our new member, who was obligated at our August meeting, has taken a traveler and departed.

Thomas F. Killeen, who was called to his home in Clinton, Mass., recently to take the physical examination, failed to pass, and has taken a traveler.

George W. Conway and James M. Cox have passed the physical examination for the new draft army and expect to be called any time.

Fred Phaneuf is on his annual vacation, which will be passed in Canada. He is accompanied this year by his wife. Fred was married on August 27.

Because their demand for an increase of 8 cents an hour was refused, about 1,000 men at the local railroad shops went out on strike on August 31. The strikers marched up through the streets and made quite a sight. They held a mass meeting in the afternoon and about every man employed in the departments that were on strike and were not members of the union made application, and immediate action was taken on them. They returned to work on September 11. They received an increase of 5 cents an hour and the other 3 cents asked for will be arbitrated. Henry B. Endicott, of the Massachusetts public safety committee, will act as arbitrator. This is another great victory for organized labor.

The same old story to tell. No attendance at the meeting. We had just enough to legally open up and close. The whole meeting lasted just fifteen minutes. I wish somebody that reads this article would suggest something to make the members attend the meetings and do the business there. The members of No. 297, or most of them, are union slackers. James B. Sullivan is back on his old job at the Rumford Press.

In the morning of Labor day a parade was held, the largest labor parade in the history of Concord. Every union man that was out on strike was in the parade, and also bakers, barbers, bartenders and printers. Most every labor organization in the city was represented to a certain extent. After the parade a series of sports were held at Contoocook River park. Patriotic and labor addresses also were on the program. Taken on the whole organized labor made the best showing on Labor day it ever has in the memory of the writer.

Charles H. Abbott has accepted a position in Hanover, N. H., and has deposited his traveler with this union. E. B. MCCAULEY.

MONTREAL, P. Q.

The September meeting of No. 176 was very well attended, quite a number of new faces being observed among the audience. The various reports were all favorably received and acted upon. Jack Cantwell reported on his trip to the convention, and commented on the various rules and regulations passed at the convention. The "war dues act" seems to tickle the membership. Speaking generally of his trip, the receptions at Denver, Omaha and at Colorado Springs could not have been improved on; the various drives to places of interest, covering so much ground with the limited time at their disposal, were wonderful. A very fine report was presented on the Home administration by Mr. Cantwell. When he left Montreal he was under the impression that he was acquainted with three old members at the Home, but when being taken through by Mr. Harwood and Mr. Paul, he found he knew eleven members. At Chicago the Printers' club gave the eastern delegates keys to the club as honorary members.

A joint conference was held with No. 145 pertaining to the good and welfare of both organizations, and was well attended. From No. 145, Messrs. Gauthier, St. Hilaire and B. Vauthier; from No. 176, Messrs. Black, Whitaker, Hamilton, Tardif and Secretary Philip. Representative Drury also was in attendance. The question of the standing of various offices, the control and other details were gone into, and Presidents Gauthier and Black instructed to carry on the work on the lines reviewed.

The allied printing council reports that the best of relationship exists between all the locals interested, and co-operation has shown what can be done by all working together. Representative Drury spoke on the label movement and the need to get together. Gus Francq, of No. 145, also addressed the meeting on the lines of joint co-operation.

Work has slackened up considerably during the past month, especially on the job side, and sufficient subs are on hand for all the extra work. Both proprietor and union are anxiously awaiting developments of the various acts of parliament.

Traveling cards issued: J. Duncan Stewart, A. R. Surridge, E. Landry, J. Murray, A. L. Whittaker, P. A. Gauthier, Fred A. White. Received: A. Enness, T. B. Warner, Fred A. White, P. J. Fynan.

JAMES PHILIP.

Interest was aroused at the September meeting by the expected report on the newspaper situation. President Black gave a lengthy account of the negotiations that had taken place; but nothing tangible had come so far. A vote of confidence in the negotiating committee was carried, and it is hoped a more reasonable spirit will be shown by the evening newspaper publishers in the near future.

Organizing work is being pushed ahead by President Black and Secretary Philip, and a most interesting report was presented. Many of the places visited were unknown to the membership at large, and much good should result from the overhauling of the small printshops that abound in this city

A report is to hand that J. Anderson (formerly an apprentice in the Herald newsroom), who went overseas with the 199th Irish Rangers, was gassed and has since died.

M. C. Millington has received news of the death of his youngest boy in France. This is the second son he has lost in the great fight.

Sam Olding has resumed work in his old position on the Star after an illness of several months. Unfortunately, his son at the front is reported as missing.

The Daily Mail is reported as being in the liquidators' hands and has suspended publication. Many rumors are about concerning a change of hands, and we are hopeful the presses will be running again shortly.

The picnic at Chambly (referred to in last month's notes) proved itself a financial as well as a social success, the committee reporting a balance on the right side of over one hundred dollars.

Secretary Philip is away on his annual vacation somewhere in the mountains, "far from the madding crowd." Fishing and sleeping are the principal attractions of this holiday resort, and it is hoped our genial secretary will come back with renewed vigor for his winter's work.

C. H. PHILLIPS.

Jacques-Cartier No. 145.

The September meeting was rather an expeditious one. All items were speedily dealt with. Although the executive committee had been loaded with work at our August meeting, its report was very satisfactory, in spite of some very difficult problems it had to deal with. Every member helped to adjourn as early as possible, so that every one could have a good rest in view of the great parade on Monday morning, Labor day. It was recommended by our officers to show up as numerous as possible. Their recommendations were not fruitless. No. 145 has surpassed all preceding years. Very few were missing, and they valiantly marched behind one of the best bands of the city.

Unanimous praise from the citizens, his worship the mayor and the daily press were extended to the dignity and the behavior of the workingmen of Montreal during their big Labor day parade. The celebration was one of the best that we could possibly desire under the extraordinary conditions of the present days. The great success of the day certainly does credit to the methods of the organizers.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The applications for admission to the union nearly equaled the attendance at the August meeting of No. 33. Charles R. Brownell reported as a delegate to the New England Typographical Union convention held at Manchester, N. H. The report was an interesting one, containing many suggestions which if followed out would no doubt result in much benefit to the printing trade throughout the district. The report showed the delegates to have been diligent in their work as representatives to the convention. Mr. Brownell related an incident that took place prior to the delegates reaching the convention city, showing that all the entertaining features of a convention are not always confined to the union that acts as the host. The evil of the "mat" situation was again brought to the attention of the members. Other localities beside this city seem to be afflicted with this menace to the trade, although Providence appears to be an oasis at which the thirst of those who use this system of "ad" setting never fails to be supplied. The meeting voted to pay the dues of all members of the union, until the close of the European war, who enlist in either the army or navy.

The fifteenth biennial convention of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America was held in this city in September. The printing and binding of the souvenir was done by the William R. Brown Company, of this city. The souvenir is of considerable size, made necessary to accommodate the large amount of advertising contained therein. A liberal amount of space is given to reading matter of an interesting historical nature relating to Providence. Photographs of officials of the Rhode Island Company, the employes of which are affiliated with the Amalgamated Association, are also published. Several years ago the militia of Rhode Island was called out by the governor of the state and martial law declared, while the soldiers, armed with rifles and provided with cannon, sought to harmonize the difference between its employes, then on strike in part for recognition of their union. Now this same street railway company has a signed agreement with the local street car men, with full recognition of their union, based on the principle of conciliation and arbitration.

The local members in whose bonnet the delegate bee may have commenced to buzz will be interested to know that Scranton, the entertaining city of the 1918 convention, is classed as 100 per cent organized in all trades. Scranton Union has nearly $7,000 in its treasury, a membership of 169, and the population of the city is given as 139,000. The city is known as the "Queen of Anthracite," and is claimed by some of its admirers to be the greatest coal mining center on earth. Those who may represent Providence at Scranton and follow only superficially the process of coal mining will discern that a mule in the inner regions of the earth is allowed more oxygen to the square inch than is given employes in some of the printing offices in this city.

For the first time in many years Providence had no public celebration of Labor day. The absence of the industrious workers of the city who in years gone by donned their immaculate linen and presented themselves to mobilized throngs on the sidewalks for a once-over as they marched the city's streets gave the city an atmosphere more depressive than inspiring.

George Brown, foreman in the office of the Oxford Linotype Composition Company, was last month taken on a stretcher to the Providence surgical hospital, threatened with appendicitis. After several days of confinement at the hospital the alleged affliction did not develop and Mr. Brown was allowed to go his way.

A. J. Rose has removed his office from Westminster street to more commodious quarters at 86 Weybosset street.

The annual meeting of the state branch, American Federation of Labor, was held at Newport, September 8-9. Samuel R. Macready and Daniel O'Connor represented Providence Typographical Union. Mr. O'Connor served on the committee on finance and Mr. Macready acted as one of the committee on press. Providence was selected as the next meeting place for the semi-annual gathering in March.

John J. Laffy has resumed his studies at St. Mary's Academy at Baltimore, Md. Mr. Laffy will finish his studies this year, the present being the fifth term.

William W. Saunders, for some months employed on the Evening Bulletin, has withdrawn his card and left for Orlando, Fla., where he will take up work at the trade.

Charles Carroll, Ph. D., an honorary member of Providence Typographical Union, attended at Washington, D. C., as representative from Rhode Island for the board of education and the commissioner of public schools, a series of conferences at the bureau of education on the new federal vocational education act, and on educational problems arising from the war.

Max Hoffman has resigned his position with the Providence Evening Tribune, where he was employed for many years in the composing room. Mr. Hoffman is an artisan of unexcelled ability and his work will readily be appreciated by any employer who is fortunate enough to secure his services in the future. His associates on the Tribune regret his decision to leave.

After several weeks' absence from his work as a linotype operator in the office of the Providence Evening Tribune, George Canning is able to resume his occupation in that capacity again. What at one time promised to be a serious affliction to Mr. Canning's thumb of his left hand, after close medical attention, has been cured. While waiting for his hand to be restored to good health again Mr. Canning spent his idle time on a farm in Foster.

Charles Murphy, who learned his trade as a linotype machinist in the office of the Providence Evening Tribune and later went to Boston, now belongs to the aviation corps and at this writing was stationed at San Antonio, Texas.

S. H. Byron, an employe of the government printing office at Washington, D. C., was a visitor in this city last month.

The membership of Providence Union is reminded of the vote to be taken on October 17 on important proposed amendments to the laws of the International Typographical Union.

EDWARD N. GRIFFITHS.

Bernard J. McLaughlin and the writer, both members of the Bulletin composing-room force, are taking a course at Plattsburgh for the officers' reserve corps. Last summer we spent in El Paso, Texas, this summer at Plattsburgh, and next summer, probably France (?). The course here opened August 27, and will close November 27. It is an excellent training and has been well arranged for the purpose to be attained. The work is hard and the hours long, but three months is a short time to make an officer. We are both in field artillery, and between physical calisthenics and mental gymnastics we are kept pretty busy.

PERCY J. CANTWELL.

ASBURY-LONG BRANCH, N. J.

The Long Branch Daily Record has been the center of attraction for the local printers for the past few weeks. Charles L. Edwards has resigned as manager and Frank N. Worth has been appointed to succeed him. Mr. Edwards had been manager and secretary of the Record for the past twenty-two years. Mr. Worth was formerly the Red Bank representative of the Record and was promoted to advertising manager when H. S. Meyers resigned that position to accept a similar one with the Asbury Park Press. From advertising manager Mr. Worth stepped to manager and secretary. Allen Dean, formerly of the Red Bank Register, is the new foreman of the Record. What changes will come next is hard to tell, but rumor has it that there will be many before the end of the present year.

Among the departures for the past month are: Charles Mullen to Philadelphia, Edward Shinlinger to Plainfield, H. G. Wylie to Brooklyn, C. E. Weed to Meriden, Conn., P. S. Fitzpatrick to New York.

We are proud to list the following, who have been called to the colors: Aaron Edwards, formerly of the Record, has joined the navy and holds the title of coxswain; Allen Thomas, former pressman of the Asbury Park Press, enlisted in the officers' reserve; Troy Howland is filling his place at the Press; Charles Farlardeau and James Chamberlain, of the Hustler Print, Asbury Park, and Frank Polier and Joseph Lynch, of the Schuyler Press, and Reginald Van Brunt, of the Red Bank Standard, are also serving Uncle Sam.

J. P. Leigh, of the Schuyler Press, has been on the sick list.

It has been published in the local papers that a new daily newspaper is to be launched at Long Branch, but to date that first edition which we have been eagerly waiting for has failed to put in an appearance. Nevertheless, as one of our members put it, "When things start happening, they come fast."

LEROY VAN BRUNT.

HARTFORD, CONN.

At our last meeting a good-sized crowd turned out, as the new wage scale was discussed and a repeal of the 25-cent assessment was brought up.

Joe Gallagher, of the Times, and B. Garrity, of the Hartford Courant, have volunteered and are serving in the ambulance corps. Jimmie Kelley, of the Globe, was accepted in the draft, but at the time of writing he had not been called.

Robert E. Pyne, publisher of the Labor Standard and proprietor of the Pyne Printery, printed the souvenir book for the Labor day celebration held in Danbury, where the Connecticut state federation held its convention, and was highly commented on by a good many people.

O. A. Miles was appointed on the public market commission by Mayor Hagarty to represent organized labor in this city. Mr. Crocker, of the Courant, was appointed on the registration committee. Mr. Pyne was appointed on the publicity committee when the city gave a parade in honor of the drafted men the past month.

"Pop" Chase returned from the Danbury convention and gave a long and interesting report of the doings that week. Much label matter was brought up and discussed. A resolution was introduced providing that, when a member of organized labor is called to serve his country, that nothing but union-made cigars, cigarettes and tobacco be sent. It was endorsed unanimously. This convention was the largest yet held in this state. About 175 delegates were present.

Among the young men from East Hartford selected to leave for Ayer, Mass., was Benjamin P. Barbeau, a member of the Post composing-room force. Mr. Barbeau, besides holding various other offices in Typographical Union No. 127, was the chairman of his chapel and held in esteem by his co-workers, who tendered him a patriotic social at his home. National music and speech-making was a feature. Although married, Mr. Barbeau answers the call of his country with a will and the boys on the Post "sent him away with a smile." The Post chapel presented Mr. Barbeau with a wrist watch. In the place of the chairman, Louie Dunn was elected, and Mr. Humason, vice-chairman.

Work is picking up little by little in this city, both in newspaper and job work.

James Crockett, of South Manchester, and a member of No. 127, who applied for application for admission to the Home, died there recently. He was a well-known young man and liked by all of his comrades. Resolutions were drawn up by No. 127 and forwarded to the parents of the deceased.

Mrs. Margaret Laffin, proofreader on the Post, was visiting in Baltimore recently....“Bill” Murray, of the Globe chapel, spent his vacation in Syracuse and other eastern cities....Charlie Schumacher, of the Times force, was a recent visitor at Home Beach, Conn., where he spent his vacation.

Senator Frederick Neebe, elected as delegate from New Haven Typographical Union to the state federation at Danbury, to represent that local, was honored by being elected treasurer of that body. He was formerly president of that branch. H. F. TROMMER.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.

Labor day—nothin' doin' here. That is to say, collectively. Some of the boys went fishing, but somehow that is not such interesting sport in “dry” provinces; the fish are seen only singly, and there is nothing to cheer the weary wait between bites. Many of our members were gardening, which is the fashionable “pastime” these days, and instead of the length of fish the “wets” have reference to the fertility of the respective back yards.

We had one bit of “sport” on Labor day. We were lolling luxuriously in the veranda hammock, sending into the empyrean the fragrance of our stogie in expansive rings, when a thud resounded in the mail box, and we extracted a dainty pearl-gray booklet tied with silk. Some pal's wedding invitation? No! An alluring inducement from a funeral merchant to be embalmed and buried in gorgeous style and his specially advantageous terms. We were just weighing the chances as against H. C. of L., when we noticed there was no label, so we relit our maduro and lived on.

The ladies of No. 449 have a kindly thought for our members at the front and are busy now arranging to send them some Christmas cheer.

Secretary White is visiting down east and is taking in the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress at Ottawa.

J. C. Bleaken, ex-president and returned veteran, startled his friends by taking charge of a plant at Camrose and leaving town at somewhat short notice. IVOR CURTIS.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Multnomah Typographical Union No. 58 at its September meeting ratified the new scale which has been under negotiation for several months. The agreement runs until 1922, but may be opened each year by either subscriber thereto upon sixty days' notice. The union secured some concessions besides an increase of 32½ cents in wages. The six-day law, which had been inoperative until this time, will take effect immediately. John Baker, International representative from Helena, Mont., assisted the local scale committee, and his work is much appreciated by this local. The new scale is $5.95 night and $5.45 day.

Work in Portland is only fair on the newspapers, but job offices are said to be busy.

The ladies have had a successful social season and also made good in supplying needed woolen garments to one of the engineer companies soon to see service in France which contained many union men. The homes of different members were opened and the needed sweaters, wristlets and mufflers were knitted and delivered before the boys were ordered south.

H. C. Waller deposited a traveling card August 2 and on August 28 was found in an unconscious condition on the street and died before morning. He had worked in Portland on several occasions and was well known here. His aged father attended the funeral, coming from Los Angeles.

GEORGE E. WILLARD.

An Appreciation.

One of the peculiar traits of our membership in certain jurisdictions is a tendency to accept without question any propaganda based upon denunciation and vilification of our International officials. Ridicule and belittlement of our present system of conciliation of wage controversies by direct representative of the president, and open charges that our officials are guided in such matters by the election returns, form the chief stock in trade of a certain class of petty politicians in some unions. And the astonishing feature is the extent to which this teaching is accepted by men who, in civic, state and other matters, display a most broad-minded and liberal spirit.

The effects of this propaganda and the ludicrous situations to which its acceptance sometimes leads, was remarkably illustrated in the settlement of the Portland wage scale recently. For several weeks a committee from No. 58 had struggled in vain to reach an agreement with the Portland publishers, and finally the executive council was notified. Ordinarily such action would not portend great evil, but in this case the effect of the politicians' preachings were amply demonstrated.

We were lost. No. 58 could not expect much at the hands of the executive council. This union had antagonized that tribunal and it would proceed to “hand us a bunch.” And Representative Baker, of Helena, was the medium through which the “handing” was to be done. Truly a dismal outlook!

Into this atmosphere of suspicion and distrust came Representative Baker, to take up a scale controversy pregnant with delicate angles and fraught with many possibilities of disaster to our cherished working conditions, not to mention a hazy outlook for monetary gain.

After a few preliminary conferences with the publishers and a meeting of the union, through which the exact position of both parties were ascertained, Mr. Baker “got busy,” and in a few days had brought about an agreement with the publishers which came within a few cents of reaching the union's original demands, and which secured for No. 58 all the working conditions for which it was contending. Included in these, and of greater importance than any monetary features of the scale, Priority—(Old John)—which is dearer to the heart of the average Portland printer than life itself—is securely signed up in black and white, as per the 1917 law.

It is generally believed here that the Portland publishers, in accepting the 1917 priority law, acted upon the advice of their executive board. If this be the case, it would indicate a disposition on the part of the publishers' association to accept the 1917 law and thus relieve the chaotic and uncertain condition brought about by the adoption of the Spokane amendment.

We have witnessed the settlement of many controversies by conciliation, but never one which because of its peculiar angles, of local and national importance alike, required more tact and diplomacy than the one which Representative Baker has just brought to a happy conclusion here, to the satisfaction of all concerned.

When at the conclusion of the scale matter Representative Baker addressed a few words of farewell to the local union, he was given an ovation and a hearty godspeed by a membership which, a few days previous, had been filled with misgivings and distrust.

Incidentally, the new scale, in which we had it "handed to us," is, we believe, with one exception, the highest in existence, and in some respects it is the best. Should the executive council in the future decide on "handing it to us" again, we sincerely trust Mr. Baker will be sent along to do the "handing."

Meanwhile the all-wise prognosticators who insisted "we could not expect much at the hands of the executive council," realizing that that body was behind the representative in his every move, are sorely pressed indeed for an explanation. And in the minds of many who have heretofore accepted their propaganda without question, there is a suspicion, fast growing to conviction, that those ardent detractors of our present conservative policies are actuated not so much by a desire to promote the welfare of the craft as by a desire to further their own political ambitions.

CAL B. MCCOMBS.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

Labor day in Youngstown saw the business district packed with 10,000 people at 10 A. M., interested spectators, who watched the 2,200 union marchers in what was not only one of the largest but one of the most interesting parades ever held in this part of the state. Several beautiful floats were conspicuous in the parade. In the afternoon an athletic program and picnic were held at Idora park. The speakers of the day were Charles H. Wirmel, a prominent labor leader of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Rev. Charles Alfred Martin, pastor of St. Patrick's church, this city. Both speakers delivered able addresses in behalf of labor and were applauded at length by the large crowd in attendance. Members of No. 200 took an active part in the parade, as well as the athletic meet.

Several members of No. 200 have left the city during the past month, all being enlisted men, going to different cantonments throughout the country. Among those whose departure we noted were: Rev. W. Corson Press, honorary member, who left September 8, for Allentown, Pa., with the base hospital unit, as chaplain; Julian Howe, who left September 10 with the supply company, Third Ohio field artillery, now at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala.; William Morgan, Harmon Webber, Gerald Cover, and Carl Maag, who proceeded to Montgomery, Ala., on September 16, with the Tenth, and Paul E. Nixon, who, on September 20, went to Chillicothe, Ohio, to train with Ohio's "honor men."

Both local newspapers are preparing to adopt the non-distribution system in their composing rooms. The Vindicator has installed two monotypes, and the Telegram has two similar machines ordered, which will be in operation by next month. The Telegram has also installed a model 19 linotype. The reason for adopting the labor-saving system at this time was brought about by war conditions, which will undoubtedly mean a scarcity of printers.

William F. White, a member of the Telegram chapel for about six years, has resigned his position and gone to Canton, Ohio, to accept a situation on the Repository. Mr. White made numerous friends in this city and it is with regret that we see him leave.

Several of No. 200's members have been away on vacation trips recently, among whom we have noted the following: Zeno L. Hursh spent two weeks in Chicago, making the trip by auto; Carl Schmidt sojourned a week in the wilds of Canada; H. V. Curry spent a few days at his former home at Connersville, Ind., and Martin Mueller spent a fortnight "on the banks of the Wabash" at Logansport, Ind.

William Metcalf, of the Cleveland Press, spent Labor day in the city among old friends. "Bill" looks natural and is prospering in the Sixth City.

W. W. Skidmore, of the Telegram chapel, had the misfortune to lose his mother by death on September 10. The mother of Fred C. Hubbard, of the same chapel, died in Warren, Ohio, on September 17.

A surprise party was held at the home of Harvey H. Green in this city on September 15 by members of the Telegram chapel in honor of Paul E. Nixon, who left September 20 for Chillicothe, to begin training for the national army. Covers were laid for sixteen and a general good time was in order. Nixon was presented with several useful as well as ornamental gifts, and showed his appreciation by thanking the boys for their remembrance.

Work is progressing quite rapidly on Beil & Evans' new printshop, and it is thought this firm will be lodged in its new home inside of two months.

Among the arrivals during the past month were F. C. Hubbard, Stanley L. Ault and Walter Crowdis, all being employed on the Telegram.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

The regular monthly meeting of No. 20 was held on Sunday afternoon, September 2. In the absence of President Hill, David Handly presided. The writer was unavoidably absent, but learns that nothing of unusual interest came up. Lytton Alley and H. P. Newton, who represented No. 20 at the Colorado Springs convention, were present and submitted a comprehensive report. They also reported a profitable and an interesting trip.

During an electrical storm on Sunday, September 16, the Marshall & Bruce building was struck by lightning. In some way the automatic sprinkler system was turned on by the bolt and several hundred dollars' damage was done before the water could be turned off.

Little Edith Adeline, 16-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sutton, on September 16 fell from a second-story porch at their home, 306½ Seventh avenue, south, receiving injuries from which she died. Mr. Sutton is a linotype operator on the Tennessean and American. He and his wife have the sympathy of the membership of No. 20 and many other friends in their bereavement.

Gibson W. Patterson, of the Banner chapel, in company with friends took a western auto trip recently. They visited Chicago during the tour, and report a most enjoyable time.

The Nashville Banner is now printed "every day, and Sunday, too," the Sunday edition being issued in the morning, the first Sunday paper appearing on September 9. This arrangement has given out a little extra work to the "prints."

An item in my letter in the September JOURNAL announces Earl McEwen as succeeding R. W. Allen in the monotype casting room of the Ambrose

Digitized by Google

Printing Company. This information was given by both Mr. Allen and Mr. McEwen. Later Mr. McEwen decided to remain with the Brandon Printing Company. M. D. Fowlkes, recently of Winnipeg, Manitoba, is now in charge of the casting room of the Ambrose Printing Company. William Willkie remains as his assistant.

Two of No. 20's best-known members are now serving Uncle Sam in an official capacity. J. W. White, of the Banner chapel, is on the middle Tennessee federal exemption board, and Phil Edwards, of the Brandon Printing Company chapel, is a member of the local city exemption board No. 4. They have both been on the job several weeks.

Several of our members were drafted for army service, but nearly all were young men with dependents, and most of them have been exempted.

John S. Stewart, a member of No. 20, who has had charge of the local weather bureau printing for several years, has been ill with typhoid fever for several weeks. It is now thought he has a good chance to recover.

At the time of mailing this letter Smith Moore, a little son of the writer, age 11, is very ill with a malignant case of typhoid fever. For several days he has been very low. Dr. W. E. McCampbell, a skilful physician and a noble man, has exerted every effort to save the little fellow's life, and today (September 17) entertains strong hopes of his recovery. If it please the Great Master above, may our little one be spared. E. Roy Moore.

PATERSON, N. J.

The following members have announced themselves as candidates for delegate to the Scranton convention: David O. Stoddard, Franklin A. Doss, James Brown, Robert Campbell and "Al" Whitney. They are all hard workers in the local.

The "Somewhere in France" booklet issued by the International Typographical Union has made a great hit with our local, and extra copies will be secured and used for label boosting by our label committee.

Our efficient secretary, Herbert R. Kelt, decided this year to have his vacation in the cooling month of September. He and Mrs. Kelt spent the second and third week of that month visiting friends and relatives in Pennsylvania. Of course, he called on his old friend, "Bill" Young, president of Philadelphia Union.

The president of the allied board, your humble servant, made the rounds of the small shops the first week in September. He took note of labels they needed, conditions, etc., and he is glad to say found things very satisfactory. One shop which employs three of our members, but on account of the pressmen not being union is not entitled to the label, is very desirous of securing the use of the little joker. As soon as the erring pressmen come into the fold they will get the label, and not before.

"Joe" Walsh, of Wilkes-Barre, well known in this city, is now a member of the Third Pennsylvania field artillery. Eddie Weber, who has been playing Pennsylvania towns and Atlantic City, is back to his first love, the Press-Guardian. "Gene" Williams has lifted his card and is headed for Norfolk. Mike O'Hern did likewise and went to Newark.

Several Paterson printers have answered the call and shouldered a gun. They have one ambition, to show Kaiser Bill that he's not got priority over all. H. L. Vanderveld.

MADISON, WIS.

For the first time in eight years Madison Typographical Union took part in the Labor day parade. Local No. 106 was represented by a striking float, "Spirit of Printing," two automobiles, beautifully decorated with bunting, that carried the women members of the union. Nearly the entire membership was out.

"The Spirit of Printing" was regarded as the best float of about a dozen that were in the parade. A Washington hand-press, upon which the writer, dressed in a Ben Franklin suit, with the assistance of an apprentice, printed small cards bearing "Demand this label" and distributed them. A telegraph outfit, manned by Robert Wise, of the Wisconsin State Journal, printed bulletins of the progress of the parade, and notified the spectators that the Madison Democrat (non-union) was working nine hours on Labor day. Besides these two features, the float was handsomely decorated with American flags. The truck was union made, the teamster was a union man, and he said that the two horses he drove were "union."

The largest attendance in many months was present at the last meeting. The scale committee reported that a majority of the employing printers were in favor of granting the increase from $18 to $20 for handmen and from $20 to $22 for operators. After the business meeting C. E. Zeidler gave an interesting talk on the "Cost System." A feature of the meeting was that the women members brought their knitting (for the soldiers) and tried to show the boys how to knit.

The officers of the union again wish to warn union men not to be tricked by offers now being made by the Madison Democrat, a notorious non-union shop. Several union men have come to Madison during the past few weeks in answer to the advertisements of this sweatshop. On finding that this was a non-union office they left the city.

David Weiss.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

Labor day in Bloomington was the greatest ever held. Springfield and Decatur were represented by delegations of 1,000 and 700, respectively, the latter bringing Goodman's band as soul soothers. The parade covered two and one-half miles in length and reached an altitude of 1,000 feet in enthusiasm. Typographical Union No. 124 had a float trimmed with a case rack, a platen press and a stapling-machine. Cards advertising the allied label were distributed from this Ben Franklin tub, which only lacked one improvement—there were no springs on the wagon. Every time the wheels hit a bump the nicks were shaken from the pica quads.

Mabel Viola, the 15-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Clark, died September 1. The funeral was at Eureka, Ill., September 3. The sympathy of many friends is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Clark in their sorrow. Dave is an operator at the Bulletin.

The Pantagraph Printing and Stationery Company is going to install a monotype keyboard and caster this fall. J. T. Riggin, who has been with this firm several years, left for Philadelphia September 9, accompanied by his wife, for a ten-weeks' course in the monotype school.

Carl Guetschow, of the Pantagraph news chapel, returned September 6 from the west. After attending the convention Carl was at Yellowstone National Park five days, Salt Lake City, Estes Park, Colo., and Ralston, Coon Rapids and Jefferson, Iowa. Our delegate says the Union Printers Home is a grand institution and Colorado Springs is to be congratulated on the manner in which it handled the convention.

Walter Trowe, foreman of the Bulletin, wandered to the northern lakes late in the summer and broke all records in stringing the finny tribe. We are elated that some one can catch them, for on a trip to Kickapoo this summer the writer had out two lines and the bobbers rolled under and up so rapidly they resembled a twenty-reel thriller—and narry a fish was strung.

The printing of the Searchlight, the official labor paper of Bloomington, on the bid for the next six months' issues, was awarded to John Gummerman, publisher of the Bloomington Journal. The Searchlight has been placed on such a firm foundation that advertising will not be necessary to keep the paper prosperous. EUGENE ARNOLD.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

The September meeting of No. 305 was held Tuesday evening, September 11. One candidate was elected to membership and one proposition received, which will be acted upon at the October meeting.

A new weekly paper made its appearance on Saturday, September 8. It is called a Sunday paper, but is issued Saturday afternoons, no work being done on Sunday. The Newburgh American consists of sixteen pages. The issues was replete with news and interesting features. If it maintains the standard set by its initial issue it should be a success. William L. Berkowitz is editor and publisher. The American is issued from the office of the Mail Order News Corporation, of which Mr. Berkowitz is proprietor.

MILTON K. BARRUS.

PHŒNIX, ARIZ.

The past month was the quietest period of the summer season in Phœnix. Although no lower than during previous years, business usually declines when the thermometer goes up. However, the torrid spell, by all rights, is now due to break and a very busy fall and winter is predicted. Residents who have been in more congenial climes during the summer have about all returned, and, with the usual influx of tourists who come later to remain during the winter, everything and everybody takes on new life, including printers. Ben F. Wood, who with Mrs. Wood spent the past two months on the coast, has returned, and with additional information and new ideas will resume work as field man in the campaign to keep printing at home. The home spirit seems to apply in all respects among the printers. Whatever the cause, it is an undisputed fact that those who live here any length of time and then leave, invariably return. It must be that they also create a favorable impression elsewhere, because calls are received from all parts of the country for men. The latest was from Idaho.

W. P. Doheney, who resigned as editor of the Labor Journal to join the colors, went with the first contingent and is now at Camp Funston, Fort Riley, Kan. On his departure the Republican chapel, of which he formerly was a member, presented him with a beautiful wrist watch. Francis G. Bugere, stock man at the McNeil Printing Company, left with the second contingent and was also handsomely remembered by his fellow workers.

The fight on unfair theaters is beginning to show results. One manager has replaced a non-union operator with a union man, and the indications are that others are seeking the light.

One of our new members, Curt Miller, of the Tempe News, seems to be enjoying prosperity. Since installing a linotype he has built a beautiful home. W. W. Hinds, foreman of the Gazette, and G. E. Ferguson, of the Republican, have brought their families here from the coast. The boys all welcomed "Buck" Schlater back after a year's absence. Les Adams, of the Quality Press, has returned from an extended and most pleasant visit through the east, including the old home. He was accompanied home by a niece, who will spend the winter here. O. L. Hitchcock is located permanently with the Mesa Tribune and has been joined by his sister and mother. W. C. Lowry has joined his family in Texas. Walter Cook, of the Journal-Miner, at Prescott, has recovered from a siege of typhoid. Publisher Wren, of the Florence Blade-Tribune, suffered the loss of his plant by fire and is printing his paper here until a new outfit arrives. C. G. McQuesten and family and J. W. Sims and family were among the late campers who have returned. Arrivals not already mentioned are: H. G. Coates, Ray J. McDonald, W. J. Hanhart, G. A. Corbus. Departures: W. J. Hanhart, R. E. Parker, H. G. Coates, Ray J. McDonald, W. L. Cox. W. S. SWENSON.

SHARON, PA.

Fred C. McKnight, who for the past fourteen years had been employed at the Eagle Printing Company, resigned his position and has gone to Warren, Ohio, where he bought a printshop of his own. While the members of No. 351 are sorry to see him leave, all join in a hearty wish for his success. Emmett Whitehead, our vice-president, and who has been manipulating the keys at the Herald office, succeeds Mr. McKnight at the Eagle office.

Karl H. Baker, of the Herald job department, drew his card and departed for parts unknown.

No. 351 will be well represented at the war front if all pass the examination that are drafted. Oscar Romelfanger, of the Herald, and Victor Richards, of the Eagle, were two of the first to volunteer from Sharon. Four more are drafted, some of whom have not been called as yet.

The Telegraph and Herald forces have received substantial increases in wages, due to the high cost of living. They are now receiving several dollars above the scale.

Joe Steines, foreman of the Telegraph composing room, is hitting the "high spots" these days with a new Dodge.

While the printing business is slack here just now, a few more men could be used, but it seems impossible to get them.

Hardly any one would recognize the Farrell News under the new management, from the old sheet they used to put out. New type, machines, dry mat roller, saw and other machinery have been added, making it one of the neatest printed papers in our jurisdiction. Parry is to be congratulated on the able manner in which he handles the management end.

At the Oil City convention of the Western Pennsylvania Typographical Union Conference in July, Sharon was unanimously selected as the next convention city, which meets in January, 1918. A committee of five has been appointed to look after the convention details, as follows: Cloud C. Rutter, chairman; Harry Cross, Ernest Bohn, Bert Romelfanger and Harry Burkhart. They have already started in on their campaign to make this the largest and best attended conference yet held. Follow-up letters, folders, posters, etc., are being sent out to the different unions affiliated with the conference, and also to several unions that come under the jurisdiction of the conference, but for some reason have failed to affiliate. This convention will be an important one. Shortage of help, due to the war, is a serious question, and one that must be met by typographical unions, as it is through our ability to meet such crises as this that the success of the International Union depends largely, and it is only through co-operation it can be done. We want all unions in western Pennsylvania to take up the matter of sending delegates to the conference here and plan to be represented. The entertainment committee is busily working on novel and new entertainment for the delegates and visitors for Saturday night preceding the convention. The chairman will be pleased to hear of any suggestions that will help make the convention here a decided success.

Joseph Franek, jobman on the Farrell Sentinel, is canvassing for the office of school director. His chances seem bright. CLOUD C. RUTTER.

LEWISTON, ME.

At the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Veshon, of 365 Sabottom street, Lewiston, Me., on Wednesday, September 12, occurred the death of Emanuel J. Veshon. Mr. Veshon served his time as an apprentice at the Lewiston Daily Sun and joined No. 532 in January last. In April he was taken very ill and was operated on, but not having the strength failed until the end. He was held in high esteem by his fellow workmen and we have certainly lost a good union man. A. M. SHAW.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The committee forming the new job scale has had several meetings and will report soon. Prospects for an increase are good. Many job printers now receive over the present scale. Living conditions are such that a substantial increase is necessary.

The McWhirter & Ammons plant has been added to the union roll. Non-union houses, it is said, are having trouble in securing help.

Ford Allen, George Millar and Henry Fratcher were the delegates to the Missouri Federation of Labor at Jefferson City the week of September 18.

In the appointment of E. L. Traylor, president of No. 80, as secretary of the convention, President Scott not only honored Mr. Traylor, but this union as well. We were gratefully surprised in being thus recognized.

Many convention visitors and delegates stopped in Kansas City on their way home. Among them was Charlie Oliver, formerly of Kansas City, who was a delegate from Fort Worth. He made us all feel a little gloomy when he told of the $50 per week he was drawing from a Forth Worth newspaper.

The delegates to Colorado Springs reported at the last meeting. A suggestion was made in the report that an ex-delegate should always be included in the number sent, as he would be better able to get results. There was some difference of opinion on this question. Delegates to a printers' convention at least should be members active in the work of the organization, and, whether old or young men, would have some idea of the needs and desires of the union.

No. 80's members at the Home, John Coventry, William Nixon and W. J. Willard, were presented with $10 each by the delegates, a gift of this union. They were feeling fine, they said, and pleased with their treatment there.

Kansas City is having an epidemic of strikes. The packing house men were out a week and the plants are now union for the first time in a dozen years. The freight handlers are now out and the freight houses tied up. The patriotic dairy owners closed down their plants and delivered no milk for a week. The hospitals were greatly inconvenienced. F. L. STARKS.

WATERLOO, IOWA.

After a quiet summer business is picking up and all shops are busy and our membership has reached its high tide, some sixty being on the roster now. Several changes have occurred, namely: Frank W. Bishop, of the Courier, has gone to Kansas City to assist in brightening up the Star; Frank W. Richardson went to Minot, N. D., and from there to Fort Smith, Ark.; Art Ryan and Ed Mauman are in Superior, Wis. Ed Twais, of the Courier chapel, is on the sick list.

We are endeavoring to get some kind of an apprentice examination shaped up and would be pleased to get some information from various locals regarding the subject.

A number of our boys journeyed to Cedar Rapids, Sunday, September 9, and enjoyed that local's hospitality at its picnic. A ball game, which was the feature event of the day, was won by the Waterloo delegation, the score being 6 to 7 at the end of a nine-inning contest. Yes, we enjoyed the day and expect to go down again for different events, such as bowling, card playing, eating or drinking, and we also expect to have the boys in our city, but will try and keep them on the safe side of the creek.

Joe Rickert returned from the Colorado Springs convention and trip through the west. He brought back a bushel of cards from the various delegates and the boys enjoyed looking them over and getting acquainted again. ED WILLEY.

OMAHA, NEB.

The conditions of U. G. Graham and W. L. Rice are unchanged, there being no signs of improvement in either case.

Charles D. Deming, delegate to the Colorado Springs convention from Washington, D. C., stopped off in Omaha for a few days on his way home.

John Munro left on September 14 with the "Dandy Sixth" regiment for Camp Cody at Deming, N. M. "Johnnie" enlisted in June and is now Sergeant Munro.

At the regular August meeting a committee of five members of No. 190 was appointed to investigate the local coal situation in an effort to aid the administration in reducing coal prices to consumers here. R. E. Sperry, I. J. Copenharve, V. B. Kinney, John Polian and W. E. Silver were the men chosen for the task.

A. E. ("Gus") Grieb, who is employed on the Journal-Stockman, has been elected scout master of Troop 35, Omaha Boy Scouts of America.

W. D. Patterson, representing the International Workers' Defense League, spoke before the union at its regular August meeting in behalf of those in San Francisco who are charged with the dynamite outrage committed there during the preparedness parade. The union unanimously voted financial assistance.

W. H. Kellogg, John Polian and R. G. Hinman were elected delegates to the state federation of labor convention, which met in Lincoln September 12.

William H. Connors and wife have returned from Paul Smith's, N. Y., in the Adirondacks. ....Harry Atwood has recovered sufficiently from a broken ankle to allow his subbing in the "ad" alley of the Transcript....William Marr has returned from a week's vacation spent in New York....Edward A. WILLIAM H. CONNORS.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.

Our recording secretary, Andrew McBeath, is serving as one of the four-minute speakers at the picture shows.

The obligation was administered to Bernard Middlebrook at our last meeting.

We are in receipt of a card from W. H. von Tiercks, who was our delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, from Wyoming, where he seems to be recuperating or seeing other sights than those in Colorado.

On account of so many of our members of the various crafts being in other cities working on government cantonments, we were compelled to forego celebrating Labor day this year.

Gus Nelson was down from Waco recently on a visit to the home folks and friends before he leaves for a cantonment, where he will begin service for the government, having joined the cavalry in that city and has the title of sergeant. Gus has many friends in Temple besides the printers who wish him well. He reports that five members of the Waco local have joined the colors.

Through the kindness of Otto F. Thum, of Denver, we are in receipt of the Denver Labor Bulletin 1917 convention number, which is worthy of filing away for future reference, as it contains so much information pertaining to the great cause of labor. We notice that the printers are not slighted by any means, as it contains a write-up of the Home and the organization as well as the pictures of our officers. Thanks!

Let's all vote for the increase in the salaries of the president and secretary-treasurer. How many members of the International Typographical Union would object to these officers securing them an increase? Think it over, and apply the Golden Rule.

STUART SHAW.

EASTON, PA.

At the regular meeting in September we received one new member and suspended two, but still working hard to reach that 100-mark.

Business has been exceptionally good all summer and looks so to continue for some time.

No. 258 fell in line and did her "bit" for the government and purchased a $100 liberty bond.

Easton has lost three of her members through enlistments in the federal service. All members joining the colors will have their dues paid and their positions held for their return.

Now that cooler weather is coming, let us try and encourage those absent at our last meeting to take a more active part and put a little "pep" into our fall campaign, and encourage our officers by a large attendance.

At our next meeting we will be ready to elect delegates for the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union and hope the present delegates, Charles Reilly and George Abell, will have the honor to represent No. 258 again.

CHARLES R. HAGER.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

The Labor day parade was one of the best ever held here. There were more men in the line of march than ever before. Every organization was represented and all of them made a most excellent showing. The procession was headed by the Third Regiment band, city officials, fire department officials and equipment, police force and several hundred soldiers, who have been here for some time awaiting orders to go to Greenville, S. C. After the parade a large number went to Chilhowee park, where a splendid program and speeches were the order of the day. John T. O'Connor, a member of the machinists' union, delivered a splendid address on the "Aims and Objects of Organized Labor." Mr. O'Connor is a speaker of great ability, and his effort on this occasion was well received and heartily applauded.

During the past month the employes of the Knoxville Railway and Light Company, about 200 strong, organized a union, and their organization was promptly recognized by the officials of the company. All this happened without the stoppage of a car or the dismissal of a single man. The newly-formed union of street car men is hailed with delight and is to be congratulated upon its success.

At the last regular meeting of No. 111 the membership had the pleasure of shaking the hand and renewing their acquaintance with Hon. John P. Murphy, postmaster of the United States senate and an honorary member of our union. Mr. Murphy, in a few minutes' talk, told of the printing business in Knoxville before the days of the linotype. But there is one amusing story that he omitted and is known to only a few of the old-timers—myself and "Colonel" Collins. John P. was an apprentice in a small job office owned by W. J. Ramage. In ye olden days (you older ones will remember) printers' rollers were made from glue and molasses. The boss gave John a half-gallon bucket and told him to go and get it full of molasses, as the old rollers were badly worn and he desired to make new ones. John obeyed orders, as all apprentice boys should. After procuring the molasses, and while on his way back to the office he passed by a bakery and the fragrant odor of fresh bread caused John to stop and think. What did he do? He reached away down deep in his trousers pocket and fished out a nickel and went into the baker's shop and bought a loaf of bread. It will not take long for the reader to guess what became of the molasses that should have produced an excellent set of rollers.

E. A. Fortenberry died recently after a very brief illness. The sympathy of the members of No. 11 goes out to the widow and children and the aged mother of our deceased brother.

Edward M. Gillenwaters, a member of our union, was honored by Governor Thomas C. Rye in being made fire marshal for the state. The position carries a salary of $2,400 per year. Mr. Gillenwaters is being congratulated by his many friends.

The members of No. 111 contributed $150 to the Red Cross fund during Red Cross week. Besides this, a number of them invested in liberty bonds.

Only one member of No. 111 will go to the front for Uncle Sam. Paul Allen, of Morristown, but a member of this local, and who helped to quiet things on the Mexican border, is a member of the Third Tennessee and is now "doing his bit" at Greenville, S. C. DEADERICK L. MILLION.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

One of the greatest trade calamities that has ever occurred in the printing industry in Cleveland was the announcement on Thursday, August 30, that the following morning's issue of the Cleveland Leader would end the career of that paper, as the Cleveland Plain Dealer Publishing Company had purchased the circulation rights, good will, etc., of the Leader. Coming as it did, as suddenly as a thunderbolt from a clear sky, the news struck the members of the Leader-News chapel with considerable consternation, as the suspension of the publication meant a decrease in the force of the combination chapel to the extent of thirty-nine situations. The Leader was the oldest paper in the city, and was the haven of the ambitious sub looking for work, and its loss to the trade in Cleveland will be keenly felt by members of No. 53. The publication of the Sunday Leader will continue and will be handled by the force of the News.

Five more new members initiated at the last meeting.

What the I. T. U. Course has done for the membership of Cleveland Union is shown in the appointment of four more members to positions as instructors of printing in the public schools of Cleveland, making a total of eleven now teaching the principles of typography, all graduates of the supplemental course in printing conducted by the International Union. The new appointees are: Messrs. Clark Parker, Clarence Doubler, Charles Hyde and Frank Gillen.

When the country called for volunteers to enlist in the service for the war in Europe, twelve members of No. 53 enlisted in the United States marines and were sent to the training camp at Paris Island, S. C. At the last meeting of the union several of the soldier members were in attendance, having been granted a furlough previous to embarking for France, and it was with much pride and gratification to the older members of the union that the uniform of Uncle Sam was present among those at the meeting.

Jimmy James, who left here about a year ago to seek better health in California, returned to the city fully recovered from an ailment that had made it impossible for him to work at the trade. Jimmy's untiring efforts for the good and welfare of whatever union he was attached to have always stood forth as an example to the younger members, and his reception back in the fold of No. 53 was a welcome one.

Tom Brown, one of the oldest members of the local union, died at a sanatorium during the month. Mr. Brown was 61 years of age, and had been a member of the old Herald chapel, which has been out of existence for about twenty-five years. He has been suffering with a lingering sickness for over a year and his application to the Home had been favorably acted upon, but upon the advice of his physicians the long trip to Colorado was deferred on account of his weakened condition. Mr. Brown is survived by a widow and one son.

When it comes to advertising both the local union and the International Typographical Union there is never an opportunity let slip by Jimmy Hoban, our president, but the biggest bit of publicity that was ever brought to the attention of the readers of Cleveland was Jimmy's full-page article in the magazine section of the Sunday Leader, entitled "The Greatest Labor Organization in the World, the International Typographical Union." The article in itself was a literary gem, well constructed and carrying all the details of the workings of the International Typographical Union—Home, mortuary benefits, old age pensions, etc.—and was replete with art and layouts that gave it the appearance of an article that would hardly escape the notice of the most casual observer. This is the kind of advertising that helps materially to bring to the attention of the public just what the International Typographical Union is doing for its members, and tends to strengthen the harmonious relations we now enjoy with our employers and create a general good feeling for the printerman by the public at large. JOHNNY HOGAN.

NOTES FROM UNION PRINTERS HOME.

The proceedings of the sixty-third annual convention of the International Typographical Union will have become a part of ancient history before this letter reaches the readers of THE JOURNAL, therefore I conclude to say little about that interesting gathering, except in so far as it has special social relation to Home affairs. Many of the delegates and visitors had never seen this great institution before and had only a general idea of what it really was and what it stood for in the industrial world. To say that the magnificence, elaborateness and appointments of the Home caused astonishment would be putting it too mildly—they simply viewed it all with spasms of wonder and delight. By those who were dues-paying members of the International Typographical Union the beautiful place was referred to with feelings of pardonable pride as a monument to that fraternal spirit displayed and inculcated by labor unionism and organized effort, to which they had cheerfully contributed their pro rata.

Wednesday, August 15, was set apart by the convention as a day of celebration and silver jubilee, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the dedication ceremonies of the Home. The program included music by the famous Midland band, speeches by eminent gentlemen, among whom were Governor Gunter, of Colorado; Mayor Thomas, of Colorado Springs; Judge Lunt, T. W. McCullough, of the Omaha Bee, and President Scott; J. W. Hays acting as chairman and master of ceremonies. In the evening an elaborate barbecued dinner was served under two enormous tents erected for the occasion just south of the beautiful Home grounds, at which more than 2,500 feasted. The buildings and lawns and avenues were decorated with ropes of red, white and blue electric lights, and during the whole day and evening the entire place was thrown open for inspection by visitors. During the day a group photograph was taken on the grounds of assembled delegates, Home residents and many visitors, which was ordered by the convention to be reproduced in the September number of THE JOURNAL. The day was certainly one that will long be remembered by everybody who participated in its exercises.

Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Spencer, of New Bedford, Mass., were guests for supper at the Home August 29. They motored all the way from Massachusetts to the Pikes Peak region in a Ford, without meeting with any accident during the entire journey, camping out all the way. Mr. Spencer is a charter member of New Bedford Union No. 276.

J. W. Hanson, Pueblo Union No. 175, received a number of substantial greetings from Texas delegates to the sixty-third annual convention who were old friends of his.

Kansas City Typographical Union remembered its resident members of the Home handsomely during convention week. It sent each of them, through one of its delegates, a new, crisp, ten-dollar note, to buy "bevo" with—or anything else they might desire.

W. J. ("Mickey") Weand, resident from Reading (Pa.) Union No. 86, and a former member of the Hampden fire department of that city, received, through a delegate to the recent convention, a substantial contribution from the two organizations, which made him almost see visions through his glass eye.

Pittsburgh, St. Louis and a number of other unions, through the courtesy of their delegates, handsomely remembered their resident members at the Home.

Henry von Breamer, of Stockholm, Sweden, registered as a visitor at the Home August 25.

Mrs. Elizabeth H. Keenan, of New York city, member of typographical union which is known as "Big Six," and wife of Daniel F. Keenan, Home resident from the same union, after spending a three-weeks' vacation in the Pikes Peak region, returned to the east, leaving here August 25. This was Mrs. Keenan's first visit to Colorado, and to say that she just enjoyed herself would be stating a fact altogether too mildly—one would need to add a number of very strong qualifying adjectives to make the statement anywhere near correct. She said she hoped to live long enough to make the pilgrimage out here again on the golden jubilee anniversary of the Home.

William W. Nelson, director of the Midland band, famous for discoursing inspiring music in this region every summer, accompanied by his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Pierr Pierrier, the two latter from Brussels, Belgium, were visitors at the Home the latter part of August, guests of Superintendent and Mrs. Daley.

Miss Margaret Gowdy, age 42 years, from Fort Worth (Texas) Union No. 198, died at St. Francis Hospital August 29. She was on her way to the Home, but her admission papers had not yet been received from headquarters, and being in an advanced stage of tuberculosis, and, at the request of her sister, who accompanied her here, she was taken to the St. Francis. Impressive funeral services were held in the chapel of the Farley undertaking establishment under the direction of the local lodge of Rebekah, of which order the lady was an honored member, the Rev. H. Martin, of Sedalia, Mo., officiating. The remains were interred in the Odd Fellows division of Greenwood cemetery.

Since the publication of my last letter in THE JOURNAL the Home library has received a valuable addition in the donation by Miss Julia M. Burke, Columbia Union No. 101, of her "Scrap Book," with the following greeting preceding its title page:

Hearty Greeting to All Dear Residents of Our Beloved Home:

To you I dedicate my "Scrap Book," with the sincere wish that all who turn its precious pages may enjoy the same interest and pleasure enjoyed by its compiler in its production.

Sincerely,

JULIA M. BURKE.

Columbia Union No. 101 (formerly of St. Louis No. 8), Washington, D. C., August 8, 1917.

Miss Burke, an employe of the government printing office for the last decade or more, has devoted a number of years in compiling this work, which consists of more than 400 large quarto pages and which she denominates "My Scrap Book." It is replete with photographs and photo engravings of persons and things, artistically arranged, and clippings from publications of special interest to the craft since the latter years of the nineteenth century. It also contains a great many historical facts concerning Columbia Typographical Union and the government printing office. On behalf of the residents of the Union Printers Home I hereby tender Miss Burke our most profound and sincere thanks.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays, who has been in ill health for several months, remained over in Colorado Springs after the late convention, hoping that the climate and altitude here would put him on his feet again.

J. A. McDonald, a resident here from Omaha Union No. 190, is feeling rather proud of the fact that his son, who is not yet 18 years of age, and has been in the navy only five months, has been selected as one of four wireless operators on board the U. S. S. Kronprinzzen Cecelie, which vessel was seized at the outbreak of war with Germany and has been remodeled into a troop transport. The steamer is expected to leave shortly with soldiers for "somewhere in France."

W. A. Musser, resident from Cincinnati Union No. 3, who has been confined in the hospital for seven weeks with one of his pedal extremities out of commission, is again back in his old quarters in the main building practicing the art of navigation with the aid of a pair of crutches.

Adolph E. Ott, member of Denver Union No. 49, and foreman of the Labor Bulletin, visited the Home the fore part of September. He was accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Mrs. J. C. Daley, matron of the Home, is away on her annual month's vacation. She will spend most of the time visiting relatives and friends in Syracuse, N. Y.

Since the close of convention week, August 19, up to September 4, there were 2,025 visitors registered at the Home. Included in this number the following persons registered as union printers besides those already mentioned in this letter: H. A. Breusing and C. S. O'Bryan, Fresno Union No.

Oscar Langford, an old-time resident of the Home from St. Louis No. 8, recently received a copy of the Clinton (Iowa) Daily Herald, which made him quite reminiscent. He was an apprentice in the Herald office about 1854, when it was a small weekly published by Charles E. Leonard, and when the city had less than 1,000 inhabitants. Mr. Leonard, the founder and publisher of the paper, afterward became the father of Lillian Russell, of operatic and matrimonial fame, but now retired from the stage. Many years later Mr. Leonard was connected with the printing firm of Knight & Leonard, of Chicago, and died several years ago. Clinton has now about 25,000 population and has two or three daily papers and is the home of Typographical Union No. 334. The city was platted by early settlers while Mr. Langford worked at the trade at Lyons, over sixty-five years ago. Lyons is now a part of Clinton. Mr. Langford says while serving his apprenticeship in Clinton he boarded with the Leonard family, and they fed him on mush and milk for supper at 9 P. M.

Harry S. Smith, a former resident of the Home, but now a business man of Colorado Springs, came around Thursday afternoon, September 13, with his automobile and took three of his old resident friends, Barnett Greenberg, Tom Hartman and John Taylor, out joy riding. They were gone three hours and covered fifty miles, visiting the Myron Stratton home, the Woodmen sanatorium and Glen Eyrie, returning by way of the Garden of the Gods. The "old boys" were more than delighted with their outing and ardently wished there were more men in this vale of tears just like Harry Smith.

Harvesting the bean crop on the Home ranch commenced September 13. Corn, oats and garden truck will probably all be gathered before the month is over. B. F. SMYTHE.

ELY, NEV.

Last and least in numbers, but with their full membership in line, on Labor day the printers turned out, nine strong, being 100 per cent of the membership of Ely Union No. 506 of the International Typographical Union. Their mascot was "Sonny" Fay, son of N. W. Fay, of the White Pine News. Mounted on his bicycle and dressed in a scarlet suit, with horns and a tail, "Sonny" made a captivating little "devil." H. C. REILLY.

HALIFAX, N. S.

A start has been made to secure funds for the purpose of building a labor temple. If the committee's efforts are to be crowned with success, there must be encouragement and support from every union man in Halifax. George Harris, secretary-treasurer of No. 130, is chairman of the present committee. The aim is to enlarge the committee so that every union will be represented.

There was no Labor day parade this year. The usual field sports were held at the exhibition grounds. The printing committee had charge of the twenty-eight-page program and a substantial sum was added to the treasury of the trades council.

Three delegates represented Halifax at the convention of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress—President Ralph Eisnor, of the Halifax Trades and Labor Council; President Michael Coolen and Vice-President Michael Murphy, of the longshoremen.

The September meeting of No. 130 brought out a large attendance of members. The reports from the various chapels on the proposed new scale for 1918 showed that while some of the members thought there would be a larger increase the majority decided to abide by the increase proposed at the August meeting. All the members agreed that there was a great need for a substantial increase in the scale to meet the increased cost of living, and the committee, composed of the executive and chairmen of chapels, was instructed to negotiate the new scale on the basis laid down at the August meeting.

Business continues to hold good in both job and newspaper shops. One job hand is reported laid off, while one newspaper man, "Steve" Kennedy, is on the sick list. "Steve" has been in the hospital, his condition at one time being very serious. He is not yet out of danger, but hopes are expressed that he may pull through.

The married and single men of the Herald and Mail played a baseball match, the benedicts putting over a win. Score, 28 to 18. A picked team from the same chapels challenged the Chronicle and Echo.

The marriage is announced of Eugene T. Cote, ex-secretary of No. 130, and Miss Shrum, of Dartmouth, which took place September 25.

Messrs. Simpson and Zinn, two apprentice members of the Chronicle chapel, were received into full membership at the September meeting. Two more are expected at the October meeting.

J. E. SCHAFFER,

BEAUMONT, TEXAS.

Perhaps no man who ever lived in Beaumont has left a greater impress upon the community and its varied activities than Thomas A. Lamb, who died Wednesday, August 29, 1917. Quiet, unassuming, he knew many men, and they all liked him. Coming to Beaumont from India when the present city was but a sawmill camp, Tom Lamb, though doubtless disappointed, decided to make his home here. He has been called "the father of the Enterprise," and this expression may well be modified to read "father of the printing industry in Jefferson county." His versatility and adaptability was shown in the fact that after engaging in the newspaper business he mastered the printer's art; his fairness is illustrated by the long record of harmonious relations with his employes and his action in assisting in the organization of a typographical union, whose members he employed as long as he was actively interested in the business. The oldest printer in Beaumont, he carried a union card to the day of his death, and his name is among the first on the charter of the local organization. Mr. Lamb had only left the trade about a year. Only a few printers ever visited Beaumont who did not meet the deceased and always had a compliment to pass on the old gentleman. He will be remembered by many for a long time to come.

Work has been good the past several months.

No. 339 had the best representation in the Labor day parade in many years past. C. A. CULMORE.

LONDON, ONT.

The regular meeting for September was held a week later than the usual date, on account of the holiday, with an average attendance. Out of three candidates reported from committee but one was favorably received, the others being held in abeyance for further developments. Two members-elect were obligated. There were the usual questions and counter-questions upon insignificant matters which, aside from the time consumed in needless debate, are of very little moment, and tend rather to retard than to advance the welfare of the organization.

In this connection we are of the opinion that the procedure of the local administration in handling the emergency cases which now and again arise, owing to the situation in which No. 133 is placed as regards to furnishing help, etc., and which to some of the membership seems so flagrantly "unrighteous," is in accord with the fundamental principles of International Typographical Union law. And, furthermore, the local officers are reasonably confident that their conduct would receive the endorsement of the higher authority. The seat of the trouble apparently lies in the indifference of this quota of the membership to co-operation with the administration, which they, without solicitation or coercion, have selected to transact their affairs of state. And we are firmly convinced that a closer application to the International Typographical Union and local laws, especially the former, would serve to broaden their views, and the little misunderstandings and bitterness at times engendered would soon be "beating" it down the trail with the rest of the obnoxious customs and so-called laws from which we have unshackeled ourselves.

The executive committee meets on the Saturday immediately preceding the regular union meeting, rain or shine, at 4 o'clock. The secretaries will be cordially welcomed.

Percy Read was unanimously re-elected chairman of the Free Press night chapel at its recent annual meeting. Mr. Read has handled the situation there in the past with the skill and judgment of a veteran.

H. B. Archer, of the Advertiser chapel, is contemplating a trip to California in the near future.

The Free Press Company, following the lead of the Advertiser, has boosted the wages of its employes, the increase practically putting the after-the-war agreement in force.

The various chapels are looking forward to the call to arms, and speculation is rife as to who will be the favored ones. It has been remarked that if they call any more men from the Free Press that institution will be compelled to get its paper out with typewriters.

Leslie Conlon, of the Times-Advertiser chapel, Trenton, N. J., accompanied by his wife and son, were the guests of the president of No. 133 for ten days.

Canadian unions are elated at the selection of Scranton for the next International Typographical Union convention, and from present indications Canada will be there in force.

Business conditions excellent, with the high cost of living out to set a record. A. H. WHEATLEY.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Congratulations to Scranton, 1918. Albany, 1919.

The school commissioners of Baltimore will shortly institute a new vocational school in the eastern section of the city, and will provide a course in the art of printing. A. G. Fischer is the instructor in printing in the school already established.

The Baltimore American celebrated its one-hundred-and-forty-fourth anniversary on August 20. One of the first advertisers in this paper was George Washington.

"Bill" Vernon, who has been acting recording secretary of the union, knows how to hold down his job, and makes an excellent secretary.

The Baltimore City Printing and Binding Company has just printed and delivered the new Baltimore city directory to the R. L. Polk Company. It has many new features and a great deal of statistical information concerning the city. It is larger than the last directory published.

Henry J. Hardy, organizer in Baltimore for the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, president of Web Pressmen No. 31 and secretary-treasurer of the local allied printing trades council, is one of the fortunate men of Baltimore who has gone to the second officers' training camp at Fort Meyer, Va. Mr. Hardy has accomplished more in Baltimore for his organization than any man ever sent here. There is not a pressman or a feeder that is looking for a position, something that has never occurred in this territory before. While the government is the gainer in the transaction, the pressmen are the losers, and it is an assured fact that the government will get just exactly what it should have—an expert organizer and a man who can command the respect of the men with whom he will be associated during the war. Mr. Hardy has the best wishes of his host of friends in Baltimore.

The Baltimore City Printing and Binding Company is profiting by the war in the fact that they are now doing some printing that formerly was printed in Germany. They are now working on a German Bible—the "Ordo St. Paul"—that was formerly printed in Berlin. The Bible to an ordinary American looks like a lot of "pi" lines that an operator on a linotype machine has run through his magazine. The books contain about two hundred pages 2 x 6 inches.

Another new printing office has started business in this city. The Garrison Printing Company has been organized and will be controlled by Adam Dehring. Frank R. Booker, a member of No. 12, has charge of the plant, whose location is at 1510 West Baltimore street. The label has been applied for.

Henry Clay Evans, an old Baltimore printer and who was an employe of the government printing office at Washington for twenty-five years, died at his home in Baltimore on the morning of August 29. Mr. Evans had been ill with heart trouble since last March. He retired from the printing business about ten years ago. He was a member of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, of Washington, D. C., and was on the pension list of that union. Burial was in Greenmount cemetery August 31.

Abraham Levine and J. Frejka, members of No. 12, have received notice that they have been drafted into the national army. C. H. Schultz and S. Blume, jr., have received notice that they have been exempted. G. Burrier and R. Bushman, apprentices, have enlisted.

The J. H. Furst Printing and Publishing Company has just finished printing "The Nature and History of the Bible," by Monsignor Fletcher. The volume contains only 200 pages and will be a big help to students of Holy Scripture. Being printed by the Furst Company insures a neatly printed and bound book.

Your correspondent has been shown the first stereotypers' mat ever made in Baltimore. The mat is the property of Stereotypers' Union No. 10 and is in the possession of Secretary Frank Appold. It was made for the Baltimore Sun and is dated November 25, 1867. It is framed and is in excellent condition.

The Baltimore Evening News and twenty-five county papers of Maryland will print "A Maryland Industrial Progress Number" early in October. The story of industrial Maryland—a record of what is being done to place the state and its principal city further to the front—will be told in very excellent articles and illustrated by tables, maps and photographs.

Parker Wampler, of the Evening Star, has been elected chairman of the American-Star chapel. The election was held on September 11. Mr. Wampler should make an excellent chairman, as he is a most affable gentleman and is held in very high esteem by all who know him. Mr. Wampler is an active member of the Ben Franklin Relief Association, which is composed exclusively of members of No. 12.

Franklin Miller is a new addition to the proofroom of the Baltimore Sun.

"Ted" Shilling, of the Washington Star, attended the races at Havre de Grace.

Well, "Al" Rutherford went to the convention, did his duty as a delegate, traveled over 4,300 miles in his Briscoe motor car, used nine tires, three springs, saw a good lot of the western country and came home singing the praises of the greatest international body of men on the American continent. "Al" says that President Scott is growing stronger every year he remains president of the International Typographical Union.

Who ever heard of an editor having $65? Well, it's a fact. Clark S. Hobbs, who is the editor of the Municipal Journal, had his pocket picked at the city hall on September 4 of that amount. Mr. Hobbs reported his loss to the police.

Capt. Charles K. Duce, who retired from the Fourth regiment a short time ago, has succeeded Lieut. M. S. Atkinson, jr., as commander of the city force, guarding the municipal waterworks. Captain Duce, who is a member of the composingroom force of the News, was for years a line officer of the Fourth Maryland regiment, and saw service on the Mexican border. Captain Duce is the twenty-first man of the News Publishing Company to enter active service in the war.

Allan Eney, Howard S. Burton, Walter P. Schmick, Dan Kipp and Clarence Reinhard, of the composing room of the Evening Sun, were delegated by the management of that paper to help carry the big flag in the parade to the drafted men on September 5.

"Bill" Johnson, foreman of the Evening News, came very near being arrested as a slacker. "Bill" has one son in the service of Uncle Sam, and the youngest, who is about 15 years old, wants to join badly. He asked "Bill" to let him enlist, but "Bill" flatly refused, whereupon the youngster told his father he was going to have him arrested as a "slacker." WALTER H. MULES.

JACKSON, MISS.

The September meeting of No. 363 was not so well attended as formerly, only nine out of twenty-one being present. The secretary made some remarks about the small attendance, and it is hoped that cooler weather will bring out a full attendance. We still have the rebate system, which always adds to the treasury of the local, for those who do not come must pay "four bits."

The president of our union, Lloyd J. Clontz, resigned at the last meeting to go to Hattiesburg, Miss., and work on a new morning paper, gotten out in the office of the Evening News and with the same machines, but under different management and owners. Mr. Clontz is one of our "locked out" members. Cecil R. Russell was elected president in his stead. Mr. Russell is one of our younger members, sometimes acting foreman at the Tucker Printing House. Success to Mr. Clontz in his new field of service.

Leon Orman has been working at Sumner, Miss., but has returned....Jack Donahoe, another "locked out" member, is now located at Vicksburg, doing nicely....Ruby Taylor has joined the hospital corps, he being the second journeyman to join; also one two-thirder, Jack Kramer.

Several weeks ago the street car employes at Hattiesburg concluded to strike for 25 cents an hour, which they did, in the morning, and after dinner they were told to go to work at that figure. A week went by and the Vicksburg men did the same thing, with the same result. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

W. E. Liles was endorsed for organizer of the A. F. of L. by the central labor council, and later appointed to that position. He is engaged in organizing several new unions in this city, with good prospects. FRANKLIN HEIMBACH.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

A heavy downpour of rain interfered with the Labor day exercises. The marchers had covered the greater part of their route when they were forced to seek shelter. In the afternoon the skies cleared sufficiently to allow some of the racing and athletic events at the fair ground. While the parade was not so imposing, numerically considered, as in former years, the weather alone was responsible. The printers again enjoyed the privilege of following their own band, which many proclaimed the best musical organization in the line.

Vern F. Meredith was admitted to the Home on August 28. Mr. Meredith spent several days with his family and friends before going to Colorado Springs. He was apparently much improved and it is believed that a few months at the Home will fully restore him to health.

R. L. Albin suffered a nervous breakdown last month, and on August 20 entered the state hospital at Clarinda for treatment. It is reported that he is rapidly recovering.

J. T. Cassel, of the firm of Richards & Cassel, job printers, died on August 22. It is expected that the office will be offered for sale.

C. V. Davidson, of the News chapel, has met with a bereavement in the loss of his wife, who passed away on August 30. Besides her husband, she left two small children.

The past few weeks have brought many changes in the Des Moines offices. D. D. Keltner has left the Capital, going to Ottumwa; George A. Rigger, for the past six months with the Federal Company, has gone to Grinnell; W. C. West, from the Register to the News; R. G. Barnes, from the News to the Register; B. L. Clark, from the Tribune to the Capital; Henry Wonderlin, News machinist, has left that office and is succeeded by F. J. Dowd, of Omaha; D. R. Rierson has gone from O'Donnell's to the Homestead.

John A. Donly, of the Register chapel, is visiting his mother and other relatives in San Diego, Cal.

H. G. Armstrong, a former member here, but now of Omaha, made a short visit to friends in Des Moines in September.

Will M. McNair has made application for admission to the Home. Pending action by the committee he is being treated at the county tubercular camp.

Walter M. Evans, who had been with a chautauqua musical organization during the summer months, is again a member of the News chapel.

Delegates and visitors to the convention from this city bring back many pleasant memories of Colorado Springs, the Home, Denver, the entertainment in both cities, and the people they met.

Herman Tiedjens, now of Kansas City, but some years ago an esteemed member and president of No. 118, spent a week with friends in Des Moines in September.

C. T. Kennedy passed away on September 15, after an illness of five months. Mr. Kennedy became a member of Des Moines Union July 5, 1891, and except for one month in 1902 had been a continuous member for more than twenty-six years. He is survived by his wife and stepson. The funeral was held on Sunday, September 16, and the body was taken to his old home at Audubon, Iowa. Mr. Kennedy was 52 years of age.

TACOMA, WASH.

No. 170 has moved its business office from the Wright block to the second floor of the new Feist & Bachrach building on Thirteenth and Broadway. Besides the office, the union members have access to a large hall as a gathering place when not working and council chambers are provided for the meetings of the executive board. In this building is also housed the central labor council and many other labor unions, making it a real labor temple.

A joint picnic was given at Redondo Beach on Sunday, August 19, by the allied printing trades councils of Tacoma and Seattle. The attendance from each city was in the neighborhood of 200, some going by steamer and others in automobiles. After the "big eats" the crowd found amusement in boating, bathing and dancing.

Delegate Haines made a short side trip to Los Angeles and San Francisco after leaving the convention and was accompanied home by his wife, who had been visiting in Honolulu for some time past. Charles Perry Taylor arrived home soon after the convention, owing to pressing organization work.

With the idea of furthering the closer affiliation movement of the allied branches of the printing trades to the extent of adopting joint contracts and a standard scale of wages and hours among printers of the northwest, including Washington, Oregon, British Columbia and the northern part of Idaho, a meeting was held in Tacoma on Sunday, September 9, with nineteen representatives present. The members of the conference can see great good to be derived from this movement. Work will continue along this line for the next year and another meeting will be called the second Sunday of June, 1918, in Tacoma. Theodore Dietrich, of Portland, was elected president, and Frank McCaffery, of Seattle, was elected secretary of the conference for the ensuing year.

In observance of Labor day, Tacoma's labor unions turned out en masse, giving a demonstration of the astounding growth of organized labor in Tacoma in the past year. The parade given last year was considered an exceptionally large one, but that given this year, the largest in the history of the city, clearly shows that organized labor in Tacoma has taken a new lease of life and is forging ahead at a rate that can only be conceived on occasions of this nature. Although many were unable to get away from their work and participate in the monster parade, the presence of members of not less than ten new organizations swelled the ranks to a marked degree. Many miners from Wilkeson, Burnett, Carbonado and Fairfax came by special trains to join in the parade and the sports given at Wright park in the afternoon. An effort was made to secure permission for the appearance of a number of union men in the parade in uniform, now enlisted in Uncle Sam's new army and stationed at Camp Lewis, Tacoma, but due to the absence of the commanding officer this was unsuccessful. The first prize awarded for the oldest paid-up card was captured by George R. Moore, a member of Tacoma Typographical Union, who holds a record of forty-six years' continuous membership. The second prize went to a union cigar maker, as also did the third, while the fourth went to A. T. Armstrong, also a member of Tacoma Typographical Union. The address given by E. T. Kingsley, of Vancouver, B. C., was an interesting feature of the day's entertainment, which was brought to a close by a grand ball in the evening at Tahoma hall.

H. C. Waller, well known on the Pacific coast and for some time a member of No. 170, passed away on August 28 at Portland, Ore. Mr. Waller was both a job and newspaper printer, and while a member of No. 170 was employed on the Tribune.

While spending his vacation on the beach at Seaside, Ore., Otto Perlt, of the Ledger chapel, made himself the main attraction for one day at least. Taking advantage of the bathing facilities, which are more numerous than those on Commencement bay, he found himself carried out beyond the breakers and unable to swim back. After several attempts to negotiate the beach, which proved futile, Perlt's only means of reaching shore was with the turning of the tide. The fact that time and tide wait for no man and that the time for the turning of the tide came while Otto was doing all the waiting will never be regretted by him. After reaching shore safely and being cared for, Otto was interviewed by a beautiful girl reporter, who was enjoying a vacation at the beach, and convinced that a thrilling story could be written of his rescue if the aeroplane, then stationed at the beach, was allowed to play a prominent part, regardless of the fact that the operator of the plane was forced to go up the beach a mile or so to get the proper start before attempting the flight out over the water with a life preserver. By the time the start was made the drowning man was washed ashore. Assuring Otto of a real story, his printer friends were truly thrilled next morning upon reading the account, bearing a two-column head, of the thrilling rescue by the aeroplane. The girl reporter played her part well, but it appears that one of the kaiser's submarines should have had a prominent part in this rescue.

Showing their interest in the closer affiliation movement, several stereotypers and pressmen made their presence known at the last meeting.

The Tribune is now employing a union pressman on its job press and has secured the use of the label for its commercial printing.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. James Derby passed away after a short illness.

Preferring day work to that of night, William McHugh has forfeited a situation on the Ledger and is now subbing on the Tribune, having received a "stretch" from A. Leduc, who is helping to solve the transportation problem between Camp Lewis, Uncle Sam's new army post, and Tacoma.

R. H. Piety, formerly of the Tribune chapel, but now on the sales force of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, has found a promising field in Tacoma, and says there is plenty of business if a man will go out after it. After covering the city, as is necessary in his line of work, he feels that Tacoma has a great future, and Mr. Piety intends to be here and profit thereby, having recently purchased a fine new home in the north end.

James Haines is taking a long-planned vacation in sunny California.

O. C. Davis has returned from a five-weeks' fishing trip in Olympics and various other points in the state and reports having had a splendid time.

Wesley Ducommun, apprentice on the Times, waited many weeks for robbers to visit the Ducommun store, but not in vain. When they came "Wes" did not hesitate to give battle, capturing one and shooting the other in the shoulder, who escaped, but was later taken by the police.

C. C. Fisk, of San Francisco, has deposited his card with No. 170 and accepted a position as machinist on the Ledger.

Cards received: Frank L. Miller, Sherwood Blackburn, R. W. McMillan. Cards drawn: C. J. Stewart, R. D. Evans, G. H. Godfrey.

HAMILTON, ONT.

The powers that be
Make this decree:
Thou shalt not gamble nor drink booze,
And he who does
May rue, becuz,
His blooming, blasted job he'll lose.

An edict to this effect was posted in the Spectator newsroom some time ago, but, pshaw! the warning was not treated with that seriousness which the circumstances demanded. No doubt the one responsible for the notice knew that, with the pinch occasioned by the high cost of living, no printer could afford to take a chance on losing any of his meager wages, and, so far as liquor is concerned, it is shattering to smithereens the Ontario temperance act to drink the cursed stuff outside the family den. Not only is it a flagrant violation of the law to take liquor into a printshop, but it is a very dangerous proceeding. Amid such dismal, nerve-racking surroundings, away from the eagle eye, the staying hand and fostering care of a gentlemanly wine clerk, what is to prevent one with a plentiful supply drinking himself to death? Yea, verily, it was timely and kindly advice, but in a few instances it went unheeded, and those who continued to sin were served with a screed resembling Paul's espistle to the Corinthians, in which they were told of the things they had done which they ought not to have done, and the things they left undone which they should have done, and winding up with the rather impressive words, "Your services are no longer required." But after the judgment came the revised reckoning and some of the outcasts were restored to the fold. There are still, however, one or two of the "unwashed lambs" outside the portals, though it is not recorded that their bleating has been of a nature to attract the attention of the multitude.

The scale under which the job printers in this city are now working expires at the end of this year, and at the September meeting of No. 129 the following members were selected to open negotiations for a new scale with the master printers' guild: Hal Goddard, E. E. Reynolds and Charles Scott. In addition to a substantial increase in wages, it is hinted that the jobmen may endeavor to have a rearrangement of their working hours, at least in the spring and summer, so that they might have an extra hour of daylight to devote to gardening, beating carpets and other delicate exercises.

By the way, I haven't heard of any of the Hamilton printers who were planting broad acres of potatoes and spinning pretty yarns about their bounteous crops applying for a huckster's license in order to get rid of their surplus stock.

After thirty years of faithful service in the Times newsroom, Archie Martin has severed his connection with that newspaper to assume the duties of permanent secretary of the A. O. F., with headquarters in Toronto. Mr. Martin merits the honor conferred upon him by the High Court of Foresters, and no doubt will fill the office with credit to himself and the order.

Another printer's keenness and intelligence have been recognized in the appointment of George H. Roberts to the portfolio of minister of labor of Great Britain. During a visit to this city some years ago Mr. Roberts was banqueted by the members of No. 129, and his speeches and influence at that time had much to do with the re-election by an enhanced majority of Hamilton's labor member in the Ontario legislature, Allan Studholme.

Robert Boswell, a member of No. 129, has had three fingers amputated as a result of having his left hand crushed in a punching machine at the works of the Canadian Cartridge Company. During the first year and a half of the war things were rather slack in the printing business and the unfortunate young man made big money working on munitions. A year ago he returned to the trade and worked in the Spectator job department and latterly for Moore Bros. Several weeks ago, owing to a slump in business, the latter firm found it necessary to lay Boswell off, with the result that he returned to the manufacture of shells. He was drawing more than twice the wages he would at the printing trade when he met with the accident.

The Spectator has had five new model 18 linotype machines installed to replace some of the old stagers which have been bringing gray hairs to the heads of the operators and causing the machinist sleepless nights. Improvements are also being made to the model 5 machines in the battery, these including water attachments to all metal pots.

Richard J. Murray, heavyweight operator of the Times, has returned to the city after hitting the high spots, bumping the low ones and taking a few intermediate jobs in Chicago for a couple of weeks. "Dick" was so busy during his sojourn in the Windy City that he could not find time to scrape up an acquaintance with any of the representatives of the art preservative.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

The return of cold weather is causing those of our craft fortunate enough to be the possessors of country residences to remove their belongings closer to the scene of their labors and to grapple with the serious problem of fuel supply. They will all shortly be settled down to the winter grind and the limitations of the food controller.

J. H. Wilson, for some time in the book and job office of J. & A. McMillan, has gone to Woodstock to assume the foremanship of the Carleton Sentinel, a weekly paper of long standing, in a town of about 5,000 population.

Charles Britton, an operator on the Evening Times at the time of the strike on the Telegraph and Times some years ago, and since then on the Montreal Star, has been visiting his old home here and renewing acquaintances with his fellow-craftsmen in "the city by the sea."

Fred J. Byfield, who has kept the Standard's machine battery in working order for some years, has severed his connection with that paper and returned to his former employ as a machinist with

E. S. Stephenson & Co. Thomas Lougan, the machinist who kept the wheels turning on the old Sun and Star during the latter days of their existence, has taken over the Standard job and the boys are all glad to see him back at the old trick.

Frank Magee, one of the operators on the Times, gathered up enough shekels to take him to Toronto, where he took in the big exhibition, and has returned laden with stories of the wonders of the Queen City.

Another of St. John's printers has made the supreme sacrifice in the great world war. This time it is Henry Bernard Ferris, who, with William Sweeney, conducted a job plant on Main street, in the northern part of the city. He was only 26 years of age, but in a man's game he was a veteran.

In appointing a commission to readjust the taxation scheme in the city, labor's interests were recognized by the city commissioners in the appointment of George H. Maxwell, a member of No. 85, on the board. Mr. Maxwell has views and is not adverse to expressing them, so his work on the commission is expected to result favorably for the working man.

Labor day has come and gone. Owing to war conditions, there was no elaborate display or procession, but, instead, labor joined with the returned soldiers and held a very successful week's fair in St. Andrew's rink. The financial result has not yet been made known, but the net proceeds will go toward the building of a permanent home for the Great War Veterans' Association.

Barnes & Co. are about to make some further improvements and additions to the pressroom facilities of their book and job office, and among these will be automatic feeders for the cylinder and job presses.

Business in our line, while not actually booming, is good, about all available men being employed.

The selective conscription act, having been passed by parliament at Ottawa, some of the boys liable under the first draft are beginning to square their shoulders and wonder how they will look in a khaki suit. The craft here has contributed fairly well for the size of the city, but the coming months will see a further raid on the ranks of the printers and pressmen. A. D. COLWELL.

SPOKANE, WASH.

Nature surely performed one of its greatest works when it created this, the most northwesterly state of the union. It is a country of homes, fruits and flowers, where vegetation thrives with riotous luxuriance; a land overflowing with milk and honey, where azure sky, mountain stream and shady lake make it the tourist's paradise.

The state of Washington, comprising some 69,000 square miles, supports a population of only 1,500,000, while England and Wales, which cover a slightly less area, sustain 36,000,000 people. Hence it is that the eyes of the country, as well as those of foreign lands, are turned toward Washington, which is blessed with greater resources than is any other state in the union, and thus is able to contribute a larger portion of its abundance to support the world's war for liberty and freedom.

Great cities are not destined to be built on every river bank, in every valley, or on every mountain side. There are hidden within these surroundings forces far more powerful than any produced by human invention which are the determining factors. Spokane is preordained to become a large, powerful city by reason of its geographical location. It is the center of a vast empire of unlimited resources, equal in extent to the whole of New England or the British Isles. But great as the state and city is, their growth and prosperity rests upon the solid rock of labor—the producer of all wealth; the mainspring of industrial and commercial life; the hope of a nation and the real wealth of a republic. The prosperity of labor is the morning star that guides the commercial and industrial mariner through the seas of success and happiness, whose latitude is centered in the land of hope and in the human heart. But all is not joy or easy sailing with the toilers of our state or of the great northwest.

A few Sundays ago the headquarters of the I. W. W. organization was raided by soldiers, property confiscated, personal and otherwise, twenty-six men arrested and imprisoned, and the hall placed under military control. Where the men responsible for this action got their authority no one seems to know definitely. The central labor council here condemned this unwarranted action and passed resolutions censuring those engaged in it.

The employers' association here has been conducting a campaign for the enactment of the most radical anti-labor ordinances ever proposed in this country. The daily newspapers were enlisted and every act of the leaders of the I. W. W. was magnified to such an extent that the public mind was inflamed to a dangerous extent. The real purpose was shown in the sending to the city commissioners for passage the anti-labor ordinance, which would have tied labor hand and foot in any industrial controversy. The employers endeavored to prevent strikes and peaceful picketing, to deny free speech and assemblage, to intimidate labor in times of peace as well as in times of industrial strife, so that workingmen could be prevented from organizing, but all their efforts so far have been in vain.

C. O. Scoville, secretary of the typographical union, made an address before the city commissioners against the ordinance, and read from the report of the National Council of Defense, showing that the right to organize was approved, the eight-hour workday sanctioned and the maintenance of the living standard urged during the war time, so that the greatest efficiency may be rendered to the government in winning the great struggle. He felt sure that the contrary was the purpose of the ordinance and urged the employers to get in line with the stand of the National Council of Defense. Mr. Scoville was well received and heartily applauded for his timely and unanswerable logic.

Hon. D. C. Coates, also a member of our union, and a former city commissioner, made an eloquent speech in opposition to the ordinance, showing it to be one of the worst species of intimidation against labor of every kind, and then paid his respects to the policy of the employers' association in keeping the members thereof in a state of ferment against the labor unions and the attempt of workingmen to organize. Mr. Coates quoted from the "confidential" bulletins issued by Mr. Reynolds, the secretary, and proved many falsifications against labor, made for the purpose of misleading employers and keeping them stirred up against labor. He told the employers that this policy of refusing to let their employes organize, or to treat with them in industrial disputes, was the cause of 90 per cent of the industrial troubles in the northwest; he said that labor recognized the right of employers to organize, and urged that the employers take the same attitude toward labor.

Hon. H. L. Hughes, industrial insurance commissioner and a member of No. 193, made a masterly and impassioned plea on behalf of labor, showing that in this war it was bearing the greater burdens, as labor has done in every war; he pleaded for a square deal from employers toward their workingmen; he showed that laws passed by the state legislature at the request of the employers for the same purpose as the proposed ordinance had been defeated by the people by a 4-to-1 vote, and that such methods did not tend to solve the labor problem, but rather made it more difficult of solution. Mr. Hughes, who is a pioneer in the labor movement in this state, was heartily applauded when he stated that two of his sons had enlisted and that he was sorry he had not more to give the nation in its battle for democracy and humanity.

The hearing before the city commissioners was at a time when but few laboring men could be present, and this was to be taken advantage of by the attendance of a large body of union-hating employers. At least 150 of the largest employers of labor and representatives of the powerful corporations were present.

The newspapers have justified the recent seizure and continued detention of men in this city by United States military authorities. The seizure and detention of these men raises a constitutional question of far greater import to the people than the causes which led to such action. The question is, whether in time of war, but outside of territory occupied by military forces and not under martial law, the military power may deprive a citizen of liberty without due process of law. In other words, because a state of war exists, is the constitutional guaranty suspended and the military power superior to the civil law in peaceful areas? The United States Supreme Court passed squarely on this question. During the civil war, under authority of a proclamation of the president, a man named Milligan was seized in Indiana, where all courts were open and unobstructed, held by military forces, and tried and convicted of sedition before a military tribunal. The supreme court unanimously held the action unconstitutional and void. In a separate opinion four of the justices dissented from certain language in the opinion, and said they believed that congress had the power, in certain circumstances, to enact legislation giving the military tribunals jurisdiction, but until such legislation was enacted they had no power over the private citizen in peaceful areas, and he could only be held and tried in civil courts under due process of law. Justice Davis said in that opinion that no doctrine involving more pernicious consequences had ever been invented by the wit of man than that the constitution can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. But Justice Davis had never met the Hon. Tim Campbell, of Tammany Hall, who immortalized himself by asking "What is the constitution between friends?" Some of the lumber barons of the northwest believe that the constitution was made of rubber, and that they have a moral and legal right to stretch it any way they want to. Daniel O'Connell once declared that there was not an act of parliament that he could not drive a coach-and-four through. But a coach-and-four would be too slow for a lumber baron; nothing but an automobile would do for them to puncture the constitution.

Congress has never conferred jurisdiction on military tribunals in such cases, except over spies in or about military posts. Neither is there any question of the power of military forces in case of insurrection and riot, when the constitutional government has been suspended by violence and can not be operative until peace is restored. There was no riot or insurrection in Spokane, no proclamation of martial law, and the courts were open and officials in full control during all this time. If laws are inadequate, let us enact adequate ones, but let us not violate the fundamental law of the land upon which we all depend for security merely because it seems convenient or expedient for the moneyed autocracy of the country. Two wrongs never make a right, and constitutional acts of force by public officials do greater harm and excite more unrest than the condition which such acts are intended to remedy.

It is well to remember that the great men who established this government, despite the protests of the tories, were radical and revolutionary. With tireless industry and rigid economy the masses can not get out of the morass of poverty, yet on every side they see those who neither toil nor spin arrayed like Solomon in all his glory. A bitter hatred has found place in their hearts for those who waste while they must want. Man is wrong only when warring with the arms of aggressive evolution, and right only when aiding its advance.

The governor of the state of Washington investigated labor conditions and became an agitator for eight hours and better conditions in logging camps. Congresswoman Jeanette Rankin visited Butte, investigated labor conditions, and became a stanch agitator for the eight-hour day and radically improved conditions. That stanch and able republican conservative, Senator Weeks, went to San Francisco and made a study of the labor conditions and came away convinced that the workers were right in their demands for better conditions, as well as shorter hours. If any man who has put in any time in logging camps and never "kicked" against his environment, he is what the employer considers an ideal employe. If he has none of that spirit which would elevate his fellow men to better conditions of life, he has little left of that other spirit which would drag them farther down.

A crisis is here, the call has been made, and Spokane has given voluntarily her best young men —men of ability, energy, pluck and perseverance; each eager to emulate that grand and fearless warrior, General Washington; each willing to sacrifice his promising young life for the good of his state, his country, and the world's liberty. The following members of Spokane Typographical Union have enlisted in the United States fighting forces, and their dues are now being paid by this union: F. U. McCoskerie, formerly employed at the Young Printing Company, is with the machine gun company of the Washington militia; R. L. Thomas, formerly of the Chronicle force and secretary of No. 193, has joined the field artillery branch of the regular army; C. S. Parker, formerly with the X-Ray Printing Company, secured a commission as first lieutenant at the training camp for colored officers at Des Moines, Ia.; L. F. Meyers, formerly of the Chronicle force, has joined the light artillery company of the Washington national guard; H. S. McCurley, formerly employed at Pullman, has joined the local navy band recently organized here; Fred Wooley, formerly employed at the Union Printing Company, has joined the medical section of the Canadian expeditionary forces.

The following apprentice members of this organization have joined the United States fighting forces: A. L. Pearson, formerly employed in the Review composing room, has joined the Eighth national engineers; Spencer Wheeler, formerly employed in the Review composing room, has joined the aviation section of the army; Wesley Whipple, formerly employed by Peterson & Ross, has joined the naval band recently organized here; Walter Lindsay and Andrew Swaney, both apprentices in the Chronicle chapel, have passed the examination and are to be made part of the draft army; Albert Willis, also of the Chronicle, has enlisted in the navy, having served in the navy previous to coming to the Chronicle.

Work on the machines good. Work on the hand side is a lost art here. Winter is coming, this is a "dry" town, and whisky is $3 a pint.

JAMES A. POWER.

BANGOR, MAINE.

Maine is probably the first state in the country to accept federal aid under the Smith-Hughes act, passed by congress for the advancement of vocational education, and the appointments to the board by Governor Milliken are awaited with interest. Plans have not developed sufficiently to throw much light upon the subjects to be taught, but in all probability printing will be one of the selections and is already causing much discussion by Bangor Typographical Union.

Work has been rather dull in Bangor this summer, but now seems to have picked up and there will be plenty of work for all.

JOHN F. O'LEARY.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The August meeting of the union was poorly attended, probably due to the existing car strike. President George A. Tracy, J. W. Mullen, J. S. Golden, George E. Mitchell, Fred F. Bebergall and W. E. Pitschke will represent No. 21 at the state federation of labor convention in Sacramento the week of October 1, 1917. The union, by unanimous vote, levied a 1 per cent assessment on the membership to assist the street car men in their strike against the United Railroads. The strike was one of the most unique in the history of labor struggles. On Saturday evening, August 11, about four car crews quit their cars and induced a few others to go along with them. They announced that they were going out on strike for $3.50 for an eight-hour day. Mr. Bowbeer, sixth international vice-president of the street railway employes, and the executive committee of the San Francisco Labor Council took charge of the strike, and in a few days between 1,500 and 2,000 carmen quit work, and now the strike is in its fifth week and the men are still out and very confident of success. The many jitney busses and the municipal railway of San Francisco are doing a great business, and indeed, it is these that will help the men win their demands against this tyrannical corporation that has always given San Francisco the worst it could, corrupted our city officials and worked its men long hours for short pay. On the day of the strike a new branch of the Municipal railway was opened up which tapped the Mission district of the city and is giving the people of that district splendid service. The city cars now go into practically every section of the city. The people are going a little out of their way and taking their own cars in preference to those operated by strikebreakers. The men on strike have organized a union and are very enthusiastic, and it is a safe bet that by the time this number of THE JOURNAL is read the men will be on their cars again and working as union men under good conditions. The people of San Francisco and the press are behind the men in their demands. Our labor-busting "law and order committee" of the Chamber of Commerce has interested itself in behalf of the railroad, but is getting scant consideration from the people, who are now realizing that it is this so-called "law and order committee" that is responsible for the industrial troubles in San Francisco. The answer of the mayor of our city to the president of the Chamber of Commerce is a masterpiece. It was as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., August 24, 1917.

FREDERICK J. KOSTER, Chairman of the Law and Order Committee of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, Merchants' Exchange Building, San Francisco, Cal.

DEAR SIR—Your hysterical telegram, dated 1:10 A. M. of August 24, was delivered at my home at 4:20 A. M., of the same day.

Permit me to say, in the first place, that neither you nor the law and order committee of the Chamber of Commerce has earned, by any conspicuous devotion to law and order, the right to lecture me or the police department.

On the contrary, the attitude and the activity of you and your particular group have done much, in my opinion, to engender the industrial unrest and class hatred, culminating on a few occasions in turbulence and violence, which have lately distressed this community.

I am quite as strongly opposed to lawlessness and disorder as you and your committee can possibly be; and I am, moreover, opposed to every form of lawlessness and disorder, whether committed by a corporation, a striker, or a strikebreaker, and whether that lawlessness take the form of bribery, perjury, or any sort of chicane, or the more violent form of assault and murder.

No one can regret and resent more intensely than I do the murder committed last night or the occasional violence which, in the last few days, has disgraced the street car strike, and which you say that I, as mayor, and the police department have not done everything in our power to maintain order and prevent violence and crime, and when you intimate that we have not in fact succeeded in preventing violence and crime as well as it can possibly be done under the circumstances, you utter a falsehood which may be based on ignorance or prejudice, but to me appears deliberate.

It is peculiarly difficult for the police to prevent all violence in a street car strike, a teamsters' strike, a railroad strike or any out-of-doors strike of that character. No police department in any city, so far as I know, has ever succeeded in maintaining perfect order in a bitter and prolonged labor dispute of that kind. No one except a fanatic or a fool would expect such a perfect result.

Since the commencement of this strike the whole police department has been doing extra duty and exercising the greatest vigilance and diligence to prevent disorder. Policemen have been recalled from their vacations, a great many of the policemen on special details as clerks in headquarters have been put on patrol duty, and the whole department is working on twelve-hour instead of eight-hour shifts, seven days a week.

Since the beginning of this strike there have been more men on patrol duty in San Francisco by day and night than ever before in the history of the city. The disorders that have occurred have been few in comparison with the disorders in street car strikes that occurred in former years in San Francisco. Either you know these facts or you refuse to know them.

But no vigilance can prevent sporadic disturbances. The police suppressed the disorder last night as soon as they could, which was immediately. The affair was not in any sense a riot. It is unfair to expect the police to be present in advance at any point where disorder occurs, even though the disturbance could not have been anticipated. The police have arrested the men supposed to be guilty of the murder. Two of them were arrested within two minutes of the murder.

Doubtless you are disappointed because the police have not yet turned machine guns on crowds in our streets and killed a few dozen strikers, including the customary number of innocent bystanders; but with all respect for your opinion I think the police do well to enforce law and order as firmly as they have done, but without any quick or wanton slaughter of the people. Violent and bloody repression has never maintained law and order so effectually as firmness, coupled with moderation and common sense.

It is unfortunate that so many persons of your type in this country are so incurably stupid and ignorant about business and industry, the very matters in which you are most concerned and in respect to which you deem yourselves most enlightened. The world is changing all around you, and you and your kind don't know it any more than the czar knew what was happening to him and Russia until it was all over. You still believe in Napoleon's whiff of a grapeshot. You still think that industrial discontent can be quelled by the policeman's club. Happily, the rest of us do not need to take you or your law and order committee as seriously as you take yourselves.

Law and order will be maintained in San Francisco by the police department in spite of the bitterness and hatred which have been aroused in this community by the attitude of yourself and your law and order committee.

I have been in constant consultation with the heads of the police department since the beginning of this strike. Every member of the department is instructed to suppress violence, no matter who commits it.

Both parties to the strike will be treated impartially, according to law. No violation of the law on the part of anybody—striker or strikebreaker—will be tolerated. In this respect there will be absolutely no distinction between the strikers, the strikebreakers, and anybody else. It is evident to my mind that the United Railroads and you are endeavoring to create in the public mind a false impression that the mayor and the police department are winking at acts of violence committed by the strikers. There is absolutely no foundation for that impression, and no one knows it better than the officers of the United Railroads, and no one ought to know it better than you, as chairman of the law and order committee of the Chamber of Commerce. Yours truly,

JAMES ROLPH, JR., Mayor.

The International Typographical Union has $27,000 invested in San Francisco Municipal Railway bonds and our officers are to be congratulated on their splendid investment.

The following resolutions introduced by Carroll E. Fisk were unanimously adopted by the union at its August meeting. Copies were ordered sent to THE JOURNAL, to the mayor, Hon. James Rolph, jr., and to the labor papers and the press in general. A copy was ordered sent to President Tracy, who was out of the city:

Whereas, Mayor James Rolph, jr., by his appointment of our president, George A. Tracy, as a civil service commissioner of the city and county of San Francisco, has signally honored San Francisco Typographical Union No. 21, and has given additional proof of his fairness to the cause of labor; and,

Whereas, George A. Tracy has ever labored throughout his long and honorable career in the cause of industrial progress and in the interest of civic righteousness; therefore, be it

Resolved, That with a high appreciation of the honor conferred upon this organization and upon its president, George A. Tracy, we hereby testify and record our admiration of the character of our honored chief executive, Mayor James Rolph, jr., who adorns and dignifies his exalted station, and who is as gracious in all relations of private life as he is inflexible in the maintenance of civic honor.

President Tracy and Secretary-Treasurer Michelson are in Indianapolis as the union's representatives in the pending arbitration proceedings in our newspaper scale. On this account they were not present at our August meeting. Vice-President Fred F. Bebergall and Executive Committeeman James M. Griffin are in charge of the affairs of the union during their absence.

Alfred A. Adams was initiated and seven applications for membership were received. J. W. Myers and W. K. Rutter, of this union, were admitted to the Home during the month of August.

Our delegates to the Colorado Springs convention have returned to the city, all very enthusiastic about the convention, and with many words of praise for the splendid hospitality of the convention city union and Superintendent Daley and Mrs. Daley.

Following the adjournment of the convention San Francisco was the Mecca for many of the delegates and visitors. Among those who were in the city and visited headquarters were: Vice-President Smith, of the Mailers' Trade District Union, who came to look after the interests of his craft on the coast; Charles H. Booth, of Louisville; William J. Brennan, of New York; Henry M. Noonan, of the Boston mailers; Ed Rising, of San Diego, and William K. Cody, of Minneapolis. There were many here glad to see "Bill" Cody, because it gave them a chance to show up his brother, Charles Cody, of the Examiner chapel. Charlie has been posing around here as the original "Bill Cody." He has now been shown up as an impostor.

Among those who have enlisted or been drafted are C. W. Edwards, of the Webber chapel; Thomas A. Boyle, of the Sunset chapel; Harry J. Gundaker, of the Pernau chapel; Bud Brown, of the Chronicle, and Sid Tiers, formerly of the Call. Harold Baruh, son of M. Baruh, of the Gabriel-Meyerfield chapel, has been drafted in the first quota from San Francisco. George A. Tracy, jr., son of President Tracy, has enlisted in the naval service. A number of our members are in the reserve and are awaiting a call from Uncle Sam.

John E. Snell, of the Chronicle, spent his vacation touring the southern part of California, visiting Los Angeles, San Diego, Tia Juana and Dehesa (wherever that is). H. H. Gould, of the Recorder, is down at Catalina Island creating mortality among the tuna.

Daniel F. Malloy, of the Crocker chapel, was married on September 8 to Miss Alberta Whittaker, of Oakland. The marriage, while a surprise to their many friends, was planned over a year ago. The happy couple were the recipients of a beautiful silver set presented by the Crocker chapel. Dan has been drafted and has passed his physical examination and will soon be in the service of Uncle Sam. The couple spent their honeymoon in northern California and will make their home in San Francisco.

James V. Tonkin, formerly a member of the executive committee of No. 21, and now located in Los Angeles, was a visitor to the city recently. A. M. Felding, also of Los Angeles, motored up here from the Angel city; from here he will go to Lake Tahoe and then back to Los Angeles. He admitted that he liked San Francisco just a little better than Los Angeles. He is an old-time member of No. 21, having originally joined here in 1887 and migrated to Los Angeles in 1895.

William Goulding a member of No. 16 and a former executive committeeman of that union, enlisted from Chicago in the United States infantry and for several months has been stationed in San Francisco. He was in the headquarters the other day to say good-by to us, and was quite elated, he having been commissioned a sergeant and assigned to the Ninety-first division of the national army at American Lake, Wash.

Paul F. Barber, who has been in the sanatorium department of the Home for several months, vacated in August, having regained his health sufficiently to be able to return to work.

No. 11 has lost a loyal member and a good union man in the death of Clarence B. Cox, which took place September 2. He had been a sufferer from tuberculosis and had been unable to work for over a year. He leaves a widow and six small children.

The local arbitration board has reached an agreement with the newspaper publishers of the city whereby the situations of all our members who may enlist for service in the army or navy will be protected during the term of such enlistment. Several of our boys have already gone into training camps.

John T. Burns, who has been floorman and proofreader on the News-Scimitar for several years, is now editing its sports page.

The members of the city fire department have organized a union and were in the Labor day parade good and strong.

Cards received: C. H. Morgan, Robert Grabner, W. H. James, H. B. Kolley. Issued: Harry B. Kolley, H. H. Wright, G. P. Bumpass, C. H. Morgan, Robert Grabner, James H. Walker. Obligated: A. A. Rowe, McKay Ligon.

BOSTON, MASS.

Three members were obligated at the August meeting of No. 13 and four applications for membership were read, and the applications for the old age pension of George W. Haskell, Fred H. Colby, sr., and Mary Van Stry were read and endorsed.

Raymond B. Vinton, who had been employed on the Boston Journal for thirty years, fifteen as its superintendent, resigned his position August 27 and intends to spend the rest of his life with his wife on his beautiful farm at Sturbridge, Mass. Mr. Vinton was an ideal superintendent, having always meted out a square deal to the men working under him as well as to the proprietors who employed him.

The Riverside Press chapel has contributed in weekly instalments $42 for the Red Cross fund.

Secretary John S. O'Connell, of New York Typographical Union No. 6, and wife, and Nate Newman, of New York, were the guests of Norman E. McPhail, superintendent of the Boston American, and Mrs. McPhail at their home in Wollaston during their brief visit to Boston the latter part of August.

A grand testimonial to the work of the Union Printers Home is that of George W. F. Mugford, who went there about seven months ago for treatment, and on August 19 was discharged as being able to work. He immediately joined the United States navy after having been passed by the doctors as being fit, and is now stationed at the Charlestown navy yard.

The opinion seems to prevail among many of our members in the outlying cities and towns around Boston, New Hampshire, etc., who desire to change their positions and get to a big city, that on account of the war business in the book and job line is flourishing here. Many letters have been received by me along these lines, and I wish to state that business prospects in Boston at the present time are very poor indeed, and it would be well for members, both handmen and linotype operators, to keep away from here for some time to come.

Frank E. Doyle, proofreader on the Boston Herald, recently contributed the following classy and appropriate verses entitled, "A Sub and a Man," to the Boston Herald's spicy "A Line O'Type or Two" column:

There was a disturbance in Pi Alley one night. A man coming into the composing room was asked what was the matter. He said it was a fight. Questioned as to who were fighting, he said, "A sub and a man."

What meant those windows thronged, those cries
Of rage and scorn that reached the skies?
What tumult stirred the printer clan?
A sub was fighting with a man.

The fortune-slighted from his birth,
The pariah scum of all the earth,
The unturned worm since time began—
A sub—was fighting with a man.

Poor lowly Gutenbergian slave,
But late a devil, now a knave,
The cipher in creation's plan—
A sub—was fighting with a man.

But come it must, or soon or late,
The sub shall reach the man's estate,
In turn to say, and blame who can,
"A sub was fighting with a man."

William B. Chase, late chairman of the George H. Ellis Company, who was called to the navy in June, is now assistant ship-pointer on the U. S. battleship Kearsarge. Send literature to reading rooms of the Kearsarge, Virginia, Nebraska, Georgia and Oklahoma by way of New York for our gallant navy boys.

The many friends of James List, who worked so many years at Wright & Potter's, sympathize with him in the recent death of his wife.

On Wednesday, October 17, 1917, the membership will be called upon to vote on the various amendments to our laws submitted by the recent convention held at Colorado Springs.

Leslie A. Ellis, ex-secretary of Concord Union, has been filling the position as manager during the summer of the Mount Washington (N. H.) daily, Among the Clouds.

John Smith Mitchell, very well known in the newspaper and job offices of this city for about forty years, died of heart disease, Thursday, September 13, 1917. He was born at St. John, N. B., about seventy-six years ago, and deposited a card in this union November 21, 1887. He worked on the Boston Herald in the old hand days, Boston directory, and his last labors were performed at Wright & Potter's in 1913. He was a hard-working man, very much interested in union affairs, and highly respected by the membership of Boston Typographical Union. He leaves a daughter and two sons to mourn his loss.

A letter from Frank M. Flaherty, who is now a non-commissioned officer in Company C, Fifty-second infantry, stationed at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, states that he is very well satisfied with the treatment he is receiving, and that in his opinion the United States in about a year will have the greatest army and navy the world ever saw, the men being young and their health and morals are safeguarded in every way. He pays a very high compliment to the Young Men's Christian Association and says they are doing a lot for the soldiers, providing entertainments, reading and writing rooms, and using their quarters for services of different denominations.

Thomas Boleyre, of the American, enlisted in the U. S. army the middle of August. Carl J. Riley, Fifth year apprentice member of the Globe, enlisted in the commissary school, naval reserves, August 20. Clarence Smith, linotype operator, subbing on the Advertiser-Record, enlisted the first week of August in the U. S. army, signal corps. Daniel E. Lamont, 60 Sawyer avenue, Dorchester, has joined the first engineers' corps of the U. S. army. Frank B. Kaulbeck, of the city plant, joined the navy the middle of August and was called to duty September 3. Samuel Rubinovitz, monotype keyboard operator, was drafted in the U. S. army September 6. Emil L. Walter was drafted in the U. S. army the latter part of August. Charles E. Murphy, linotype machinist at the Rapid Service Press, enlisted in the U. S. army, July 31. Lewis J. Moore, registered apprentice at the Riverside Press, joined the Harvard medical unit in May and it is thought he has sailed for France. John F. Perkins, of the American, formerly of New Bedford and Fall River, joined the navy August 27. George J. McKinley, of the Post, joined the U. S. medical corps on August 15, and is now stationed at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont.

At its annual convention at Lawrence, September 10 to 13, Henry Sterling was elected a member of the labor legislative committee for the state for the fifteenth term. The convention made an interesting program for legislation, including the initiative and referendum, old age pensions, half-time for children, a forty-eight-hour week for women, and opposition to prohibition. There were unanimous and enthusiastic demonstrations and votes pledging loyalty to the government during the present war crisis, and urging that no strikes be entered upon if possible to be avoided. The importation and exploitation of cheap labor from Porto Rico and other sources was vigorously denounced. The convention was one of the most largely attended as well as one of the most successful conventions ever held by the state branch of the American Federation of Labor. The president, George H. Wrenn, of Springfield, and the secretary, Martin T. Joyce, of Boston, were elected without opposition. Boston was selected as the next convention city. P. H. Jennings was elected a delegate to the convention of the American Federation of Labor at Buffalo, to convene next month.

The results of an inspection of 130 printing plants located in seven of the largest cities of the country have just been published as Bulletin No. 209 of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor, under the title "Hygiene of the Printing Trades." This investigation was undertaken to discover what influence the presence of lead and other toxic substances has upon men in the printing trade and to observe all the features of the industry which might have an indirect bearing on health. All of the processes used in printing, including type founding, were studied. It was found that the principal dangers confronting printers, especially in hand composition, monotype and linotype casting, stereotyping and electrotyping, are the exposure to lead and antimony dust and to possible fumes from molten lead to carbon monoxid from gas burners; to volatile petroleum products or coal tar products used to clean type and press rollers; to turpentine used for the same purpose; to anilin oil and possibly wood alcohol and tetrachloride of carbon, used as roller cleaners; to lye water for washing type and forms; and to acrolein fumes, which develop when old ink-covered type is heated for remelting. Furthermore, the printer's trade is unhealthy because it is an indoor occupation often carried on in vitiated air, because the small amount of physical exertion required results in sluggishness of circulation and sensitiveness to cold, and because the nervous strain is great. The report shows that American printers suffer far more from tuberculosis than occupied males in general. THOMAS C. STEPHENSON.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The August meeting of old No. 4 will long be remembered by those who were fortunate to be present, as at that meeting Mr. Rifenberick was accorded the biggest ovation of any president in the history of No. 4. It was fully ten minutes before order could be restored. It was the annual meeting at which the newly-elected board of officers and delegates to the several central bodies were duly installed. President Rifenberick, who has presided over the destinies of the union for the past two years, turned over to his successor, John H. McCann, the control of the union in a speech that reviewed to a certain extent the work that has been accomplished during his term. Not the least important work, he was most proud to claim, was his almost last official act, the unionizing of the Slingerland plant, bringing at last this city and jurisdiction up to a 100 per cent standard. This office had never been an absolutely union shop, but for some years was what was termed an "open office." Some years ago the union men were called out, so the office has been a matter of much consideration for past presidents of No. 4. Last month, however, all efforts were brought to a happy end when the office, to be made up of twenty-four men and three apprentices, was unionized and the chapel organized. A large number of these new members were in attendance upon the meeting. County Judge Addington was present and made an appeal in behalf of the Patriotic League, which was well received. Two new members were obligated and another elected to membership. Financial Secretary MacFarlane announced at the close of the meeting that the membership of the union then stood at 541, the highest point ever reached in its history. The new president, John H. McCann, who is an ex-secretary and an ex-delegate of the union, made a very favorably received opening address, and starts off his term under the most promising of conditions.

Albany Typographical Union is gradually gaining in membership and earning capacity, as the records of the past nine years show. The average membership of this union for the year ending July 31, 1909, was 424 and the average wages earned for the same time was $754.40. The year ending July 31, 1917, gives the average membership as 505 and earnings, $975.16. For the same year Troy, with an average of 119 members, earned $1,087.52, or practically the general average of the entire membership of the International Typographical Union, which was $1,086.43. This difference is not due, however, to any great difference in scales, but to the fact that Albany has an unusually large book business that fluctuates more or less during the year, causing considerable lost time, while the newspaper and job trade of Troy is more even. The average membership of "Big Six" of New York city last year was 6,630, and the average earnings, $1,378.63.

James Hill, creator of the Albany Sunday Telegram, was found dead in his room in the Ennis hotel in New York early in August, a victim of the heat. Since his retirement from active newspaper work Mr. Hill spent most of his time in New York, but was a visitor here only a short time ago. Mr. Hill came to Albany twenty-eight years ago to establish the Albany edition of the Elmira Telegram. The firm then consisted of Messrs. Hazard, Brooks and Hill. They had established the Elmira Telegram and were to soon make the Albany Telegram a weekly newspaper that reached into every corner of the eastern states, eventually building up a circulation of close to 150,000, an enormous circulation in those days for a newspaper in America. Mr. Hill was the circulation manager of the firm's two papers, his brilliant ideas and schemes for reaching into every available territory being highly successful. He was in fact a man who blazed a path for future circulation men of weekly and monthly periodicals. Shortly after coming to Albany John Moore, now a member of the state board of regents, came to take charge of the editorial policy of the Albany edition and he remained here until the firm of Hazard, Brooks & Hill dissolved, Messrs. Brooks and Hazard taking the Elmira plant and Mr. Hill the Albany plant. The latter continued in its great advancement until there came a clash between the owner and the typographical union. The issue was one difficult to explain to the laymen, having to do with the use of matrices cast from type set in Elmira, the local printers demanding that their union reset this matter. It was a big question of the day among newspapers and Mr. Hill agreed—it has been said at the earnest solicitation of contemporary publishers—to make the fight on behalf of the publishers. He fought the battle alone, however, continuing until he was financially broke. It was a memorable fight in more than one way, as it not only was the first big fight on the question of the use of matrices in duplicate, but it was one of the first demonstrations in this section of the force of the boycott by organized labor. After it was settled Mr. Hill began rebuilding and eventually brought the Telegram back to prosperity. He retired from business two years ago, his interest being purchased by his son, Herbert E. Hill, who has made great strides in the paper's advancement through a complete change of policy and methods.

Through the untiring efforts of "Gene" Souder, the live-wire chairman of the 1919 convention committee, Albany is now practically assured of the 1919 convention. We quote from a pamphlet of "Gene's" own pen:

The sixteenth annual convention of the then National Typographical Union was held in the city of Washington, D. C., during the week beginning Monday, June 1, 1868. On Thursday of the fourth day's session choice was made for holding the seventeenth annual convention for 1869, as follows: Delegate Nelson W. Young, of "Big Six," a former member of No. 4, placed in nomination Albany, N. Y. Cincinnati, Ohio, St. Louis, Mo., Leavenworth, Kan., and Alexandria, Va., were also nominated, the last three named, however, withdrawing. A ballot was then taken and Albany received 52 votes to 19 for Cincinnati, and Albany, N. Y., was declared to be the next convention city.

At this same convention, also, a new constitution was submitted providing for changing the name from National to International, action to be determined at the 1869 convention. These two actions of the sixteenth convention made Albany the birthplace of the International Typographical Union.

On Monday, June 7, 1869, in the assembly chamber of the old capitol, at 10 o'clock in the morning, the seventeenth annual convention of the National Typographical Union was called to order by Francis Freckelton, then president of No. 4, of Albany, N. Y., who welcomed the delegates from the United States, including those from two Canadian unions, those of Toronto and Montreal.

The proceedings of this convention fill a pamphlet of seventy-five pages. They show that on Friday, the fifth day of this convention, the proposed new constitution was adopted, and that when final adjournment was taken it was as an International Typographical Union.

The personnel of this convention embraced in its list of delegates no less than eleven members or erstwhile members of No. 4, three, John Parr, Dennis W. Feehan and George W. Quackenbush, being the duly elected delegates of No. 4, while the others represented southern unions that had chosen them as their proxies, viz., Cornelius Halloran by Montgomery (Ala.) No. 31, John McKenna and Francis Freckelton by Columbia (S. C.) No. 34, Nelson W. Young by Augusta (Ga.) No. 41, William Walls, jr., by Macon (Ga.) No. 84 and Asa D. Chadwick, James A. Harris and William J. Irvine by Annapolis (Md.) No. 114. Two of these eleven just mentioned are still living: William Walls, an employe of the city of Albany, hale and hearty with all his years, and William J. Irvine now employed in the government printing office at Washington, where he has been a member of No. 101 for the past fifteen years or more. The others have joined the great majority.

At this convention there was a total of 105 delegates in attendance. No union was allowed more than three delegates and all had at least one. The new constitution changed this, increasing the number of delegates for any union to a possible four, but many unions with increased ratios of members were decreased to a possible one of two delegates, as it still remains. The proxy system was also done away with at this convention. This was the first and last convention, up to this time, that No. 4 ever had three delegates, although the present membership entitles the union to three delegates if it is desired to send them.

Never since this convention of 1869 has No. 4, of Albany, sought to entertain the International Typographical Union in any of its annual conventions, yet it has had representatives in every one but two, those of 1879 and 1880. The International body, however, has ever received loyal support and recognition in all the great advances that have been made by it in all the many years since. Now the day is comparatively near at hand when the fiftieth anniversary of the International Union will be reached. It has even been twenty years since any New York state city has had the honor of entertaining an International Typographical Union convention, therefore, can Albany and old No. 4 be blamed for entertaining the desire to repeat history in a way, and help celebrate so important an event by inviting the International Typographical Union to hold its 1919 convention in Albany, and thus celebrate its golden anniversary in the city of its nativity?

No. 4 is not asking for this privilege, especially on account of greater advantages of Albany as a convention city over many other places that might be named. Yet Albany is a city well worth visiting.

It is the largest printing center, in proportion to its population, of any other city or town in the International jurisdiction. The members of the local union are all "live wires." Undoubtedly they will individually do what they can to entertain, individually, delegates and visitors during their stay. Surely No. 4 will do its part collectively. But the main point of the ambition is a sentimental one. It will be a celebration of the golden anniversary of the International Union in the city of its birth.

No. 403 has passed the 100-mark in membership and is gaining a little each month. About 40 per cent of this number is what is commonly called "home guard," 40 per cent more is made up of the class known as "circuit riders," while the remaining 20 per cent are "prospectors" or transients. With a membership of this kind it certainly keeps the "politicians" busy maintaining fences or rebuilding them after they have been completely demolished, as frequently occurs. Nevertheless, things are moving right along nicely and everybody is happy—that is, most everybody.

Right here we want to say that we will have to except former Secretary George B. Johnson from this list of happy and light-hearted. And a good cause he has for not feeling gay. After polling the highest vote in the union last spring for office of delegate to the Oklahoma State Federation of Labor convention, which met at Oklahoma City, September 17, there was not an available sub to be had in Tulsa or vicinity, and after carrying the union's expense check around for a few days, George returned it to Secretary Wilhite. V. V. Van Tilburg was on the job, and after securing the only sub on the Democrat and Times slipboard, left under full sail for the capital city to represent No. 403 at the convention.

Printers' paragraphs in the Tulsa Unionist, September 15, contains the following: H. H. Harris and W. H. Ford have formed a partnership to combat the H. C. of L. The firm of Harris & Ford has rented a suite of rooms, will furnish same and cook great gobs and quantities of mulligan. A grand reception to local printers will feature the opening.

The boys of the Democrat job office chapel are just a little bit proud of the fact that they are not compelled to be held in check by the stipulations of a long-time contract drawn up when the high cost of living was still in its infancy. They have received a raise of $3 per week—50 cents per day. Just think of it! And this was given them voluntarily by William Stryker, owner of the job office. By his action in setting the pace for higher scale for the boys Mr. Stryker only verifies his oft-repeated remark that he is willing to pay what the men are worth. Mr. Stryker for many years has been the first to sign the scale when presented by the proper officers, and that without much quibbling or bickering.

The World Publishing Company presented all the employes in the mechanical department of that concern one week's pay in addition to the regular amount due the last pay day in August. The following letter accompanied the checks:

To the Party Addressed—We enclose herewith one week's extra pay check to you, as you have received no increase in salary this year. While the increased cost in the operation of our business has been so much that it has practically wiped out all of our profits, yet we appreciate the fact that there has been some increase in the cost of living to you and we hope you will accept this little donation in the spirit in which it is sent. With kindest regards, I am, CHARLES E. DENT.

Lest we forget, be it again said that the Democrat and Times will soon move into their new home on Archer street. While this move has been contemplated and discussed by several former correspondents during the past year, none of them could set any definite time for this very important event. This correspondent will not attempt to outdo his predecessors, but will repeat: "The Democrat and Times will soon move to their new home."

W. A. Freeman and W. J. Dowell, two of the "old Democrat chapel," have gone into business in Oklahoma City.

Tommy Todd, after consulting his calendar, decided that he had been in Tulsa almost long enough to be classed as a homesteader, pulled his slip on the Democrat and Times slug board and left for Cincinnati.

J. Luther Langston, of Oklahoma City, was here last month selling stock in the Oklahoma Leader to the various crafts. The Leader is to be a daily paper, an offshoot of the Milwaukee Leader, and it is not difficult to make the boys understand that labor's side will be given a square deal in its columns. Therefore, Langston is meeting with success.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

What is probably the largest single order for printing ever placed in San Diego is now being turned out at the E. P. Wilson Printing Company plant. The order was given by the Savage Tire Company and is for one-half million each of two-color letterheads, envelops and price lists.

San Diego has a new publication as a result of the Camp Kearny cantonment being built here. The newest in the field is the Service Journal, a twenty-four-page weekly, 12 x 9. At present the Service Journal is being issued by the Arts and Crafts. The number of army and navy men here make the future success of this paper almost a certainty.

An unusual record for printers is that of Emil Gerlach, now employed on the Süd-California Deutsche-Zeitung in this city. On the celebration of his fifty-eighth birthday last month Mr. Gerlach had been continuously at work at the case for forty-four years. Mr. Gerlach says he intends to retire when he becomes 60 and spend the next forty years in absolute idleness.

The Watson-Jones Company and the Kinney-Creller Printing Company have installed new presses. Even if there is no business now it is evident that these firms are going to be prepared when the business does come.

Tommy Drummond spent ten days in Rosario, Mexico, with a hunting party. Tommy reports game in abundance. Says he ate so many quail he cheeps every time he meets a grain of wheat.

H. G. ("Shorty") Jennings, who has been at the Tribune so long that most folks thought he owned the sheet, has gone to Yuma, Ariz., to take the foremanship of the Examiner. His many friends here are perplexed as to whether to be glad "Shorty" has a good job or sorry for his bone-dry condition.

S. C. Kelly, editor of the Labor Leader, is now a member of the First company, officers' training camp, Presidio, San Francisco. Mr. Kelly was a captain in the Spanish-American war, and with his previous experience should give an account of himself to make his San Diego friends proud. The Labor Leader is being managed by Mrs. Kelly, assisted by L. F. Miller.

The Elite Printing Company has moved from 727 E street to more commodious quarters at 945 Seventh street.

One of the visitors to the secretary's office last month was John A. Willie, of San Antonio, Texas, who, unaided, set up the first three issues of the San Antonio Light. Mr. Willie is now retired and intends to make his stay in San Diego permanent. N. S. HALLETT.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

No. 2's September meeting was held in record time to enable the members to attend a patriotic labor rally at the Garrick theater, where stirring addresses were made by Charles Edward Russell, member of the mission to Russia; Clarence Darrow, of Chicago, labor attorney, and Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor. Labor's loyalty to President Wilson in the great internecine struggle now at hand was reaffirmed amid marked enthusiasm.

"A Day at Coney Island" was staged by the allied printing trades council on Sunday, September 9. A large number seized the opportunity of taking in the sights of the "big city." The outing was a success in every way, Mardi Gras at the island proving a kayo.

The Public Ledger has installed six new Mergenthalers—four No. 18's and two No. 19's. John ("Whitey") Roller is now the master mechanician.

A feature of the Labor day celebration at Williamsport, Pa., was a ringing address on the significance of the first Monday in September by John A. Phillips, first vice-president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor.

John P. Donohue, of No. 2, represented the Pennsylvania Foresters of America in their supreme convention at Portland, Maine, last month. Richard ("Full Crew") Farley has been honored by the order in being selected grand chief ranger.

The Union Printers' National Baseball League voted to hold the next annual tournament in St. Paul, Minn. This year's tourney was postponed because of the war. Commissioner Jim McPherson represented the local athletic association at the meeting, which was held in the Hotel Statler, Cleveland, all cities in the circuit answering the roll call. John McGowan, Chicago, was re-elected president and Joseph Dallas, Boston, secretary-treasurer.

One of the late arrivals in Philly is Walter Deyhle, better known as "Reddy," who kicked in after spending the summer in Pittsburgh and vicinity. His many friends around the circuit will be pleased to learn he has enlisted in the engineers' corps. Pending a call to the colors he is holding down a job on the Public Ledger. "I thank you."

Ledger Tom Green is bivouacking at Augusta, Ga., with the Second Pennsylvania field artillery. Bill Zeigler, of the same chapel, is tenting on the new camp ground at Camp Dix, Wrightsville, N. J.

Bill Hanifan, the Baltimore superdreadnought, is performing on the iron pianos in the Public Ledger composing room. "Welcome to our city, Bill!"

Secretary-Treasurer Jake Glaser last month turned the eightieth milestone of a serene old age. The veteran attributes his four-score years to the fact that in his youth he "ne'er applied hot and rebellious liquors to his blood."

William Young, president of Philadelphia Typographical Union, was elected president of the allied printing trades council for the eleventh consecutive term at the annual election held Friday evening, August 24. Other officers elected were: Vice-president, Joseph Gorman, Press Assistants' Union No. 11; recording secretary, Alfred Bieber, Paper Rulers No. 46; treasurer, August Motz, Stereotypers' Union No. 7; sergeant-at-arms, John Figentcher, Electrotypers' Union No. 72.

Harry Shaner was elected assistant day chairman on the Evening Ledger last month, succeeding Jim McCoy, who gravitated to the government printing office, Washington.

Louis H. Rumrill passed away on June 15, 1917, a victim of chronic nephritis, age 44 years. The deaths of two of Philadelphia's oldest trade unionists also is recorded in John Craig, 73 years old, a member of the International Typographical Union for forty-nine years, and Thomas H. Hooper, age 78, who was a member for fifty-seven years. Benjamin S. Benner, age 52, also died during the month.

Bill Dawson's "personally conducted" party of tourists, otherwise known as the Pittsburgh Pikes Peak club, was a huge success, thanks to the finesse of Bill, who earned brackets as one grand little promoter. The success of the party was due to the selection of the itinerary, which was routed St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver and Colorado Springs, returning via Denver, Omaha and Chicago. As a token of appreciation, Bill was presented with a watch fob surmounted with a gold-enameled International Typographical Union button. Organize one for 1927, Bill!

Editor McCullough's oratorical effort on Printers Home day was a genuine treat. Here's hoping he will deliver another at the golden jubilee.

Standing at Tejon street and Pikes Peak avenue, Bill Hughes, president of Scranton (Pa.) Union and board of trade booster, said: "Lackawanna avenue has these promenades faded to a whisper."

Pikes Peak region sustained its reputation as a 100 per cent scenic wonderland. The majestic peak, piercing the blue empyrean; Manitou, with its sparkling springs; the Garden of the Gods, showing the rugged grandeur of rocks hewn by nature; picturesque Cripple Creek, with its touch of frontier life—all these were visualized by delegates who made side trips. Fred Dunham, president of Springfield (Mass.) Union, accompanied the writer to the mining camp. Delegate Gookin, the "conscientious objector," was also among those present. Nearly every one took in Pikes Peak.

"The End of a Perfect Day" at the convention was sounded by Commodore Mike Walton when he invited the 1918 convention to Scranton. It was a masterful effort oratorically and put a Maxim silencer on all opposition. Delegate McTague and boosters Tony Langan and Bill Hughes did some good pinch hitting to land the convention for the Electric City.

Now that Lackawanna has been awarded the coveted prize, it is expected that next August Scranton will be the Mecca to which all followers of the International Typographical Union will make the pilgrimage. Prediction is made that Pennsylvanians attending will be as "thick as leaves in Vallombrosa."

Col. Bob Darnaby's glowing eulogy of Bill Reilly's committee was a deserved tribute to men who "seen their duty and done it." Colonel Darnaby apostrophized water as if he knew something about it—what? Be that as it may, and however, the convention was pleased to see Steve O'Donnell, the ursus felis, get his'n.

Everybody has heard about the rainmakers out west (and it rained nearly every day during the 1917 convention), but they have a clearing house in Scranton, Bill Hughes says.

A red letter of convention week was the reception at the Union Printers Home. The oratory was of the best, the panegyric of Editor McCullough being a "gem of purest ray serene." Superintendent Daley and Mrs. Daley were the recipients of many compliments during the day. The Home certainly is a wonderful institution and is easily in a class by itself. Many admiring comments were made by visitors at the sanitary features throughout the group of buildings.

Ned Sims and John C. ("Buck") Weaver, of Wheeling, W. Va., were sorry when the doxology was pronounced. "Meet me at Bijou and Cascade avenues in 1927," they said. Then they went to Denver and witnessed a fifteen-round fight.

A crowning feature of the trip to Colorado was the entertainment furnished by Denver Union in the form of a seventy-five-mile drive over Lookout mountain. The committee is deserving of all praise for the successful handling of the affair. More than 100 motor cars were used to convey the guests over the mountain. All the participants pronounced it the finest ever. JAMES P. BOWEN.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Typographical Union No. 177 held three special meetings in September, occasioned by the general strike inaugurated Monday, September 10, at which time practically every union in Springfield suspended work as a protest to the action of city authorities in refusing to allow organized labor to parade on Sunday, September 9. Many of the printers felt duty bound to go out with the other trade unionists, but on account of their contract with the bosses, it was decided by the union to stand by their agreement, therefore there was no suspension of work in the printing trades.

Work in Springfield during the past month has been unusually good; in fact, many of the offices are looking for operators every day.

L. O. German and Robert Edie, delegates from No. 177 to the Colorado Springs convention, returned home before Labor day and gave a glowing account of the big meeting.

The strike of the street car men, which was inaugurated here on July 25, is still on and the fight against the street car company has been very bitter. The carmen are holding their own and have not lost a member. Every labor organization in Springfield and vicinity is giving the strikers financial support.

Urban D. Miller, one of the State Register operators, has enlisted in the medical department of the Third field artillery and left September 17 for Houston, Texas.

For the first time in many years, the label of the allied printing trades now appears on the editorial page of the Illinois State Journal and the Illinois State Register. The publishers of these two dailies have refrained from using the label on account of (it is reported) an agreement with the bosses' association. However, when practically all of the trades in this city walked out on Monday and Tuesday, September 10 and 11, a committee from the allied printing trades waited on the bosses and asked them to give the union men more consideration through the columns of their papers. As an evidence of appreciation for the printing trades remaining at work, the publishers of the two daily papers named above ordered the union label run in every issue.

George Hoole, one of the oldest members of No. 177, who is employed in the State Register job department, was married September 19 to Mrs. Mary Griffee, of this city. The ceremony took place at the Kumler M. E. church parsonage and the couple left immediately for Oshkosh, Wis., where they visited relatives. They will reside at 842 North Eighth street. About three years ago Mr. Hoole lost his first wife by being run over by an automobile near her home during the week of the state fair. R. E. WOODMANSEE.

BRISTOL, TENN.-VA.

For the first time in its history Bristol celebrated Labor day this year. Nothing was thought of a celebration until about two weeks previous to the time, and, considering the fact that no elaborate preparations had been made, the parade was a grand success. It awakened interest that had been slumbering for years, and from the enthusiasm aroused one would think that this celebration was only a smattering of what may be expected in the future. The parade was formed on the streets that surround the massive temple of justice on the Virginia side of the twin city and moved along the principal business streets amid cheering throngs that lined the sidewalks to the beautiful Anderson park on the Tennessee side, where an immense crowd had already assembled, and where addresses were made by the mayors of the two cities and others. The monster parade was led by a brass band and two companies of national guardsmen. Men grown gray in the service marched along with apprentice boys and in the printers' division every member was in line except three. Our section was led by the national colors and our own banner, immediately following which were J. M. ("Doc") Salts and A. C. Smith, veteran Bristol printers.

The management of the Herald-Courier, through the instrumentality of T. W. Cook, foreman, and in view of the high cost of living, voluntarily increased the wages of every man in the Herald-Courier chapel, beginning with September 1. Every man was already receiving a salary above the scale. However, this additional increase is greatly appreciated and will be judiciously spent.

All the linotype machines in the Herald-Courier office are equipped with individual motors.

We have a splendid attendance at the monthly meetings now since the dues have been increased so that a member is allowed a rebate of $1 for attendance.

Now that Bristol is "bone dry," except that a quart a month may be received on the Virginia side by swearing that it is for "medicinal" purposes only, some of the members of No. 426 are thinking of buying automobiles as soon as there is some definite understanding about the war. So far the war has not affected any of the Bristol printers, most of them being married men.

D. M. Scherer, of the Herald-Courier chapel, spent three weeks visiting in Lynchburg, Va., during August.

Horace D. Smith, for years a member of this local, but now located at Norfolk, Va., dropped in to see the boys recently. Horace had been to Jonesboro, Tenn., where he was present during the last illness and death of his father.

Mrs. Ella Patton, widow of the late W. H. Patton, is now reading proof on the Herald-Courier. "Bill," as her husband was familiarly known by his fellow-craftsmen, served his apprenticeship in Bristol and was a charter member of No. 426. He was no slacker. On the contrary, he took an active interest in all of the affairs of this local, always willing to bear his share of the burden. He died about a year ago in New York.

Thousands of soldiers have passed through this city recently en route to training camps, and there was hardly a unit among them that did not have some printers. This being a terminal point, the boys are allowed to march a while and limber their joints while the engines are being changed, etc. They are greatly amused at the fact that the state line runs in the center of the street car track on one of the principal thoroughfares, and think it great sport to shake hands across it—one in Tennessee, the other in Virginia.

Work is only fair at this season in Bristol. The general situation is about 50-50.

JOHN R. DOVE.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The "event extraordinaire" of the past month was, of course, the acceptance of the challenge thrown down to all and sundry in this column last month on behalf of the invincible Springfield printers' baseball team by the Worcester men who came to this city in their strength on a recent Sunday, saw, and failed to conquer. Let a veil be drawn over the game itself, which was merely an excuse for a little jollification and fraternal get-together. Worcester claims the umpires were subsidized. Springfield's representative on the umpire staff knows he erred, but could only register one run for his opponents, no matter how he tried, and the score of the Springfield team was lost in the shuffle. However, all seemed thoroughly to enjoy the hastily-thrown-together refreshments, solid and liquid, and Manager Spittal and his henchmen, George McAnanama, "Jim" Wright and "Mose" Harris are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts. "Mose" is reported to have exclaimed, when figuring up the financial end, "Jumping Je—something or other, that's the first time I ever came out on the right side!" The Worcester crowd came in the most approved and up-to-date automobiles and seemed to enjoy their visit. Come again, Worcester! Come again!

Changes at the Springfield Union have come thick and fast during the past summer, no fewer than ten of the composing-room force having sought pastures new. The prevailing unrest is not entirely due to the war, either, though some of them are now with the colors. There is considerable dissatisfaction with working conditions and the excessive overtime resultant is beginning to be a burden, while not a few are of the opinion that more money can be earned in other spheres. This opinion is only partially correct; they can temporarily earn more, but what of the future? Government and war work certainly is booming just now and printers are getting scarce, but a word of warning should be passed along. The war will not last forever and the men holding on to their situations will be the gainers in the long run, for with the cessation of hostilities the men now with the federal forces will come back to their situations, and those who will be dropped from the gun shops will find hard work in "coming back."

To revert back to the Union force, however, W. F. Rooney started the ball rolling and migrated to Hartford, Sol Harris went to making arms or ammunition, Homer Miller joined the army and Bob Thayer left for Greenfield—he has since been drafted. Three resignations followed and after the smoke had cleared Tom Campion found himself working at the armory. Kenneth Campion joined the force that gets out the Republican and John Leary bettered himself at Holyoke. F. M. Barney, the monotype casterman, wandered from the same fold and is now at Plattsburg, looking for a commission. He will get it, too, for he is an ex-army man, having held a first lieutenancy in the Vermont national guard. Two or three new men have joined the force, but there should be room for two or three more.

Homer Miller, the first of our boys to reach the other side, has written a short note to Chairman O'Connor, of the Union chapel. He is "very much well" at the time of writing. He is literally at the front, though not yet on the firing line. His regiment is stationed where they can hear the roar of the big guns and see the flashes of some of them and note the aircraft flying aloft and the shelling of the planes. The village where he is billeted is merely a heap of ruins so far as houses are concerned, the work of the Hun. He desires THE JOURNAL, and it will be our business to see that he gets it.

Another one of our boys, H. J. McIntyre, is with the Seventy-ninth Cameron Highlanders, encamped near Winnipeg, Man. He writes that he is expecting to be on the water en route to England by the time this appears in type. He is attached to the machine-gun section, which should just suit Mac, who is the inventor of several improvements to rifle and machine-gun pieces, one of which is an electric sighting apparatus which permits of sighting a gun at night with extreme accuracy. The invention, I believe, has been taken up by the British government. He has recovered from a sixteen-week's hospital course, having been injured in a wrestling bout at the camp.

With extreme regret I have to announce the passing of Nicholas T. Samble, for thirty-four years assistant foreman at the Republican office. Mr. Samble literally died in harness, and was supposed to be on his annual vacation at the time of his illness. His death at the age of 68, on August 29, was a shock to all. Neuralgia of the heart was given as the cause. Modest and unassuming to a degree, "Nick" was beloved by all; indeed, it is believed that he had not an enemy in the shop, a rare distinction for a printerman holding a responsible position. Born in Cornwall, England, he emigrated at an early age, and his first experience in this country was on the Omaha Bee. He had also worked in Chicago and other western cities. A printer from A to Z, Mr. Samble had grown with the paper from a cub to almost the head of his profession, and as the resolutions passed by the chapel state, "he was an honor to his craft." James Forbes Wright, foreman of the ad alley, assumes charge now in the absence of the superintendent.

The regular meetings are on again and our delegates' reports from Manchester and Colorado Springs were listened to with interest at the September meeting. All report the usual good time, and President Dunham's report from the Springs was illuminative and inspiring. Now that Springfield is on the map as a regular attendant at International conventions there should be interest in the next election. The writer is not a candidate, but he urges that one of the workers be sent. Send the men who are working for the interests of the typographical union and then you will be sure of being well represented. There is good enough timber in the ranks of No. 216 to aspire for International office. I do not mean that President Scott or Secretary-Treasurer Hays need fear for their jobs, but there are minor offices such as trustee of the Home that could be filled very creditably from our ranks, and we ought to look for something in the near future. We are certainly not one of the big unions; neither are we one of the smallest. Our financial dealings with the International Typographical Union will compare favorably with any union of 200 members, and so, "let's aspire," even though we fail. 'Twere better to have tried and lost than never to have tried at all.

A. F. HARDWICK.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

Colorado Springs, still the home of the Home, but not the place of the next convention. Yes, the convention is now past history and we're now proud to consign it to the limbo of forgotten things. The blue hatband has disappeared from the streets of Colorado Springs and many of the wearers, as they regard its faded loveliness, probably wonder where this correspondent got the "beautiful lies" he told about the weather. True, it was cool enough, but entirely too much dampness for a "bone dry" state. But I'll tell you, strangers, it was not my fault. I ordered heavenly weather, but the weather man "threw me down." But, as I said in my poem in the souvenir, "When the last farewell was spoken," the pleasure of our meeting all turned to sorrow and pain. So I hope, dear friends, that whatever displeasure you met with while in our community, will also be laid away among the forgotten things, and that you will remember only the things that were pleasant.

Now for a little patting on the back of the committee that handled the affair. I was not a member of that committee, so I feel justified in saying some nice things about its members without appearing egotistical.

Never before in the history of the typographical union has a local made such a success with a souvenir—especially in a financial way. We had more pages of ads than any previous book, and the make-up and general layout was sure a masterpiece. Not that other locals in the past have not gotten out fine pieces of printing in the yearly book; they have all been works of art—but for a town of this size it is sure something of which to be proud.

Another thing to remember is that, while Los Angeles, a local of nearly 600 printers, had to put on a 1 per cent assessment for a year to pull off a convention, Colorado Springs, with a membership of only sixty-five or seventy, did it without an assessment and a little to spare. I don't think even our own members quite realize exactly what that committee has done in the matter. I don't think they understand the work, worry and exasperation that Reilly, as chairman; Woodworth, as secretary; O'Donnell, local secretary; Checly, president, and all the other members of the committee were up against from beginning to end of the past summer's work. If they did, I believe they would all give a unanimous vote of thanks for the services rendered. Mr. Reilly, in spite of everything, never lost his ever-present good humor, and his "Irish eyes were smiling" at all times. And when it came to managing Bill was sure there with the goods. Everything pulled off under his direction was (barring weather) an unqualified success.

Several members at the head of the affair received some beautiful presents, for which they were duly thankful. They showed better than words could express that the visitors really appreciated everything done for them, and that they left with warm spots in their hearts for the committee in particular and No. 82 in general. So I feel justified, on behalf of this union, in thanking the visitors and delegates alike for their co-operation and good will in making the 1917 convention an affair long to be remembered.

Another thing that helped make everything pass off well was the efforts of the board of trustees and Mr. and Mrs. Daley, of the Home, to entertain the visitors on Home day. Remembering some barbecues of the past, I was loth to attend this one. But when I decided to go anyway, I discovered that the barbecue had been misnamed, for it was not a barbecue at all, but a feast. It sure was some feed, and if any one left there without a distressed feeling about the waistline it was their own fault.

Taken all in all, I can't think that any convention ever held any place could possibly have surpassed the 1917 convention in Colorado Springs, either in entertainment, management or general good time, and I hope visitors and delegates alike will long remember the local with the small membership, but with the big heart.

A. ALAN BULKLEY.

OAKLAND, CAL.

The Oakland Enquirer has changed hands, G. B. Daniels, who had been proprietor for a score of years, having sold to W. W. Chapin, John Conners and Carl Brockhagen, well-known newspaper men. Even at this writing the paper has improved in appearance, the old country style of the paper having disappeared entirely and the new dress being more in conformity with modern times. W. W. Chapin has at different times been interested in newspapers in the north and east, while John Conners had been managing editor of the Oakland Tribune for a number of years. Carl Brockhagen is from San Francisco, though he has had vast experience in the newspaper field in the east.

The Oakland Tribune is moving into new and commodious premises in the heart of the city. The new building is up to date in every particular and will be a pleasant change from the dungeon in which it has been for so many years. Undoubtedly the change of management and the esprit de corps of the present Oakland Enquirer prompted this move.

It is generally rumored among the cognoscenti that the Enquirer will soon move into a new building, which will also be in the center of this busy metropolis.

A. J. Read, who had been connected with the Enquirer as superintendent until a year or so ago, and confidential man of G. B. Daniels during the last few years, has held a card in the local union for over thirty years, having been a member of the London Society of Compositors prior to his arrival in the United States. Under Mr. Read's regime the printers always fared well and it is with extreme regret that his association with the Enquirer is no more. Prior to his severing all connection with the Enquirer Mr. Read was the recipient of a Howard gold watch, with chain and fob, the latter a Masonic charm, from G. B. Daniels. He was also presented with a valuable gold ring, with a Masonic emblem and diamond, from the mechanical staff. J. A. Mulhall made the presentation on behalf of the chapel. Mr. Read was visibly touched and spoke in a broken voice of his past associations and his long term as a member of the typographical union. He leaves with the best wishes of all his associates.

Ed Hamilton, erstwhile Oakland correspondent of THE JOURNAL, has just returned from a hunting trip on which he was accompanied by his wife. Ed, in speaking of his trip, said he shot three bears and two deer and was taking them back to the cabin when he was accosted by a game warden. Ed had forgotten to take out a hunting license with the result—$25, and bears and deer confiscated.

No news has come from the special arbitration board anent the proposed increase in scale for San Francisco, which Oakland will adopt by agreement with the proprietors. It is known that Messrs. George A. Tracy and Leo Michelson, president and secretary of San Francisco Typographical Union, are looking after affairs on behalf of the union, and the fullest confidence should be placed in the ability and judgment of these men—that the best that can be obtained will be the outcome.

E. C. Stephens returned from the convention and reported to the union. His description of the sights was vivid, and his report of the convention was lucid.

A few of the Oakland members have been on the sick list. Al Bowen, of the Tribune chapel, has been confined to his bed for quite a spell with pneumonia and pleurisy, but is now on the road to recovery. Charlie Weeks, of the Enquirer chapel, underwent an operation, from which he has recovered, and has again taken up his daily routine. W. Asherman, who has been on an extended vacation, had a slight fall from which a serious fracture of the leg resulted. He is still a little limp, but is getting around fairly well. H. Heathcote, a job man, is very sick. He is still in the hospital. It is hoped that all these will have no ill effects from their unpleasant confinement.

Oliver Weakley has also been away for a couple of weeks—but not with sickness. He has been resting—just resting—that's all.

E. S. Evans, who was in the national army and who had been on guard duty for the army at a railway tunnel, suffered from exposure and died. He held a lieutenancy in the army and was a member of Oakland Typographical Union at the time of his untimely death.

Johnnie Roderick is back at the Enquirer helping Mannie and Sol get out their racing sheet. Johnnie always takes a vacation when the paper stops and works again when it resuscitates. Lucky Johnnie.

Seth Brown, president of Los Angeles Typographical Union, passed through Oakland on his way to Sacramento. Seth is a member of the state council of defense, being an appointee of Governor Stephens.

W. A. Snyder was down from Sacramento and visited friends, as did George Hanson, from Los Angeles.

Work in Oakland has improved and the subs are getting three to five days a week instead of one and two—that is, some of them—but when all the regulars return from their pleasant and unpleasant vacations things may be different.

Joe Rickard was elected to go to the state federation of labor convention at Sacramento. Joe will see that Oakland is represented, as he is a forceful speaker with a good personality and an abundance of good sense. He was unanimously elected.

The death of the mother of Mitchell Alexander has just been announced. Heartfelt sympathy is extended to "Mitch" in his sad bereavement by members throughout the United States, he being well known, having worked from New York and Chicago to the Pacific coast. Mrs. Alexander was of an advanced age at the time of her demise and leaves a grown family to mourn her loss.

Two well-known members of Oakland Union, who are interested in a mild way in Chinese lotteries, had a pleasant (?) experience recently when a chop suey restaurant was raided. These two "wise ones" were embroiled in the dragnet, but had enough gumption to order a light meal, and, after a grueling cross-examination, were allowed their liberty. The names of these two members are omitted by request. J. A. MULHALL.

CHICAGO, ILL.

At Humboldt park, Saturday, September 1, the Old-Time Printers' Association held its annual picnic. Many pioneer representatives of the craft were present, as well as a sprinkling of the younger generation. Peter Magnus Balken, the president of the organization, who carries his 84 years with a sprightliness that would do credit to the most youthful of apprentices, delivered an address of welcome, punctuating his remarks with a cane wrought from one of the timbers of the famous old Chicago wigwam in which Abraham Lincoln was nominated for president. A notable feature of the occasion was the presence of the United States Naval Training Station band from the camp in Grant park, which, under the direction of Bandmaster Edward M. Kennedy, himself a printer, enlivened the afternoon with patriotic and popular airs. Among the members and guests in attendance were noted Thomas E. Sullivan, for many years foreman of the composing room of the Chicago Tribune; William Mill, the indefatigable secretary of the association, who seems to grow younger as the years pass by; William C. Hollister, always busy in promoting the enjoyment of the attendants at any "doings" of the oldtimers; William A. Cahill, John Canty, Michael H. Madden, W. H. Bowne, Samuel B. Parker, Carl Richter, John Mann, John W. Stanton, E. M. Kerrott, H. P. Moody, Henry Wendorf, John Nestor, William Colborn, Frank Schock, J. H. Quadland, F. A. O'Shaughnessy and Fred Wilson. An interesting program of sports was run off, events and winners being as follows:

One-hundred-yard race for sailors from Grant park camp—First, Clarence Gilchrist; second, Henry Versteeg; third, Joseph Winkler.

Fifty yards, members Old-Time Printers' Association—First, J. H. Quadland; second, B. L. Beecher.

Twenty-five yards, members' wives—First, Mrs. R. MacLeod; second, Mrs. Jessie Smith.

One hundred yards, young men—First, Joseph Kennedy; second, Leroy Brown.

Fifty yards, boys 12 to 16—First, Wilford Griffin; second, Frank Stonesifer.

Fifty yards, girls 12 to 16—First, Genevieve Reusz; second, Jeannette Peebles.

Fifty yards, boys 8 to 12—First, Frank Furnivaw; second, Paul Stanton.

Twenty-five yards, boys 6 to 8—First, Arthur Shafer; second, James Peebles.

Twenty-five yards, girls 6 to 8—First, Lillian Berstein; second, Frances Schock.

Little tots, 3 to 6—First, Thomas Hughes Raymer.

The religious press of the country has organized to assist the Hoover food administration in the conservation of food resources, and a regular news service covering this work has been established. As joint executive for the conservation bureau and the denominational press the committee has selected Oliver R. Williamson, editor of the Continent, a Presbyterian publication. Mr. Williamson (we used to call him "Ollie" in the old hand days) was formerly a proofreader on the Daily News and is still a member of No. 16.

The seventh annual picnic of the employes of the Journal of the American Medical Association was held at Dellwood park, near Joliet, August 24. Special cars for the transportation of picnickers were provided by the office, the route being over the Joliet electric line. The event of the morning was a spirited baseball game between the composing room and the pressroom, which resulted in a score of 9 to 5 in favor of the compositors. The stars of the game were Dr. Fred Reis, Dr. Charles Notka and Dr. Paul Rommell. These eminent physicians, surgeons, rhinologists and otologists are all members of No. 16, and their friends are proud of their achievements in medicine as well as baseball. Three umpires—Dr. Charles Bracewell, Dr. Burton Williams and Dr. William J. Foley—were used up during the game, but it is believed all will eventually recover. These annual picnics are much appreciated by the employes, each of whom receives pay just as if he had "punched the clock."

A recent issue of the Chicago Herald contained a characteristic letter from Frank ("Whitey") Dundas, a member of the Sixth regiment, United States marine corps, then stationed at Quantico, Va. Other members of this regiment are Don T. Stewart, Carl J. Millard and Curtis T. Beecher, son of the writer. The last named has been promoted to a lieutenancy. By the time this reaches the eye of the reader the boys will in all probability have landed in France, as the regiment left Quantico about the middle of September for an unknown destination.

The annual baseball game between the pressmen-printers and engravers' teams of the Rosenow company was played at Lincoln park, Saturday, August 26. There is much rivalry between these teams, but the pressmen-printers have always managed to be on the long end. The latest game proved no exception, the pressmen-printers winning by a score of 22 to 9. After the game Mr. Rosenow, sr., presented the winners with a box of cigars.

It was a congenial bunch which recently returned from a two-weeks' outing at a camp on the banks of Lake Mendota, near Madison, Wis. This was the line-up—you can judge for yourself what kind of a time they had: Charles M. Fox, William F. Carville, George E. Ford, James Drummond, T. Burr Catlin, Frank Snow, Elmer Hess, Max Kronman, Edward F. Fanning, Allen Chandlee and D. C. Campbell.

The Union Printers' Bowling League opened its 1917-18 season Wednesday evening, September 19, at the Palace alleys, on Wabash avenue, near Randolph street. The league this year will be composed of twelve clubs, as follows: Bixby's, Gunthorp-Warren, Standard, Sears-Roebuck, Butler Bros., Daily Journal, Western Newspaper Union, Independents, Daily News, Searoco, A. N. Kellogg and probably Hedstrom-Barry. Should the last-named decide not to enter a team, another club will be selected to fill its place. There was a large attendance on the opening night, and brief addresses were made by officers of the union and of the league. Those in charge of the affairs of the league comprise the following: President, Clyde L. Hall; vice-president, H. A. Davidson; secretary-treasurer, J. E. Wagner, jr.; executive committee, L. K. Brillhart, Charles Pike and Ernie J. Zander.

Sunday morning, September 16, the Western Newspaper Union baseball team cinched the championship of the Chicago Union Printers' League, by winning their final game of the season, played with Gunthorp-Warren at Grant park. Early in the season the Western bunch acquired the habit of securing runs when runs were needed, and that this course was consistently pursued is amply attested by the standing of the team with eleven games won and two lost. The prizes, likewise the credit, will be distributed among the players as equally as possible. The final standing of the teams in the league is as follows:

	Won.	Lost.	Per Cent.
Western Newspaper Union	11	2	.846
Gunthorp-Warren	7	4	.638
Kenfield-Leach	7	3	.700
Rogers & Hall	5	7	.415
Butler Brothers	4	9	.300
Peterson Lino Co	2	11	.144

Arthur W. Stutes, a member of the job scale committee and one of the best-known printers in Chicago, has removed to Lansing, Mich., where he will be in charge of the Robert Smith Printing Company, a large concern which for years has handled the state printing of Michigan. The best wishes of his many friends will follow him.

While Organizer W. J. Griffin and wife were on a visit east Mrs. Griffin had the misfortune to fall on the rocks at Goat island, Niagara Falls, breaking her jaw and sustaining other minor injuries. Her numerous friends will be pleased to learn that she is well on the road to recovery.

William F. Houk, commissioner of labor of the state of Minnesota and a member of Minneapolis Typographical Union, was in Chicago the latter part of September for a brief visit.

Eugene J. Flynn, of Pittsburgh, was a welcome visitor at the Union Printers' club on his way back from the Colorado Springs convention.

Charles M. Fox, machinist on the night side of the Daily News, was the recipient of a wrist watch from his fellow employes on the occasion of his departure for Camp Grant.

E. E. Bessette, city salesman for the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, has been sent to an enlarged territory, covering Indiana and part of Kentucky.

Maurice F. Landers, of Belvidere, Ill., stopped over in Chicago recently for a few days on his return from a visit to the copper and iron country in the upper peninsula of Michigan.

Death list: Melvin D. Foor, August 11, suicide, at Rockford, Ill.; Joseph M. Blakely, August 11, struck by street car while riding a motorcycle; William J. Kemp, August 24; P. F. McClain, July 31, tuberculosis; John V. Zepf, September 13, tuberculosis.

Anthony J. Sharkey, of the Tribune, has joined the service as a bandsman in the Second Illinois engineers, and is now at Houston, Texas. "Tony" saw service on the frontier at the time of the Pershing punitive expedition.

A. S. Aitkens, known to nearly every newspaper man in Chicago, is about again after a severe siege of illness.

Two sons—William H. Madden, on his way to France with the coast artillery, and Edward F. Madden, at Camp Grant, Rockford—are the representatives of that sterling oldtimer, Michael H. Madden, in the fight for democracy.

Joseph I. Leigh, night foreman of the Daily News, is back at his desk after a vacation spent in New England and other parts of the east. James S. Morrison, of the ad force of the same paper, is also on the job again following a visit to Canada.

The Sears-Roebuck and Butler Brothers chapels, Saturday, August 25, inaugurated a get-together movement that will go down in the annals of Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 as one of the largest and most successful events of its kind ever attempted. On this occasion between five and six hundred members of the combined chapels, their families, sweethearts and friends participated in an outing at picturesque Fox River park, and there further cemented the ties of traditional friendship that has long existed among members of the two chapels.

The trip was made in chartered cars via the A., E. & C. electric line, through a realm replete in nature's beauty to the city of Aurora, and thence by trolley to the gates of the park. En route the Sears-Roebuck band of forty pieces contributed to the entertainment, and at the park furnished music throughout the day to the enjoyment of all. The youngsters were provided with crackerjack, whistles and numerous contrivances calculated to amuse them, while the ladies and misses received several souvenir mementos of the occasion.

The events were especially interesting and participated in by both young and old. Particularly interesting was the baseball game between the "Has Beens" of the Sears chapel and the "Never Wasers" of Butler Brothers. These old spavs, whose bones creaked at every move, put up a wonderful exhibit and demonstrated that age had not impaired their batting eyes, and the "pep" ever manifest in the old-time printer was there in abundance. The fray ended with a victory for the Butler Brothers outfit.

Immediately after the various races had been contested the regular "guys" of the two chapels played a game of ball, and here the Sears chapel gave the Butlers a fancy lacing.

There was dancing in the pavilion, spooning in the nooks, and a lot of real enjoyment for each and every one.

The venture was a financial as well as social success and no doubt will be repeated in another year.

LINCOLN, NEB.

No. 209 held a most interesting and instructive meeting Sunday, August 25, at which there was a very large attendance, considering the very warm day. President Eckert presided, and there was a full corps of officers present.

The following members have been granted cards: G. E. Locker, C. E. Romaine, Charles H. Ewing, James Wells, D. H. Duffy, L. L. Ingraham. The following have deposited cards: D. H. Duffy, Oliver Graf, Earl D. Spencer, Bernard A. Shrock, Pliny White, Wilber L. Strickler. The acceptance of the card of Pliny White was based on the proposition that when he resigns or leaves the job his card will be forfeited. He is plate make-up at the office of the Western Newspaper Union.

The union made its arrangements for the entertainment of the delegates to the state federation of labor, which met in this city September 11, 13, 14. A grand ball was given by the central labor union on the night of September 11. W. H. Creel and C. S. Eckert were the delegates to the convention from No. 209 and H. A. Brainerd and F. W. Hebbard, alternates.

G. E. Locker, a member of this union, who was sent to the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs a short time ago, writes that he has entirely recovered and would not return to Lincoln. The union granted him a traveling card and he will stay in the west.

Two of our members, H. A. Langenheim and A. C. Roberts, have begun the publication of a magazine to be known as the Motor Highway, and are having good success.

Work is good in this city and every printer is on the job. The daily papers have been crowded and could have used extra help if it were to be had, but the rush is now about over and we are settling down to normal.

HASTINGS, MICH.

Miss M. Elnora Barr and James R. Mason, both well known Hastings young people, were married at the Episcopal rectory on Wednesday evening, September 5, by Rev. D. R. Blaske. The groom's mother, Mrs. Anna D. Mason, and uncle, W. N. Chidester, acted as witnesses. The full Episcopal ring service was used.

A unique honeymoon outing was enjoyed by the bridal couple in a camp along Thornapple river, whose picturesque beauty the groom has done so much to perpetuate with his camera, and where canoeing, fishing and kodakery offer unexcelled opportunities for lovers of these sports. Mrs. Mason will continue to hold down the No. 14 at the Banner office. Mr. Mason was also an employe for several years in this office.

LEON MANNING.

WATERBURY, CONN.

Joseph Quinlan, a member of No. 329, died a little over a year ago, leaving an estate of nearly $5,000. An administrator was appointed and up to the present time the only money that has been paid in toward a settlement of the estate is the mortuary benefit of $400 of the International Typographical Union, which sum was sent on promptly from headquarters as soon as the courts had named the administrator. There is old-line and fraternal insurance, but it is held up over some technicality and the people who should have the money are deprived of the use of it. Don't let your union dues run behind, for the mortuary benefit comes, and comes promptly.

For the second time in our brief career of less than two decades we have a candidate on one of the tickets for mayor. He is Charles T. Peach, who heads the Socialist ticket, and undoubtedly before the October JOURNAL reaches Waterbury Mr. Peach will have surprised his contemporaries. Printers are natural politicians and more than one candidate of former campaigns has found it out.

Hubert Mitchell, of New York city, formerly of the Republican, was a recent visitor in town.

"Scotty" Merriles, of the Democrat, has quit printing and gone to work in one of the large brass factories, where the wages in these days of stress have attracted several printers and pressmen from their trades.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

John P. Keating has been chosen by the management of the Milwaukee Journal as foreman of the composing room, succeeding the late Mr. Williams.

David Weiss, Madison correspondent to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, who attends the university and prints as a side line, paid Milwaukee printers a visit.

William Benseman—the Pica man—says that there is only one member on the sick list—Fred Stuesse, Phœnix chapel, suffering from nervous breakdown.

D. L. Angell, of the Sentinel, paid friends a visit in the east and is in the harness again.

Fred Boughner, who was injured by a street car July 11, suffering with a broken back and other internal injuries, died September 11. His body was shipped to Chicago, where his family lives, for interment. He had been here only about two weeks ere his injury. He was about 41 years old. No. 23 extended all possible aid during his illness.

Recently, while listening to a speaker who was giving a "label boost talk," we were astonished to hear that seven women workers in a men's collar manufacturing establishment produced more of these articles than the approximately 3,000,000 union men can "devour," and that these workers made aprons in addition. There must be something wrong. Is it efficiency on the part of the women; or, are the union men to blame in not wearing union collars? If the latter is correct, it certainly is a serious crime, to keep organized workers unemployed while buying nonunion products. Take inventory of your stock—at once.

Labor day in Milwaukee was observed with a big parade of union men, who marched to Pabst park, where the annual picnic and fraternal day was held. There were about 125 No. 23 men in line, and the marchers covered about a stretch of two miles—about 12,000. Mayor Daniel W. Hoan, who issued a splendid Labor day proclamation, made the principal speech, which was characteristic of Dan's speeches on all occasions. It occurred to the writer, when viewing the army of marchers, what a beautiful, just and righteous world we could build if we but combined our power in a co-operative way, standing together solidly in our union, and no brother betray another; everybody doing his share and not saddling the work on a few; everybody attending his meetings to enable him to understand the problems of life; using our power along co-operative buying, thereby eliminating waste, as our sister organizations in foreign lands have already pointed the way; and thirdly, uniting, as we march, in one solid direction, to re-enforce our economic power of unionism by controlling the parliaments of the world to enact legislation in harmony with the ideals in life we seek to obtain.

Herbert Daum, after attaining the degree of a full-fledged machinist on the Leader, made a western tour and roamed in the vicinity of Salt Lake City the past two months. He became an enthusiast of the west and intends going back again after Uncle Sam lets him go. He returned for registration.

Ben Olson, machinist on the Leader until recently, has accepted a similar position on the Journal. Ben can keep the machines in tip-top order—at least, he proved it on the Leader.

"Bob" Lug, of the nimrod sport lovers, spent his vacation at the lake, but says ducks are scarce. "Bob" has an eagle eye—on the linotype as well as when sighting for game. Two ducks accompanied him home.

The newspaper scale has at this writing not been signed up with the employers. It appears, from what we can gather, that the boys will not be satisfied unless a substantial increase is received. We hear much dissatisfaction due to the high cost of living among the printers, and they maintain that even a good, stiff increase would still leave them short. They are very determined and will await the arbitration results.

Recently a grocer told a woman customer who was grumbling about high prices that union men were to blame. This item does not relate to printing, but it certainly does to printers. Four of the big meat and packing concerns had a combined profit of $15,559,534 as the average for the years 1911-12-13 (before the war). In 1916 these same firms had a combined profit of $49,113,085, or $33,550,562 more than the fair and normal profit in the three years above mentioned. Congress took $10,792,931.

Delegates to the convention made an interesting report at our last meeting, which was one of the largest in several years. Another meeting will be held next month, so come right along, boys.

Your correspondent would appreciate any items from the various chapels. Send them to my address, 2115 Galena street, or leave with Secretary Thomas, so that they may be included in the letter before the 17th of the month.

Cards deposited: Leo Goldberg, A. F. Guenther, George A. Higginbotham, Herbert Daum, V. Grady Hunt, Joseph A. Sturgeon. Cards withdrawn: T. J. Bradley, Leo Krause, A. F. Guenther.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

The charges brought by George McGinley against William Bowlen for an alleged attempt of the latter to take the former's position were withdrawn by McGinley at the September meeting, the complainant stating that when he became acquainted with the facts in the case he was convinced Mr. Bowlen had done nothing to warrant such action.

The Josephson Bros., who conduct a label shop on South Carolina avenue, under the name of the United Printing Company, have opened an office on Walnut street, Philadelphia, which they call the Progress printing shop.

Death invaded our ranks twice within a week when the Grim Reaper claimed Frank Kay and John Duke. Frank Kay, a charter member of Atlantic City Union, died on Tuesday, September 11, and was buried in Mt. Calvary cemetery, Pleasantville, on Saturday, the 15th. Mr. Kay was almost 60 years of age, but had not been able to work for a year or more, Bright's disease being the direct cause of death. He had held every office in the local union and took an active interest in the affairs of organized labor in general. He is survived by two sons, one of whom is serving in the United States navy, and one married daughter, from whose residence the funeral was held. Owing to Mr. Kay's total disability, application for a pension had just been filled out, but of course was not acted upon.

John Duke, whom every one of his acquaintances termed "Squire," died from the result of a fall at Somers Point on Thursday, September 13. Mr. Duke had a room at the hotel conducted by the father of his employer, of the Somers Point Record, and it was at the hotel where he fell down a flight of steps, fracturing his skull, broke a couple of ribs, collar bone and bruised himself in several places. He was picked up unconscious and rushed to the Atlantic City hospital for an operation, but he died soon after admission, without regaining consciousness. He was buried in Cape May, his boyhood home, on Sunday, the 17th. He is survived by a son, of this city, and a sister in Cape May, both married. Duke's quick wit and bright humor made him many friends, especially among the organized labor class, with whom he mingled.

A. H. Satterlee, of the Ocean City Ledger, has taken a position on a machine in Vineland, the Ledger having suspended publication following the death of one of the proprietors.

Owing to the deaths of Kay and Duke, the annual picnic which was to have been held on Sunday, September 23, was called off for this season.

Labor day seemed to be visiting day here for printers who had formerly worked here, the writer having had a call from Eugene Martin and Walter Lull, both of Philadelphia; Dick Green and William Donovan, of New York.

Edward Hering, of the Daily Press, was the first printer in this city to leave for the army, he having been drafted, and is now in Wrightstown camp. The boys of the Press sent him away with 500 cigarettes, a present which "Dutch" appreciated to the limit.

Victor Stickel, of No. 6, spent some time at the Fishermen's hotel in Margate City, and left for New York on Labor day. EVAN T. SCHERRER.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

The recently completed St. Louis Post-Dispatch building, at the northeast corner of Twelfth and Olive streets, is one of the most imposing and artistic structures in the west. It is eight stories, of stone, steel and concrete, standing at the civic center of the city, between the wholesale and retail districts, and in close proximity to the city hall, Central library, Union station and principal hotels. It is a great plant, built to make the Post-Dispatch a greater newspaper. The building and its equipment represent an investment of $1,250,000, aside from the ground value.

The lot has a frontage of 126 feet 9 inches on Twelfth street and 100 feet 3 inches on Olive street. The basement is nineteen feet below the sidewalk level, and the sub-basement, 50 x 70 feet in dimensions, is 37 feet below the sidewalk.

The hight of the eight-story structure, from the sidewalk to the top of the stone balustrade surrounding the roof, is 140 feet, or nearly the hight of the eleventh story on most buildings.

The first floors, except for a small area of first and second floor space and the basement and sub-basement, are occupied by the various departments of the Post-Dispatch. Of a total floor space of 128,130 square feet, 85,565 square feet are occupied exclusively in the publishing of this great newspaper.

The exterior design is, in the lower part, Ionic, following the style of the temple of the Erechtheum in Athens. The two upper stories and the balustrade are on Corinthian lines.

By changes in the exterior architecture of the seventh and eighth stories, four more stories can be added whenever required.

A well 865 feet deep has been sunk under the sidewalk at the northwest corner. For more than 800 feet this well had to be drilled through solid rock. The water drawn from the well will serve as a reserve supply.

Nature, which wrought the veining in the marbles of Italy, Greece and America, was the decorator of the elevator lobby and business office. Instead of depending on carved designs, the decorative plan has been carried out chiefly by the inlaying of rare colored marbles. Thirteen varieties of marble are used in the lobby, and the work, as a whole, is an example of the thirteenth century Italian renaissance style, as exemplified in the Palace of the Doges in Venice.

The first floor is a place of public resort, where the general business is conducted. On the second floor are the circulation and auditing departments and the telephone division. On the third floor are the editorial, news and art departments. On the fourth floor is the composing room, and on the fifth floor are the photographic, photo-engraving and rotogravure departments.

Communication between the various floors and departments of the Post-Dispatch, and between the office and the outside business and residence community is afforded by exchanges which operate ninety-six Bell and sixty-one Kinloch instruments. Seventeen trunk lines run between the Bell (Olive) exchange and the Post-Dispatch office, and fourteen trunk lines between the Kinloch (Central) exchange and the Post-Dispatch office. There are forty-two telephones for the exclusive handling of want advertisements, and on Saturday nights, when the influx of want business is greatest, this department will be handled as a separate exchange, so as not to interfere with the use of telephones by the news department.

The building is an inspiring example of what can be done by a big business establishment to provide healthful working quarters for its employes. It represents the highest ideals in sanitation and hygiene. The striking features from the standpoint of one interested primarily in the public health are the splendid lighting and ventilation, and the remarkable amount of air space allowed for each employe. The allowance of air space, in proportion to the number of employes, is greater than in any building in St. Louis. This is accomplished by the unusual hight of the rooms and the avoidance of any crowding of the workers. Sunlight and fresh air are nature's greatest disinfectants. They minimize the danger of infection—a danger which always exists in some degree where men work together indoors. The amount of sunlight and fresh air is little less than wonderful. The special ventilating and air-washing machinery in the basement is the last word in appliances of this sort. Its value will be shown in the winter months, when ordinary ventilation methods do not always suffice for supplying fresh air and comfortable temperature at the same time. The toilet facilities and shower baths are of the very latest pattern. It is evident, in every part of the building, that the health, comfort and safety of employes have been the first consideration.

The first impressions one feels on any floor are those of roominess and cleanliness. On all four sides the building is constructed with a view to promoting the largest possible passage of air and light. The ceilings are unusually high, large windows occupying every inch of space not necessary for the support of the building, the windows on the north and east side being of fire glass to prevent fire sweeping into them from an adjoining building. In addition to an unusually large amount of natural light and ventilation the workrooms are finished in white tile or terra cotta work, and a complete system of inverted electric lighting installed. There is only one dark room, and that is the one naturally in which photographs are developed.

The composing room is on the fourth floor, where more employes are required to use their eyes closely than in any other part of the building. Therefore, light has been the thing chiefly sought. The walls and pillars are of white tile, and daylight suffices for daytime work on practically the entire floor. The proofroom, with metallic desks at a convenient slope, are near the south windows. In the center of the room is the copy-cutter's capacious desk, with pneumatic tubes to different parts of the building. Wire copy and proof carriers constantly run around the room to the various departments. Matrices are shot down a chute to the stereotyping department in the basement. The thirty-one linotype machines were taken from the old building and installed in the new, all in perfect running order, in one day, making quite a record for speed in moving and mechanical construction. Of this number nineteen news machines are on the east side and twelve ad machines on the west side. Here are to be found the latest devices in the non-distribution system—three casters, metal racks for storing sorts, etc. On this floor, also, is the job printing department, with all the necessary type, two Gordon presses, paper cutter and a liberal stock of supplies. The type racks, turtles and other make-up appliances are entirely new and are situated in the center of the room. For the personal comfort of all employed on this floor are bubbling fountains, steel lockers, shower baths and the most complete toilet arrangements.

Hugh I. McSkimming is the foreman, with Gordon Servant, assistant day foreman; Frank Horton, ad foreman, and P. C. McMillan, night foreman.

In the basement are the five Hoe octuple presses. Each has a capacity of 11,200 pounds of paper, or eight of the great rolls, and a capacity of 4,000 pounds of ink and 3,200 pounds of stereotype plates. The five presses combined can print 360,000 sixteen-page papers an hour, or 180,000 thirty-two-page papers. Five ten-horsepower motors serve to start them, and five of eighty horsepower carry them to their full speed. The presses are controlled by push buttons on the presses operating switchboards located on the balcony above the pressroom. The color press, standing by four of the octuple presses on the Twelfth street side of the building, prints in seven colors and has an output of 17,500 papers an hour.

The storeroom for paper has a capacity of 1,500 full-size rolls of paper—enough for the publication of 7,500,000 sixteen-page papers.

Every precaution has been taken for the safety of employes. It is one of the few modern buildings with an absolutely safe inside fire escape—the kind that does not get obstructed and is not affected by bad weather. This fire escape is in addition to other adequate exits, and it is accessible from each floor. This is the most reliable escape which can be provided, is smokeproof as well as fireproof, and is of adequate size to afford safe exit for all employes.

In a limited amount of space it is impossible to describe fully this new home. Suffice to say, we know of no newspaper building the equal of the Post-Dispatch. Taking into consideration light, sanitary conditions, architecture and construction, occupying such a conspicuous position as it does, it is, indeed, a public ornament which can be pointed out to visitors with pride by St. Louisans.

It was with deep regret we heard of the death on Monday, August 27, of L. L. Sawtell, of the Republic composing room, at the age of 62 years. Mr. Sawtell had been a continuous member of the organization for thirty-four years and had served on various committees, principally the executive committee, of which he was a member at the time of his death. Having served with Lide Sawtell on several committees of No. 8, I can testify to his ability and willingness to at all times devote his best efforts in behalf of No. 8. This union has, indeed, sustained a severe loss in the death of our friend. The funeral was held Thursday morning at 10 o'clock from Mullen's undertaking parlors, Sarah and St. Louis avenues, thence to the Missouri crematory, President Hertenstein making the address. Resolutions were adopted by the Republic chapel and No. 8.

The following letter has been received from Miss Mabel Wells, of St. Louis, now at the Home, and who expressed herself to the delegates from No. 8 as being well pleased with the treatment she is receiving there:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 16, 1917.

To the Members of St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8:

DEAR FRIENDS—Permit me to acknowledge receipt of the gift which our delegates distributed to the St. Louis residents of the Home.

I have improved since leaving St. Louis, and have gained eight pounds.

With grateful appreciation of your kindness, I am,

Fraternally yours,

MABEL WELLS.

Hal Olive has purchased a canoe and spends part of his leisure time on the Meramec river and part "chasing the ponies." Some sport!

The following have been admitted to the Home: Herman C. Haysler, August 26, tuberculosis; Herman Mulock, August 31, rheumatism.

Our old friend, "Bill" Edwards, was very conspicuous at all the sessions of the International Typographical Union convention. He seems to grow younger every year.

The following supplementary agreement has been entered into between the St. Louis Newspaper Publishers' Association and our union:

It is agreed between the employer (or employers) and the union, parties to this contract, that the situations of employes who enlist or are enrolled for service in time of war may be filled during their absence by the foreman of the department in which they are employed. Provided, that upon reporting for duty the situations formerly held by these employes shall be restored to them. This provision shall not be construed as requiring the employer to restore a situation which may have been abolished through a reduction in the force, as provided in section 121 of general laws of the International Typographical Union for 1916, the understanding being that employes covered by this provision shall suffer no loss of priority rights or standing during their absence. If in restoring apprentices to their situations the total number employed shall exceed the number allowed by the local contract, the parties to this agreement will exert every reasonable effort to make provision for any apprentices who may be displaced. The above provisions are not intended to require a foreman to fill the situation of an employe who is absent for the reason above given or to compel the reemployment of any employe who because of any physical disability may be unable to perform the duties required in the situation formerly held by him.

On account of considerable objection from employers to the requirement of the contract which necessitates apprentices in the fifth year of their apprenticeship to attend school one day a week at the employer's expense, the union has agreed to waive this portion of the contract when request is made by an employer, thus making attendance at school in the fifth year optional with the employer. An apprentice in the last half of the fifth year receives $20 per week of five days in the shop and one day in school. In other words, he receives more than the journeyman scale for five days' work. While this matter is in the hands of the scale committee, it is reasonable to suppose there will be no objection.

We are pleased to announce the recovery from a severe illness of George Windegger, foreman of the Globe-Democrat, he having returned to work after an enforced idleness of about three weeks. During his convalescence he spent a few days on the Gasconade and at Beaver Dam fishing. He reports the sport was all he could wish.

"Billy" McKenzie has succeeded Jim Foster as a regular on the Post-Dispatch night side, Foster having drawn a traveling card.

George Buerkle has returned to his duties as foreman at Woodward & Tiernan's after a two-weeks' vacation, pleasantly spent in visiting his friends and fishing. We wonder which is the most arduous for George—work or a vacation.

Right away there is jealousy because a Globe-Democrat machinist has run twenty-seven machines for twenty-five years with a 10-cent work bench, while the monotype machinist, with only three casters, just installed, has a thousand-dollar bench. He should worry. He still has a lathe.

At this writing the following members are on the sick roll: J. T. Leonard, Al Flori, Frank Freese, Omar Tweddle, C. A. Howell, G. Kimbrell, E. J. Kreppelt, J. M. Young, G. E. McIntyre, C. E. Robbins and M. P. Gannon.

The following additional members have notified Secretary Woods of having joined some branch of the army or navy since our last report: James M. Drakeford, A. C. Hudson, Dr. H. D. Carley (lieutenant), A. B. Kirchoff, Earl H. Schatzman, J. R. Blackwell, Robert Kaplan, J. J. Kelleher, J. A. Ehrler and Joe Costello.

We regret to report the death of F. B. Belcher, which occurred September 8, at the Home in Colorado Springs. Mr. Belcher was initiated at Jackson, Miss., June 12, 1911. He deposited a Houston (Tex.) traveling card with No. 8 on August 26, 1915. Burial was in Concordia cemetery, this city.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Coyell and Miss Nellie Scanlan, of Buffalo, N. Y., visited a few days with Vice-President John P. Walsh on their return from the convention at Colorado Springs.

There is a possibility of the Western Newspaper Union discontinuing its daily news service, which is the last piece of work done that differed in any way from work done in job offices in St. Louis, and being classed as a job office purely.

Chairmen in job offices should be careful at all times to see that journeymen have either a current working card or a permit issued by Secretary Woods, and especially during a busy season.

Gerard Kimbrell, employed at the Stewart Scott Printing Company, who has been ill since May 26, was able to return to work on September 10. William ("Bill") Jones, well known to the older members of No. 8, occupies a cot in the city hospital. He got between a street car and an auto. Result, a broken right arm. "Jim" Young, for many years with the Post-Dispatch and now on the pension list, has been ill during the past several weeks. Felix Fremont, of the Republic chapel, has been sick the last four weeks. His friends wish him a speedy recovery.

We read with pleasure of the reappointment of our president, Charles Hertenstein, as chairman of the Efficiency Board of St. Louis, with a substantial increase in salary.

Secretary George B. Woods spends his vacation a day or so at a time during the dull part of the month. Fishing is his particular delight, being very successful at this sport.

The Globe-Democrat and Republic bowling club opened the season September 4 at Gus Heitz's, Sixth and Market streets.

Frank Hill, Barney Chittick and William Redfield were in St. Louis exploiting the intertype model C during the publishers' convention. Three of a kind.

Charles Daniels and Clyde Simpson recently returned from a successful fishing trip on the Gasconade. They report wonderful catches.

Working with new type continually in the cases is unquestionably hard on the eyes. We wonder why some enterprising person does not produce a metal without the gleam that can be used by linotype and monotype machines.

WILLIAM BRADBURN.

Henry Nordmann, of the Post-Dispatch chapel, and Miss E. G. Lorenz were recently married in SS. Peter and Paul's Catholic church. A handsome set of silver was presented the young couple by the members of the chapel.

On Labor day the Post-Dispatch was visited by Archbishop John J. Glennon and Mgrs. Tallon and Tammerath. When the archbishop was asked for his opinion of the plant he replied "beautiful." "Cardinal" Gibbons showed the distinguished visitors how the model 9 is manipulated.

T. L. Spillane and Miss May Kenny were joined in wedlock at the Visitation Catholic church during the month. "Tommy" and bride were visitors to the convention at Colorado Springs. The Post-Dispatch chapel presented the newly-weds with a beautiful silver set.

The Post-Dispatch is now housed in its new home, and it is indeed a pleasure to work in the composing room. Nondistribution is the order; no scarcity of material, plenty of light, air and room, sanitation perfect, shower baths, washed air; in fact, there is everything installed to make life in a composing room worth while. To use the words of Mr. Barnett, the architect, "the most complete job I have ever handled—more complete than the St. Louis cathedral." In this case it can well be stated that the Post-Dispatch is "first in everything." At a meeting of the Post-Dispatch chapel held on August 28 the following was presented by Jacob Rau and adopted unanimously:

Be it Resolved, That the Post-Dispatch chapel congratulates the management on the completion of the magnificent new home now occupied by St. Louis' foremost newspaper, and that we hereby extend our thanks for the consideration shown to the members of this chapel in making the surroundings in which they labor second to none; in providing a room which supplies all the comforts and requirements for an ideal composing room, exceeding the wildest dreams of the printer of a quarter of a century ago. Be it further,

Resolved, That we offer assurances of our appreciation of the evidences of good will and fellowship shown in the arrangement of the building and express the hope that this feeling of friendship and good will between publisher and printer may continue, and that as time goes on the ties of a common interest may bind us still closer together.

A copy of the foregoing was mailed the management, and the following replies were received by Chairman Schell:

R. C. Schell, Chapel Chairman Post-Dispatch Composing Room:

DEAR SIR—The Post-Dispatch is very gratified to receive your letter of August 28, in which you convey the resolutions of the Post-Dispatch chapel on conditions in our new composing room. Please be assured that the feelings of friendship which the resolutions express are genuinely and cordially reciprocated by the management of the paper. It was not only a duty, but a pleasure, for the Post-Dispatch to give its valued workmen the best conditions possible for the pursuance of their labors.

With kind personal regards,

Sincerely yours,
B. E. BRADLEY,
Assistant General Manager.

NEW YORK, September 11, 1917.

Robert Cox Schell, Chairman Composing Room, Post-Dispatch Chapel, St. Louis, Mo.:

MY DEAR MR. SCHELL—Please accept and express to the members of the chapel my thanks for your kind letter of recent date. All of us concerned in the management of the Post-Dispatch are delighted to feel that we now have a real composing room, and that the men in that room are pleased with it.

Faithfully yours,
JOSEPH PULITZER, JR.

The management of the Post-Dispatch presented the chapel with a beautiful banner for Labor day, and it was carried in the parade. The banner cost $45.

Frank Short, for several years a member of the Post-Dispatch composing room, is now at Newport, R. I., in the service of Uncle Sam. Frank volunteered and received two weeks' pay from the Post-Dispatch. "Short Sport" said there was too much Irish in him to be caught in the "draft."

President Hertenstein visited the Post-Dispatch building and said it beats anything that he has ever seen in the composing room line. "Charlie" has been in quite a few in his travels.

The writer of these notes served his time in Europe and traveled through the greater part of the United States, but must admit that there is nothing at the present time to compare with this wonderful plant. W. J. GIBBONS.

On Monday, July 16, 1917, Postmaster Colin M. Selph, of the St. Louis postoffice had assembled before him about 300 employes of the office, representing practically every grade of the service. These employes were called before Postmaster Selph for the purpose of commending them on their meritorious work and announcing to them that the department had approved his recommendation for their promotion to higher grades.

In breaking this very welcome news to the employes assembled, Postmaster Selph, during the splendid address which he delivered, assured all present that it afforded him as great pleasure to inform them of their promotions as it did them to receive the information; that it was his policy to promote efficient employes without regard to politics and he impressed the fact that under his supervision there is always room at the top and that merit will win where he has anything to say.

Among those who were so fortunate as to not only share in this large number of promotions, but to enjoy the pleasure and encouragement produced by his interesting and instructive remarks, were two members of Typographical Union No. 8, Joe Costello and the writer. This, particularly, is worthy of mention when it is known that three and a half years ago, when Postmaster Selph took charge of the St. Louis postoffice, he found only two card members in the printing department; there are now seven such members and 100 per cent chapel. This is not all he has done for us. He has taken us from quarters surrounded on all sides by filth and dirt and provided quarters equipped with adequate facilities in one of the most pleasant and desirable sections of the building, which is not surpassed, if equaled, by any printery for sanitation and comfort. All of these things were done under his personal supervision, for he never overlooks an opportunity to add to the comfort and convenience of the printers and make their surroundings both cleanly and sanitary. What he has done for us he has done for all branches of the service. He properly insists upon good, efficient service and never fails to reward those who respond to this just requirement, as indicated in the promotions to which I have referred. PHILIP S. SIEGEL,
Chairman Postoffice Chapel.

OTTAWA, CANADA.

The biggest thing in Ottawa printerdom, as well as in labor circles at large, locally, has been the sessions of the Dominion Trades Congress, which met in St. Patrick's hall September 17 to 22. Some 300 delegates participated, including British and American fraternal delegates. Possibly the two most important pieces of legislation were the pronouncements regarding conscription, and the election of representatives of Canadian workers at an international conference which shall be called by the British Trades Congress to ascertain the exact aims of the war and the terms laid down for the restoration of peace and the conclusion of the European war. Following is the pronouncement of the congress, as presented by the committee, and ratified:

In 1915 the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, at the annual convention held in Vancouver, declared an unqualified opposition to conscription as a method of military enlistment. Last year, at Toronto, the same resolution was reaffirmed in all its emphasis. Since then the question of conscription for Canada has agitated the public mind to an unprecedented degree. Sections of the press and numerous public bodies have argued strongly in favor of the adoption in Canada, at this juncture, of that method of securing men to fill the ranks of the Canadian forces for overseas service. In fact, within the past few months, the issue has been before parliament and a most drastic measure, in that connection, has been debated and carried through the commons and senate. That measure is now law and, as such, contains provisions that impose heavy penalties upon all and sundry who make use of any form of opposition to the principle that might frustrate the carrying into effect of the act now in existence. While the congress can not stultify itself to the degree of either withdrawing or contradicting this year its firm and carefully thought out views on the question of conscription, as embodied in the resolutions of 1915 and 1916, still under our present form of government, we do not deem it right, patriotic, or in the interests of the labor movement or the Dominion of Canada, to say or do anything that might prevent the government of Canada from obtaining the result they anticipate in the raising of reinforcements for the Canadian expeditionary forces, by the enforcement of the law.

This congress is emphatically opposed to any development in the enforcement of this legislation which will make for industrial conscription, or the interference with the trade union movement, in the taking care of the interests of the organized workers of this dominion.

A very enjoyable program was carried out in the intervals between sessions, and No. 102 was able to meet with the visiting typos from the various represented cities.

James B. Steacy, age 49 years, died last month and his remains were taken to Perth for burial, in Elmwood cemetery. The deceased was an employe of the Ottawa Free Press for a number of years, and later worked at the government printing bureau. He never fully recovered from an attack of paralysis suffered in 1914, and is survived by a widow, one son, four daughters and two brothers.

The sympathy of the membership is extended to Fred Gooden, of the Evening Journal, on the death of his mother, Mrs. Mary Gooden, who passed away at the age of 72 years. Mrs. Gooden was born in Ireland, but had been a resident of the capital for the past fifty years. The chapel sent a floral tribute. Interment was made at Beechwood.

George Drever, who is one of our members battling for freedom and democracy, has been listed among the wounded. This is the second time George has arrested a Hun bullet, and we sincerely trust that he may speedily recover.

A. E. SHEPPARD.

BROCKTON, MASS.

The boys have gone to camp and three members of No. 224 are among the national army at Ayer, William H. Mahoney, of the Times, being added to the list published last month. While the boys will find it somewhat different than slinging type, we predict that they will give a good account of themselves when the time arrives. Next month I intend to give the addresses of each member of the union in the service, in order that the members who remain at home may do their bit by writing the boys in the army. Prepare now to write a few letters during the coming winter.

The printers of Brockton are watching with interest the struggle between the boot and shoe workers of Lynn and the manufacturers. Locked out since last April for no apparent reason, the workers have stood admirably together and have resisted overwhelmingly all attempts of the manufacturers to break their spirit or their union. It seems a shame that in this day of arbitration and conciliation a small body of men can advise 12,000 workers that unless they meet the demands laid down for them they can either secure a new job or starve. But they are doing neither in Lynn, and more success to them.

Harris Brown, of the Enterprise, has enlisted in the photographic department of the British aviation corps and expects to sail early in November to take up his new duties. He carries with him the best wishes of a host of friends throughout New England.

Although the election of officers is still a couple of months away, the political pot has commenced to hum and already there are avowed candidates in the field for the higher offices, who are only waiting the psychological moment to announce their aspirations. The election of officers, which in the past has been a cut-and-dried affair, will this year show signs of being both vigorous and interesting.

CLIFFORD B. MAIN.

SASKATOON, SASK.

Trade in this "wonder city" of the west has been exceedingly brisk all summer, and even at the present time, which is considered a slow month, business has been above the average year. All the boys are working full time, with no subs on the boards.

The Star baseball aggregation took in the Labor day sports at Regina, and while there defeated the Post team by a good score. The chairman of the Star chapel made a rather unusual report at the last meeting—that every one had a good time and returned to town perfectly sober.

Bert Humble has returned from a six-weeks' trip east. "Hiram" Walker left last month for Winnipeg, his place on the Star being taken by Mike Morrissey. F. J. McClosky, formerly of Minneapolis and Winnipeg, is a late arrival at the Phœnix, holding down a machine on the day shift. George Bradford, formerly of the Star, who took a traveler last month, has returned and is now machinist on the Phœnix.

Joe Flynn and "Bill" Weatherley, of the Phœnix, created the sensation of the season by quietly getting married on September 4, the young ladies in the affair being Miss Viola McArthur and Miss Marie McLaughlin. The latter was employed in A. M. Jones' printery before deciding to become the bride of "Bill."

We extend congratulations to D. K. Knott, of Edmonton, president of the Western Canada Conference, on his election to the position of International Typographical Union representative for Alberta. Dan will make a first-class representative for that jurisdiction.

The many friends of "Spot" Northmore, formerly a member of this local, will be pleased to learn that he has at last settled down and become a good citizen of some burg, and has chosen for this purpose the thriving little town of Champaign, Ill. A letter to the secretary announced this intention and was accompanied by a splendid picture of himself and bride. He still holds out a desire to be back with the boys in Saskatoon.

R. J. MOORE.

NEW ENGLAND TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

Most of our locals have resumed their monthly meetings after the summer suspensions, and reports reaching headquarters indicate that plans are being perfected to launch a number of organization campaigns in various sections of the jurisdiction during the fall and winter. There are a number of printers in New England who are competent and can be induced to join the typographical union, and it is the duty of each and every individual member to assist the local organization committee in improving our position in this jurisdiction. Should the war continue very long it will be difficult to procure union men and women to fill the places of those taken in the draft or who enlist in the service. During the past two months we found it impossible in two instances to furnish union help for employers whom we had agreements with. If we are to continue along this line, it will be necessary to take men from positions now held by them in offices with which we have been unable to negotiate agreements. You are protecting your own situation and assisting your organization when you assist in seeking applications of competent non-members. That it pays to be prepared has been ably demonstrated to us on many occasions.

New Bedford Union has negotiated a supplemental agreement to its newspaper scale providing for a scale of prices and working conditions for apprentices. The agreement provides that applicants must submit to an examination by the committee on apprentices of No. 276, and must be acceptable to both the employer and the union before being registered as an apprentice. The apprentice must also submit to an examination every six months before the committee on apprentices and a representative of the employer. Beginning with the third year the scale provides that apprentices must receive not less than $10 per week; fourth year, $12; first half of fifth year, $14; second half of fifth year, $18. The night rate is to be $2 per week above the day rate.

T. L. H. Anderson, secretary of Pawtucket Union for the past ten years, has resigned from the Times force, where he held a situation in the ad department for eleven years, to accept the position of advertising manager of Shartenberg's, the largest store in Pawtucket. "Larry" has a host of friends among the printing fraternity throughout Rhode Island who will be pleased to learn of his advancement and wish him success on his new "sit."

Lynn Union has negotiated a new newspaper scale calling for an increase of $1 per week. The contract covers a period of two and one-half years, July 24, 1917, to January 24, 1920.

Patrick F. Malone has succeeded John J. Scully as foreman of the Fall River Globe. Mr. Scully was in the employ of the Globe for twenty-five years.

The boost-the-label committee of Worcester Union is doing some excellent work for the printing craft in the "Heart of the Commonwealth." The committee reports that the printing for the Plaza, one of Poli's theaters in Worcester, will be done in Worcester hereafter.

West Warwick Union was beginning to feel a little depressed, so Representative Dallas was sent there to look over the situation. A new set of officers were elected and a little ginger will be injected periodically, which will revive the local. Joseph Noel is the new president and John B. Wilcox will act as secretary-treasurer.

New London Union has negotiated a new newspaper scale calling for an increase of $1.50 per week for the first year, with $1 more for the second and third year the contract is in force. This will bring the day scale to $24 per week and make the night rate $26.

Vice-President Miles has been appointed a member of the public market commission of the city of Hartford by Mayor Hagerty. In commenting editorially upon the selection of the new members of the commission the Hartford Press has the following to say in reference to Vice-President Miles:

> The organized working people of the city, who are the most insistent in demanding a public market, have a direct representative among the mayor's appointees in the person of Oscar A. Miles, secretary of Hartford Typographical Union, and one of the best-known organized labor men in Hartford.

William A. Crockett, a member of Hartford Union, died at the Union Printers Home August 26.

James Lynch, owner of the Springfield Tribune, has leased the Daily News Job Print, of Springfield, for a term of five years.

Providence Union reports the largest number of applications received during the past two months that has ever been recorded during peace times in typo circles by No. 33. This is an encouraging start for the organization committee, which contemplates a big drive, starting the first of October.

The Chicopee Journal Publishing Company, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., has been added to the list of union label offices. This office is under the jurisdiction of Springfield Union.

Start your organization campaigns immediately, and make it possible to again report at the North Adams convention that we still lead all other state and district organizations, in affiliated unions, in membership and in organization work.

Hit the Mohawk Trail in June, 1918.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

There was a big crowd at the September meeting in the hope that the scale matter would be taken from the time copy hook and made regular copy—in fact, rush. But there was nothing doing. This time it was Mr. Clark who was out of town. Somehow, Mr. Clark is always cast to represent the genus capri in these differences of opinion as to what constitutes a decent wage, although it begins to look as if Bennett, of the Courier, was in training for the part. However, any one of them can put up a brand of dilatory tactics that would make him eligible for the United States senate, even as a sub for LaFollette. There was plenty of work to do, including a number of initiations, ex-Delegate Chartrand's son among them. Chairman Schmidt, of the outing committee, made a very gratifying report, showing that over $80 had been cleared. (Business of praise and thanks.) Delegates Coyell and Beilman gave a very interesting report of the work of the convention (more thanks) and were instructed to give expression to No. 9's appreciation of the courtesies extended by Denver Union, as well as by No. 82. Frank Chute presented a resolution, which was adopted, endorsing the candidacy of David E. Peugeot, a member of the Express chapel, for judge of the city court. Peugeot made a very nice speech expressing his gratitude for the endorsement and told of some of the reforms in court procedure he hoped to effect if elected, one of them being a change in the custom of spending a day's time over a trivial case involving a small amount of property and fifteen minutes to sending a couple of men to the penitentiary for six months. Proper steps were taken to insure the good standing of those members who are doing their bit in the present crisis. Some one with a poison pen and protoplasmic morals has been sending anonymous postcards to the secretary, in which he finds much fault with the alleged sins of omission and commission of the president. Maybe the writer was at the meeting. If he were not he missed something that might do him good; and then again it might not.

Then came special meeting No. 1, at which the publishers made a proposal that received the scanty consideration it deserved. Special meeting No. 2 had better luck. At least the proposition called for discussion even if it was rejected by a big majority. This put a difficult job on the hands of Representative-President Kinskey, but the dual monarch was equal to the occasion, and at special No. 3 a scale was presented and adopted that gave general satisfaction. It calls for a $3 a week increase, a compromise on the question of the back pay and a three-year contract.

ical Union, died suddenly as the result of a stroke of apoplexy after leaving the special meeting on September 16. He was treasurer of No. 9 for a couple of years in the nineties, held the editorial chair in the American Press Association for some years and had worked in most of the offices in the city at some time or other. Mr. Gash had no relatives in Buffalo and the body had been taken to the morgue before Secretary McLaughlin was notified of his death, when it was removed to an undertaker's parlors and held until the arrival of his nephew from Brooklyn. Burial was at Lockport.

John McRae, who has been sub machinist here for some time, made a try for Canadian aviation service, but was rejected on account of his heart action, so he came back to Buffalo, built an airplane of his own and is said to be trying it out "somewhere in Canada." He has a brother with the forces in France.

Dell Angell, now of Milwaukee, stopped off on his way back from a numismatic convention in the east to look up some of his old friends. He got away too soon to have a glimpse of the medal specially made and presented by the Courier chapel to Fred Schmidt in recognition of distinguished services.

The Buffalo Bond Corporation is flooding the city with printed matter in an effort to induce us to buy real estate. No fault to be found with the printing except that it is done in Chicago. Also it is mailed from there, thus making Uncle Sam pay the freight. Really, Mr. Fiske ought to get busy.

E. McKee Dobson has squared himself with Trenton Union and can now look any one in the eye and tell him to go to the—kaiser.

W. T. Hubbard, George Fellner and James Kennedy are back from their annual fishing trip in the Georgian Bay district. "Billy" has what he calls a farm up there, but the honeymooners call it a hunting lodge. HUGH WALLACE.

Delegate Coyell has the floor.

As a presiding officer and a parliamentarian President Scott was all to the mustard....John Hays is developing into quite an orator. At the Home doings, his bell-like (compositor, do not make this bull-like) tones could be heard clear to the entrance of the grounds....About the last day of the convention a young delegate leaned over and asked one of the old guard who that second man to Secretary Hays was. He did not know "Headquarters" Smith, one of the hardest workers in our ranks....Charley Taylor, of Oil City, wants us to tell him all about the Home and our private opinion. Well, Charles, it would fill a book, but every dollar you put into it has been well spent, and next year when you plan your vacation go out to Colorado Springs and look it over; you will be thoroughly satisfied....Strange as it may seem, Nate Newman, of New York, was the only serious-looking visitor at the convention. The only time we saw his old-time smile was when Hertenstein of St. Louis whispered something in his ear....If we had only known, there were several people in the convention to whom we could have delivered personal messages. For instance: Delegate Cato, of St. Louis, and "Bill" O'Neil, of Buffalo, paraded with the G. A. R. in St. Louis in 1887, and after the parade Cato discovered that poor "Bill" could not get a room for love or money, so Comrade Cato took care of him in the right manner. Charley Tilley remembers when Chairman Keating, of the laws committee, finished his trade and his old boss refused to pay him the scale....The delegate from Oshkosh spent some time in our midst once and took up the carpet in a well-known clubroom. Whether said carpet was "hocked" or not deponent does not know....That Neil Crowley, of Chattanooga, evidently has not forgotten the reception at the Burnet house in Cincinnati....That Johnny Walsh, of St. Louis, and Secretary Birdsall, of Denver, were roommates years ago in Denver. The worthy Denver secretary was so busy that we did not have a chance to learn any of Johnny's youthful escapades in that beautiful city....That "Woody" Woodworth, of the Springs, is "some" musician. His manipulation of the saxophone puts one in mind of the Brown brothers—it's so different.... That the printers of Colorado Springs love to dance. Did you see "Scotty" Stewart tripping the light fantastic, with "Bill" Reilly a close second? ....Mel Forester's message to Al Patterson was delivered and the major was de-lighted....Delegate Smith, of Arkansas, declared that bevo "lacks the punch and conversation."....That Jerry Connolly proved a life-saver on one of the numerous excursions....That as a gardener George Forbes, of the Home, is in a class by himself.... The Denver automobile trip was the event of a lifetime. It was handled in A1 style by the Denver ex-delegates and union. Representative Pulver's message was delivered and his friend pleased to hear from him. Buffalo folks were particularly lucky in being the guests during the drive of Joe Seith. He has a fine car and is as expert a driver as we ever sat behind. If Joe has to take up a side line he sure can qualify as an expert chauffeur....Cy Carter, of Washington was so impressed with his visit to the Springs and Denver that next year he is to conduct a personally supervised party over the ranges. How times change. The other time that "Cy" went over the Rockies he made the trip on a burro. No, the burro was not hired at $5 an hour—he helped himself to it, and he and a famous "Shorty" took turns in riding....Affairs at Colorado Springs were handled in magnificent style. The committee and members of Colorado Springs Union are entitled to the hearty thanks of all who participated.

W. A. COYELL.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

"His life was gentle; and the elements so mixed in him, that Nature might stand up and say to all the world, 'This was a man.'"

Tom Jacobs is dead; and so passed out one of God's best works—a true man. I first knew him as an apprentice on the National Republican, where he served his time, and where he first broke in at that branch of the trade he made his life work, the advertising branch, which he followed for so many years on the Washington papers, a long time on the Post, from whence Charley Thompson took him to take charge of the ads on the first issue of the Herald, which position he held at the time of his death. He lived all his life in Alexandria, and traveled back and forth to his daily labor with such regularity that people could bank on the time of his going and coming as being the correct time. His membership in Columbia Union dates back to the late seventies, and it is safe to say that he ranked among her truest members. He leaves a widow and a host of friends to mourn his loss, and was buried in his native town of Alexandria under the auspices of Columbia Typographical Union.

On the editorial page of the Washington Herald of August 27, enclosed in mourning border, appeared the following tribute:

"30" IS WRITTEN FOR "POP" JACOBS.

"Pop" Jacobs is dead.

Thousands of the Herald readers will see this and wonder who "Pop" Jacobs was.

And it is natural that they should, for "Pop" was one of those unsung heroes in life's game whose work rather than his personage was brought to the eyes of the world.

"Pop" was the day foreman of the Herald's composing room. But "Pop" had been an apprentice, a journeyman and a foreman many years before the Herald came into existence. He could have spun a yarn of typographical anecdotes that would have dazed those of us who have an acquaintance only with the machine epoch. He knew of the days when nimble fingers did all the typesetting that makes our papers.

On the Herald he had been long since regarded as a symbol of efficiency and reliability. There are few people, indeed, whose lives have not been touched at some time or other by his handiwork. Advertisers seeing the finished product of their advertisement gave little thought to the hours that "Pop" labored. Those of us who have often read of ourselves in the newspapers knew not of "Pop." We took him and those of his craft for granted.

It is well that we should at times give pause and consider "Pop" and the unsung throng that he stood for. They are the human cogs of life's machine who go to make up the stability of the world.

"Pop" is gone, but his friends will remember him, and his enemies—there are none.

The bureau of labor statistics has published a most interesting and useful pamphlet of 120 pages, illustrated with halftones and line drawings, entitled "Hygiene of the Printing Trades," compiled by Alice Hamilton and Charles H. Verrill, which should be in the possession of all machine-office employes and stereotypers and electrotypers, and can be had free of cost by writing to the bureau here in Washington. Much of the statistical matter was obtained through the International Typographical Union, and John H. Cole, chairman of Columbia Union's committee on sanitation, was active in aiding the compilers.

"Bob" Congdon met with a serious accident while on a motor trip through the state of New York and was laid up in an Albany hospital for several weeks with some broken ribs, but is now at his home in Philadelphia almost completely recovered.

Charley Deming, chairman of Columbia's delegation to Colorado Springs, made quite a tour after the convention, and is enthusiastic over the fraternal treatment he got from the printers of Cheyenne, Denver, Omaha, Chicago and other cities.

Jarvis B. Moulden returned from a visit to the city of New York with the information that J. William Leeper had enthusiastically taken to "golluff."

Many Washington printers are proud of the patriotism displayed by their sons in joining the colors, and none more so than "Billy" McAneany, whose only boy made four attempts before being passed, finally getting in the cavalry.

Charles A. Morgan, after more than a year's absence, has resumed his duties as a copy editor in the government printing office, minus one of his legs, amputation being found necessary after many months of illness, the result of blood poisoning from a slight scratch.

H. Clay Evans, for many years an employe of the government printing office, once president of Columbia Union, but who has been in retirement for a number of years and on the pension roll, passed away recently at the home of his sister, Mrs. Sarah F. Barnes, in Baltimore. He was 72 years of age and unmarried.

John M. Barr has returned from his annual thirty-day vacation to Lake Champlain, N. Y., where he and Mrs. Barr have a bungalow with all the accessories for a pleasant summer holiday.

James H. Alburtis, copy editor on specifications, was recently married to Miss Susan Bender Sipe, a teacher in the James Ormond Wilson normal school, of this city, the wedding occurring at the home of the bride's sister in Pittsburgh, Pa. After an extended bridal tour the happy couple will reside at Chevy Chase, the most fashionable suburb of the nation's capital.

Charles H. Yeakle, well known in Washington by reason of having worked here many times, is incapacitated from duty by reason of ill health at his home in Baltimore. A mutual friend recently brought me a message from him in which he assured me that he looked for the Washington correspondence in THE JOURNAL with anticipated pleasure.

The plate printers' union and the organization of the women employes of the bureau of engraving and printing were conspicuous features of the parade in honor of the draft army on September 4, both turning out strong in numbers, tastefully uniformed, and marching with a precision that brought forth cheers all along the line.

Samuel H. Bell, one of the veterans of Columbia Union, for many years chairman of the copyright committee maintained by the International Typographical Union, to look after legislation in congress, will soon publish the memoirs of his experiences in the printing trade, which will, no doubt, make very interesting reading.

The choice of Scranton for the 1918 convention meets with general approval of the printers of Washington, and Commodore Mike Walton and his colleagues will have no reason to complain of any slackness in attendance from here, judging from expressions on all sides of those who have already decided to make the trip.

Frank Benzler has given up a position on the Post, after more than thirty years of service there, to accept a position in the government printing office, the opportunity for daylight employment, leave with pay and other perquisites Uncle Sam provides his printers luring him away from morning newspaper work. Frank has been an energetic and useful worker in the cause of organized labor and deserves every reward at the hands of his friends.

Major John E. Rastall was recently called to Chicago to attend the funeral of his son, Dr. Frank W. Rastall, a police surgeon of that city, who met his death in a collision while in the performance of his duty. Many oldtimers will recall Samuel Rastall, who was prominent in the affairs of Chicago Union for many years and was an inventor of note of printing appliances, being a brother of Major Rastall.

Funk & Wagnalls, publishers of the "Dictionary of Grammar," the useful little volume compiled by James A. Hennesy, have informed the author that a number of large newspapers and publishing houses of the country have purchased his book in quantities sufficient to equip the entire forces of their editorial and proofrooms, and that another edition is now in press.

George Smouse, conceded one of the best linotype machinists in the business, and who has invented many useful printing appliances, has given up a newspaper job to get on Uncle Sam's pay roll, as has Lorenzo D. Hover, a well-known printer.

Lack of help is complained of generally among the downtown printing offices, and the situation is quite serious in a number of instances. One well-known printer complains that he has to turn in and help every time he pokes his head in either his composing or press room, and his foremen are none to polite in their demands.

GEORGE M. RAMSEY.

NEW LONDON, CONN.

Everything is quiet in this city at present as far as union matters are concerned. Our September meeting was voted omitted at the August meeting, provided nothing special occurred to warrant a meeting.

The New London Central Labor Union made a very creditable showing in a parade on Labor day. A line of about 2,000 men representing all the different unions of the city were present. The typos were enjoying their first Labor day as a holiday and did not care to participate in the parade, as several of the boys got their first chance in a long time for two days in succession and went out of town to spend them.

President George Connor, William Stanton and James Flanagan spent Sunday and Labor day at Coney Island and reported as having one large time.

Frank Neilan and family, formerly of this city but now of Paterson, N. J., were visitors here Labor day.

The second outing of the Globe chapel was abandoned, owing to cool weather.

North Adams via the "Mohawk Trail" in 1918.

The many friends of Oscar Mannke and "Ike" Brown are glad to see them in their old places again on the night side of the Union-Leader.

Among those who have recently returned from somewhat extended vacations are Leslie Ellis and John Broderick, who have spent most of the summer in the White mountains, getting out the summer paper, Among the Clouds.

On a recent visit to Camp Bartlett, at Westfield, Mass., the writer met Ben Pearson, "Buster" Harris and Mike Hurley, all former members of the Union-Leader force, who are now "doing their bit" with the colors.

It is reported that Freeman G. Riddle has disposed of his interest in the job printing business, known as Morgan & Riddle, and is to enter the employ of the Stratton printing establishment.

Henry B. Beard, one of Manchester's' well-known members of the printing fraternity, is spending his vacation at Martha's Vineyard, Mass.

There is considerable activity among the pressmen in this vicinity, especially in the job offices, and an organizer has been spending some time in the city.

The convention picture, issued as a supplement to the August JOURNAL, is attracting much favorable attention.

The printing business, which has been rather quiet for the past few months, is picking up and a busy fall and winter is looked for.

FRED T. IRWIN.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

Quite a number of inquiries from outside points have been received by the local secretary as to trade conditions here. At present there are plenty of subs available to handle all extra work on hand. On August 31 the News-Advertiser, the senior newspaper in Vancouver, ceased publication and also closed up its job department, the equipment of both being purchased by the Sun. About twenty men were thereby added to the number of subs. The names of several members of No. 226 appeared in recent lists of casualties overseas. E. Mason, reported missing; W. C. Fogarty, J. McCurrach and Albert Laing, wounded; and information is just to hand that Roy Fleming succumbed to wounds received a couple of months ago.

W. R. Trotter attended the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress convention held at Ottawa, Ontario, during the week commencing September 17.

Traveling cards have been deposited by W. J. Ozard, Fred H. Ross and Mrs. J. Taylor. Those leaving the jurisdiction are J. P. Buckle, G. Wood, Mrs. Tena McPhee and T. G. Millar.

Star-News printers and some friends chartered the pleasure launch Tourist for a second try at the fish this season and the sixteen persons on board caught 441 fish in less than five hours.

J. Paul Rowan has been drafted and will probably don the khaki some time in October. Having expressed a desire for a wrist watch, the union has voted some money as a starter to get him a real one that will withstand the rigorous climate of American Lake or the force of those rivet-starting German shells.

Ed H. Morse has recently forwarded to the Mergenthaler Linotype Company the plan of a device for quickly changing the position of the keyboard rubber cam rollers, so that the entire surface may be worn evenly instead of in grooves, as is now often the case, thus doubling the life of the roller and eliminating transposition troubles that occur with a much-used roller.

F. C. Jones, of the Wood & Jones Printing Company, who has been a member here for many years, has returned from a visit to London, Canada.

William ("Bill') Kingan won the $30 bracelet watch on Labor day given by the Pasadena Labor Day Association.

The "At Last," the automobile owned by Hugh Blackburn, which has been written about in song and story so frequently, aye, and sworn at, too, has been sold, and Hugh has bought a Ford. Another prosperous member, R. W. Morley, has bought a Dodge car, and as soon as he becomes expert in driving he intends giving a few rides to those unfortunate members who have no machines.

"Fondy" Evans, who has come back, recently worked for a day or two for a man who has bought a linotype that has long since reached the voting age. It was speeded to about four and a half or five lines a minute and those who had been operating it found this was all too fast. When "Fondy" went to work he of course had no trouble bumping the elevator. The proprietor standing near noticed the bumping business, for he never had witnessed anything like it before, and in astonishment he exclaimed, "Well, I'll be d—d!"

Several members recently wrote letters on the linotype, placed them on a galley together, proved them up and sent them with the clerk of the Pasadena Board of Trade to "Hod" Richey, who is with the ambulance corps at Allentown, Pa.

PHILIP G. GAIR.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

With the consolidation of the American Press Association and the Western Newspaper Union, A. C. Sutherland, one of the best-known printers of Dallas, loses his position, which he has held for years. However, a man like Mr. Sutherland will not be long without a situation.

At the September meeting of the union the label committee was instructed to have printed 1,000 blotters to be distributed among the merchants and those having printing done. The committee was instructed to use every effort to promote the allied printing trades label.

Clint Tullis, delegate to the International convention, submitted a very interesting report of what took place at the convention. Owing to the death of the father of Delegate Lamb, at Beaumont, he was unable to make anything but a verbal report. By a rising vote both delegates were thanked for their services.

Fred B. Robinson, of the Waco Times-Herald, has the original card issued to his father in England in 1842. In regard to the card Mr. Robinson says:

I have also his apprenticeship papers, issued in 1835, with certificate of honorable fulfilment in 1842 (seven years being the time then required) with notice of his intention to leave for this country. He first came to New Orleans and worked two or three years, afterward going to Galveston, where he "run" the Galveston News off on a hand press for some time and was offered a third interest to be taken out in labor. He afterward said it was the mistake of his life in not accepting the offer. In 1850 he established the Huntsville Item, running same until his death in 1888. The Item continued in the family fifty-two years, when the writer relinquished it to come to Waco to join his brother in publishing the Times-Herald. The Item is still published at Huntsville.

At this writing the News-Journal is installing the new intertype machines—eight of them—which have been anxiously awaited for some time. These machines will replace some of the old ones and the others will be used in giving a better news service for the paper. Who will be the lucky ones to get the new machines has not yet been decided upon.

Ludlow Daniels, who had the misfortune to be injured when his automobile went wrong several weeks ago, is able to be back to work. He is now on the Journal side awaiting his full recovery before assuming his old position on the News.

For some time the allied printing trades have been working with the officials of the city to have its job printing done by union houses. The typographical union has asked that an eight-hour clause be inserted in every city job printing contract. The city officials have promised that this rule will be observed under the provisions of the city charter. This matter grew out of a contract being let to a firm employing non-union printers, which was the lowest bidder by more than $100, where there were nine competing firms. Hereafter, the typographical union is going to see that the eight-hour law is complied with, even if an injunction has to be served to stop the payment of the bills.

From letters received from some of the boys who are now in the training camps in the east, we learn that they are doing some hard work. Although their work seems laborious to them, they realize they are working in a righteous cause, which in the end will triumph over wrong.

A specimen booklet of advertising type faces, borders and other information valuable to advertisers, has just been issued by A. H. Belo & Co., publishers of the Dallas Morning News and Evening Journal. The work was compiled under the direction of Harry Maxwell, superintendent of the mechanical department of these publications, and reflects credit upon its compiler. The work is a valuable aid to advertisers and ad writers, and we have no hesitancy in saying that the work has already become quite popular among that class. It contains specimens of all the type, borders and rules in the office, besides the number of lines to the inch and the number of words to the square inch of the different sizes of type, together with specimens of layout sheets and full instructions how to prepare copy so that any intelligent compositor can handle the ad without trouble and thereby save the office considerable time in deciphering just what the advertiser wants.

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Koerps, of San Antonio, and Mr. and Mrs. Minor, of Houston, on their way home from the convention at Colorado Springs, stopped off here for a day during the month. While here they were taken in charge by a committee of the union and shown the places of interest in the city.

Dallas always leads, even to going dry first. On September 10 Dallas county voted for local option by nearly 2,000 majority. This gives Dallas the distinction of being the largest city in the United States on a dry basis except where the whole state went dry. There were many reasons contributing to this, among which were these: Dallas has more real Americans to its size than any large city in the United States; the saloon interests have sought to control the politics of the city and state and also the acts of the trade unions, and many people voted for prohibition to break up the ring, even though they themselves were not teetotalers; many drinking men saw what whisky had done for them and voted to get rid of its influence. It will no doubt be a surprise to many, but it is believed 75 per cent of Dallas' printers voted to make the county dry. Whether wet or dry, Dallas will always go forward. Business of all kinds is good. A hotel just finished is about as large and as fine as any in the United States. It is big enough to furnish convention hall, rooms and eats for the 1919 convention of the International Typographical Union, which will be about the right time for the boys to get together in Dallas, the leading city of the leading state in the world.

During the month Dallas was visited by A. D. Evans, a well-known printer and charter member of Keokuk (Iowa) Union. Some years ago Mr. Evans had the misfortune to have a sunstroke in this city, which incapacitated him from working at his trade. He is now engaged in selling hones and all kinds of whetting stones, and is meeting with success in disposing of his wares to the fraternity.

Mrs. M. E. Turner, age 87 years, passed peacefully to the other side on August 21, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. M. Reilly. Being the mother of Mrs. Reilly, Mrs. W. H. Fleishman (deceased), Mrs. Corbin Johnson (deceased), whose husbands were and are (except W. H. Fleishman, deceased) well-known union printers, she was well and favorably known to a great many union printers in the early days. She was the grandmother of W. T. Richardson and Richard Hagar, both well-known union printers among the younger set. To know Mrs. Turner was a real joy. The writer knew her well for about twenty-five years, and feels that in her demise a motherly Christian lady has passed to her reward. Up to the very minute of her death she was entirely conscious, and fully expected to pass immediately from this earth through the heavenly gates. If she did not do so there is but little use of the balance of us trying.

Never in the history of Texas has there been such a demand for labor, and especially in Dallas. This is largely caused by the millions of dollars being expended by the government in the building of cantonments and aviation camps. Farmers are paying from $1 to $1.25 per hundred for cotton pickers, and are unable to get them even at that price. The Lone Star Gas Company, which is building new pipe lines from the Oklahoma gas fields, is badly crippled on account of not being able to get help. Common laborers in this city are demanding and getting 30 cents an hour, with price and one-half for overtime, and the supply is not near equal to the demand.

Thus far this has been an eventful year in the life of L. L. Daniels, jr. On May 5 he joined No. 173 as a journeyman. He left the same day to join Uncle Sam's forces, being either the first or second member to offer his services. On August 28, while on his way from Fort Sam Houston to Fort Sill, he stopped over long enough to be married to Miss Leah E. Harris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Harris, 309 East Twelfth street, Oak Cliff. His bride is a most talented young lady of a lovable character, who has many friends to join with the members of No. 173 in wishing the young couple much happiness.

White-aproned gentlemen in Dallas saloons are becoming rather touchy regarding a stereotyped question which is being asked by regular customers and total strangers each day. In many saloons large printed signs are displayed reading as follows: "Don't ask me what I'm going to do after October 21. What are you going to do when you are thirsty?" L. K. Wells.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

On August 28 President D. D. Robertson celebrated his forty-third birthday by receiving all male employes of the Moon-Journal at his home. The evening was spent in telling stories, playing cards and singing. "Al" Neller, linotype operator and vocalist, rendered a few very "mellow" melodies, some of which were so mellow that "Al" was assisted to his former position at the card table by the host.

After luncheon plans were made for the Labor day festival. With the printers, carpenters, plumbers, tinners and other trades, numbering up to the thousands, combined with the regular army at Camp Custer, the parade was made entirely a success. The members of No. 429 again proved their superior ability in the arrangement of costumes for the occasion. Every printer carried a white umbrella bearing the letters "I. T. U." This, in connection with their white aprons, proved to be the prize winner of the day. After the parade the regular program, which consisted of a ball game, dance, music and plenty to eat, was carried out with great success at Goguac lake. Several out-of-town printers were present and all report a very enjoyable time.

September 8 was the birthday anniversary of Nelson E. Conine, president and business manager of the Moon-Journal. The boys of the business, editorial and mechanical departments, numbering twenty-five, were invited to his home, where an enjoyable stag party was featured. The affair was a surprise to Mr. Conine and, with the passing of the hours, another surprise was sprung—a handsome Masonic charm, the gift of the guests. Mr. Conine says that he would not mind having a birthday oftener than once a year. The boys of No. 429 wish to extend many thanks to Mrs. Conine. Milton H. Maurer.

PASSAIC, N. J.

The new battery of machines at the Herald is now installed and consists of one model 14, two model 5s and three model Ks.

Foreman Fred Gott, of the Daily News, is improving after an attack of lumbago. "Nap" Bourgeois, of the News, spent his vacation touring about the New England states, and reports having a fine time. Miss Mamie Rickaby, proofreader on the Herald, spent her vacation in the Catskill mountains. Stewart Jenkins, of the Herald, spent his vacation at Greenwood Lake, N. J., and reports a very pleasant stay. J. Nealy Ernest, chairman of the News chapel, has resigned his position and has accepted another in Paterson. He was also recording secretary of our local and will be greatly missed, as he was a good worker. Frank DeVore was elected as chairman of the News chapel to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Ernest.

Work here in the job shops is only fair, but the newspapers are going along as usual.

SHREVEPORT, LA.

The government to date has selected two of our members for the national army under the draft system. Reuben Boone, Times chapel, left August 1; R. V. Lambert, also of the Times chapel, left for training September 20. We are paying all their dues and assessments while in the service of the government.

Eugene Mitchell, wearing a uniform of the United States marines, paid us a visit the latter part of August. He was very enthusiastic over his new "sit," and while here related many experiences had at one of the training camps. Said he often desires to call a "chapel meeting."

At a recent meeting of No. 155, President J. H. Geduldig, of the Journal chapel, resigned. W. A. Sutherland, of the Times chapel, was elected to fill the unexpired term. Mr. Sutherland's traveler has been deposited with this union several times, as far back as 1900. He should make No. 155 a very able president, being conservative and at all times ready and willing to benefit our organization in any particular.

A. L. Williams is with us again. We hope "Bill" will forget how to purchase a railroad ticket.

About September 10 all job pressmen in this city quit work, employers objecting to some clauses in their new scale. About twenty-five men are affected. To date their walk-out has had no effect on the job end of our organization, as no lay-offs have occurred.

Cards deposited: Lafayette Williams, Harry E. Burke, L. E. Chance and M. A. Barnes. Cards issued: George N. Appleby, W. M. Johnson and F. R. Butler. J. Z. Snyder.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Vernon Felt, for six years a member of the Herald-Republican chapel, died September 12 at the family home. Death was due to tuberculosis. Deceased was born in Provo, Utah, January 18, 1884. Surviving him are his widow and two children.

Oscar F. Ball, a member of our local union for a number of years, passed away September 13. Deceased was 40 years of age. Tuberculosis was given as the cause of death. A widow and four children survive him.

Jake Perkes had the misfortune of breaking a bone in his hand in getting the member between two colliding trucks.

John Cummick was "gathered in" by the army draft and left for American Lake, Wash., early in September. Before leaving he was presented with a wrist watch by the members of the Tribune chapel.

The daily paper that was to have started in Ogden some weeks ago never materialized. After the machinery had been installed financial obligations could not be met, with the result that a copy was never issued.

Charles M. Hecker, local president, was endorsed for city commissioner at the September meeting. The city election takes place in November.

George Darke and family attended the Colorado Springs convention in August, making the trip by automobile.

John M. Mackey is back to work after spending the summer in Iowa with relatives.

An effort will probably be made by members of the union this winter in publishing pamphlets now and then familiarizing members with the good and bad points of the time and piece scales, so that when the proper time comes to open up negotiations with the newspaper publishers next spring we will be prepared to act intelligently in the matter.

A. F. Moore, editor of the Utah Labor News, a weekly publication controlled by the Salt Lake Federation of Labor, has resigned. O. Wilson.

LA CROSSE, WIS.

La Crosse printers as usual participated in the Labor day parade, but otherwise did not participate in any of the activities at the picnic grounds. The members of this local spent the day in various ways, some going fishing, which is excellent at the present time, while others wandered about the bluffs that surround this city as well as the beautiful Mississippi valley.

The Labor day picnic was held at the Interstate fair grounds this year and a goodly number of people attended. John J. Serres, of this local, a member of the trades and labor council, was one of the committeemen, and had charge of the footraces.

Michael Roubik, of the Spicer & Buschman shop, has been laid up with smallpox, but at this writing he has again been seen on the streets, but unable to go to work.

Work has been very poor of late, although the jobmen are still able to get in part of the regular time; the newspaper admen have been sufferers more than usual, but to avoid one man taking the brunt of the layoff, all men change about, taking a few days off every week. The advertising end should be getting better about this time. The job prospects are not so bright.

Harry Eaton has drawn a traveling card, and John Eddy, of the Serres-Eddy typesetting plant, who was with the monotype people, doing road work for a while, has again deposited his card and intends to remain here and look after his local interests.

A joint meeting between the pressmen and the printers was held September 19 to discuss the forming of an allied trades council in this city.

The usual number of "regulars" attended our last meeting, but let us hope that from now on the meetings will be better attended, as we need you all. Pretty soon we will nominate officers again and then you may have a chance to get in on the steering wheel. Come on up and get acquainted!

H. J. Hoelzer.

COLUMBIA, S. C.

Progress in the labor movement in this section is most satisfactory. New life is being infused into many of the unions and several new organizations are in course of formation. Business in the building trades line is unparalleled. It is simply impossible to obtain competent union help, and contractors for the mammoth United States cantonment here have found it necessary to give most lucrative employment to carpenters who are not efficient in order to complete their contracts within a month of the appointed time. It seems like a dream to hear it stated that 10,000 men are at work on the camp, the average pay being $5 per day. Merchants are reaping a harvest, hotels and boarding-houses are overcrowded, while visitors to the city frequently are entertained only through the hospitality of some friend or acquaintance. Every train coming into the city for the last ten days has its quota of soldiers and citizen clerks for Camp Jackson. In order to prevent congestion on the main business streets, a "jay-walking" or move-on ordinance has been passed by the city council. It prevents congregating on the sidewalks and forbids, under penalty of fine, the crossing of a street between blocks. And besides, you must walk to the right—look to the right, no matter who passeth to your left. Many of our prettiest girls, however, frequently insist on walking to your left. Up to this writing not a single case has been docketed from this point—(of vision).

Printers are scarce; in fact, there has never before, in the fifty years' existence of our union, been such a persistent demand for men. Half a dozen good hand and machine men would find ample work, probably until next summer.

Recently the clerks of the Southern Railway here went out on strike for an increase in pay of 15 per cent. After a few days' delay their demand was granted. Then the clerks of all the railroads formed a union. It is now affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and also the South Carolina Federation of Labor and the Columbia City Federation of Trades. This occurred on September 12. On September 15 it was proposed to notify the Seaboard that unless certain demands were conceded on the 17th the men in its employ would walk out. The stated demand was a 20 per cent blanket increase in salary; extra pay for work since July 1, 1917; reinstatement of any suspended or discharged because of the agitation leading up to the organization of a union. Your correspondent, as organizer of the South Carolina Federation of Labor, opposed the sending of the notification, on the ground that it was precipitate action, only one day—Sunday—being given, from the 15th to the 17th. Otherwise he heartily endorsed the movement and assisted in the work of organization. In Charleston, late on Saturday night, September 15, at a meeting of clerks and representatives of the Seaboard, it was agreed to repair to Norfolk, Va., where a demand be made for a conference with Second Vice-President Seden, of the Seaboard. The department of labor of the United States was represented—in fact, all parties at interest were given the assiduous attention of Col. John McCarthy, chief of staff of Secretary of Labor Wilson. He is a very distinguished ex-officer of the United States army and an enthusiastic advocate of arbitration. On the morning of September 18 telegrams received here said that a satisfactory agreement had been reached at the Norfolk conference. It is a matter for congratulation that there was no trouble here. In this connection it is not improper to state that many people whose presumed intelligence ought to preclude the possibility of such a thought seem to take it for granted that the next step after organization is the agitation of a strike. This is an egregious error—one the utter fallacy of which would come in the revulsion against unionism by the general public. It is opposed to precipitate action and inequitable treatment of corporations. The argument is sound. Many happenings of the last few weeks here emphasize the necessity of a thorough campaign along educational lines. The labor movement and its high aims and complex problems are not assimilated in a few days, or weeks, or months. It requires years of intelligent and constant study to learn how to deal with the many phases of the movement.

The September issue of THE JOURNAL has reached us. It is one of the best publications of its kind ever produced by any of the many able men who have been its editor. The photograph of the delegates and visitors to the last convention is a magnificent accomplishment for photography; in fact, the last issue of our monthly paper is irrefutable evidence of the fact that the printers always keep a few paces ahead of old man push, progress and prosperity.

Pierce L. Wiggin, a member of No. 34, who joined the United States navy when war was declared, has recently passed an examination for printer, first class. TOM F. MACNALLEY.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Two new members, Foster K. Rhines and Herbert C. Tew, were initiated at the last meeting.

John Freeman and Harry Carl, of Brooklyn, and Michael Higgins, of Syracuse, were recent visitors. They were busy renewing old acquaintances while here.

The Binghamton Press is installing a new monotype to cast display ad type. They hope to perfect a non-distribution system in that office.

The annual clambake and outing of the Vail-Ballou chapel was held Sunday, September 2, at O'Neil park. Everybody attending reported having an excellent time. The bake, as usual, was in charge of Scotty Grovenberry.

The local union sent a delegation, including a baseball team, to Elmira Labor day to participate in the celebration held in that city. The Elmira Union's baseball team defeated our team by a score of 7 to 3, but only after a thoroughly exciting and desperate struggle had taken place. It sure was no disgrace to be defeated by such a bunch of good fellows. We were certainly entertained in royal style and hope to be able to return the compliment next year in our own fair city. Many thanks are extended to President Morgan, of Elmira Union, Mr. McMillen and others, who, by their untiring efforts, made the day a very enjoyable one for our boys.

Frank Haggerty, of the Hempstead Press, has returned to work after a long illness. His many friends are pleased to see him back on the job.

Alfred C. Trumble, operator on the Press, is busy mingling with the politicians. He is running for supervisor of his ward. The boys are pulling for "Al" to cop the bacon. With a few union men in public office we might be able to see the union label on more of the city's printed matter.

Work is improving slightly hereabouts.

Charles LaPoint has deposited his card.

JULIAN H. WALKER.

RICHMOND, VA.

Our September meeting was full of reports and some of them created much discussion, which made the meeting of such duration that our two delegates to the Colorado Springs convention could not make detailed reports. Of course, they said they had "the time of their lives," also that the convention was a very harmonious and profitable one, taken altogether.

The report of the committee to whom was referred the resolution adopted at our July meeting requesting the employing printers of Richmond to grant us an increase of 10 per cent on salaries (not on scale, as most of us get above the minimum), made a favorable report. This resolution was not a demand that our scale be increased, but put to the proprietors as a simple request that they help us in a small way to meet the great increase in the cost of living, etc. Several firms have given the increase and the committee is of the opinion that others will do so as soon as they can arrange their business affairs to meet the increase. The latest firm to increase the pay of employes is Whitmore & Garrett, an open shop.

The bids for state printing are very high this year. Probably the 10 per cent we expect to get from some of the firms bidding on this work may be responsible for the "sky-high" prices, as a gentleman is quoted saying. Printers are in great demand here and the "bosses" are somewhat "at sea" as to the conditions which may prevail in a few months. Quite a number of our craft have been drafted into the army, thus reducing the regular force in Richmond. Several have gone to other cities recently. At this time Superintendent of Public Printing Bottom, a member of No. 90, has not awarded the state printing. This is the second opening of bids, he having thrown out all of the first lot offered.

Several shifts and changes have been made by members of No. 90 recently. Tom Farley, who succeeded E. W. Gill as foreman on the Evening Journal about six weeks ago, has resigned. He has accepted a position as publicity agent for the Purity Corporation, manufacturers of ice cream, etc. Tom was not looking well, as the duties of foreman on the Journal are very strenuous, and we hope he will soon get back to normal condition. E. H. Rawls has become foreman, and C. P. Harwood, our president, has accepted a position as assistant foreman and make-up. George A. Jennings, your correspondent, has left the Journal to accept the position of machinist-operator on the Virginian. "Bob" Ferriter, formerly machinist-operator on the Virginian; Leslie Riley and Ray Goulding left the Virginian and are now in Washington.

The race for commissioner of labor of the state of Virginia is getting warm. The latest candidate to come out is our president, Clarence P. Harwood. He is getting strong backing. Other members of No. 90 who are also candidates for the commissionership are A. L. Vonderlehr and R. C. DonLeavy. Frank Lyon, of Newport News, is spoken of as a candidate; also, C. G. Kizer and Mr. Gaines, of Norfolk. Howard T. Colvin, editor of the Square Deal, this city, is also a candidate. Several gentlemen out of Richmond are in the race. May the best man win—and we hope he will be a member of No. 90.

The application for the old age pension by James Thomas Henshaw was endorsed unanimously by No. 90.

Two new members initiated, Messrs. Joseph Walker Wood and B. F. Wittkamp.

A. W. Perkins, formerly of Westerville, Ohio, who carries a card, is now managing editor of the Virginian. He says he likes Richmond very well. No. 90 welcomes him. We hope he will fill the place in the hearts of our members that Hon. Douglas Gordon occupied while in Richmond. Mr. Gordon is now editor-in-chief of the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

Hon. John Stewart Bryan, owner of the News-Leader, and one of the most public-spirited men in the south, has developed a plan whereby the soldier boys at the various camps will be supplied with daily papers. A large number of prominent newspaper men throughout the country have endorsed the plan and will co-operate in the plan.

GEORGE A. JENNINGS.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.

Work in Fond du Lac is good, with plenty of help to supply the immediate demand.

Charles Baker, formerly a member of the Reporter chapel, now with the Milwaukee Journal, spent a few days here recently. Alex Johnson, who has been employed for the past few weeks at the Commonwealth, has left that plant to seek employment elsewhere. Secretary-Treasurer Purcell is enjoying a short vacation at Madison. Miss Purcell is an operator at the Commonwealth.

No. 31 was well represented in the Labor day parade, and our members were very conspicuous with their red, white and blue badges.

The scale in this city has been boosted $3 per week, as we have just closed arbitration proceedings with the proprietors and have been awarded 75 per cent of what was asked by the local. "Art" Martin and Thomas Burns presented the case before the arbitration board. The award was an increase of $3, covering a period of three years. We asked for $4.

After an illness of three weeks, Louis A. Kinkel passed away at St. Agnes' hospital, this city. Death was due to an abscess on the lung, following an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Kinkel underwent an operation at the hospital on August 24. He was removed to his home, 158 Gillett street, two weeks later, and his condition was believed to be improving, when he suddenly developed pneumonia. The deceased is survived by a widow, a daughter, his parents, four sisters and five brothers. The deceased was born in Spencer, Wis., April 9, 1887, received his education at St. Peter's Lutheran school, and when 18 years of age entered the employ of the Reporter Printing Company, where he learned his trade. In 1908 Mr. Kinkel accepted a position with the Madison Democrat, and from there went to Wheeling, W. Va. December 14, 1910, he was married to Miss Margaret Lewis in Chicago, and in 1913 they came to this city. Mr. Kinkel again entered the employ of the Reporter Printing Company as a linotype machinist-operator, a position he held at the time of his death. Mr. Kinkel served as president and secretary of the typographical union for a number of years. He was also chairman of the Reporter chapel. The Rev. G. E. Bergemann officiated at the funeral, with interment in Rienzi cemetery. Members of the local union visited the residence in a body to pay their last respects to a worthy brother. Mr. Kinkel was very active in union matters, having served the local on many important matters; was also a factor in printers' athletic sports, having served as manager of both baseball and bowling teams.

O. G. RORABACHER.

TRENTON, N. J.

The same familiar faces that attend meetings regularly were present at our last meeting, notwithstanding the fact that Delegate Edwards had returned from Colorado Springs with a splendid report that should have been a pleasure for all the members to hear, and which was very satisfactory. It is regrettable to note the disinterestedness of our members, especially at the present time, when a new scale is being negotiated. The same spirit of "let George do it" prevails, with the non-attending members still advising those who do attend to "give 'em hell for me." Our members should come to the meetings. It isn't square to the rest of the fellows to be continually shirking. There is work for all to do, especially right now. We must be stirring and active; there must be more discussion in order to vote in an intelligent manner on serious questions and show more interest in the doings of our union. It seems that the meetings are far enough apart—once a month; it should be easy to attend, with a little good will. I hope, and no doubt our next meeting will be of the mass meeting variety, for a very important matter will be put before the membership.

Russell Logan, of the Times, has enlisted in the army medical corps, and is stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Philip Daily, of the Modern Print Shop, drafted in the national army, has reported to Camp Dix, N. J.

Robert Beatty, formerly of Trenton, but lately of Uniontown, Pa., has returned to this city.

LEON G. BASFORD.

READING, PA.

Death again invaded the ranks of No. 86, taking away one of the oldest members, in the person of George W. Albright, of Coatesville. Infirmities of old age was the cause. He was 85 years old. Mr. Albright in his youth set type for Horace Greeley on the New York Tribune. Later he lived in Syracuse before coming to Reading. For the last ten years he resided with his son at Coatesville. The last time Mr. Albright attended any affair of No. 86 was the Ben Franklin day banquet, on January 16, 1915, where he spoke at some length on reminiscences of his youth.

Conrad Komorowski, of Scranton, was a caller in town. He reports business good with his newly-opened composition plant in that town.

Charles E. Miller, No. 1, delegate to Colorado Springs, can not get done explaining to the "boys" his fine trip and the excellent convention. He seems to be particularly pleased by the entertainment handed out in St. Louis. He made a verbal report at the last meeting covering many details of the convention. The members were especially interested in his description of the Home. Henry J. Weand, the only resident from Reading, sent his best regards to the "boys."

Charles Kline, a former member of No. 86, according to last reports is "somewhere in a German prison camp." He was a naval gunner on the Campania in the service of Uncle Sam, and was captured when that ship was sunk by a German submarine. He mailed cards to Reading friends in July from France, stating he was in excellent health.

The thirty-first anniversary of No. 86 was celebrated on Sunday, September 16. An all-day outing was held at the Mountain Spring Association, on the wooded slopes of Mount Penn. Chicken and waffle dinner was enjoyed by the participants. Messrs. Miller, Geolz and Sherman were the committee in charge.

President Ezra K. High attended the state firemen's convention in Butler, Pa. "Judge," although well up in years, is still an enthusiastic volunteer fireman.

The last increase in scale under the five-year contract went in effect on September 1, affecting all departments; machine, hand and job.

There is talk of forming an ex-delegates' association for entertaining visitors passing through on their way to Scranton in 1918. More of this later.

Don't forget! Eastern Pennsylvania Typographical Union meets in Hazleton on Sunday, November 11, 1917. "Come to Hazleton and See" is the slogan. HARRY W. SHERMAN.

WHEELING, W. VA.

Norbert L. Baker, of the West Virginia Printing Company, who has been drafted for the national army, was tendered a farewell by his fellow employes at a chapel meeting held Wednesday, September 19. As a memento of appreciation and good will Mr. Baker was presented with a shaving outfit, beautifully engraved, and a five-dollar gold piece. Mr. Baker responded feelingly of his appreciation and thanks for the honor shown him by his fellow workmen.

Robert T. Morrison, of the News force, had the misfortune to have the forefinger of his left hand caught in the clutch of an intertype.

Wiley T. Crosse, of the Intelligencer force, has returned after a trip to Pittsburgh and other places in Pennsylvania in his Mitchell roadster. Mr. Crosse went to Pittsburgh to bid his drafted son farewell before leaving for camp.

Members of No. 79 are now enjoying their second raise in the new scale, which went into effect September 1. This brings the present scale to $26 for night work and $23.60 for day work of eight hours.

Smith Wickham, one of No. 79's old members, but now of Pittsburgh, has been visiting in Wheeling.

George O. Kindelberger has resigned as foreman of the Bullard printing house and has accepted a position in the new plant of the Whitaker-Glessner Company.

George M. Rodgers, of the Owl printing shop, is taking a course at the Mergenthaler linotype factory in Brooklyn.

Arrivals: Clayton Buchanan, T. J. Little. Departures: Alison Kittle, W. J. Shroads, Harry J. Fulton, R. P. Carter, Elisha Lewis, William Lyle and Clayton Buchanan. E. D. CONNER.

REGINA, SASK.

Trade during the past month has fluctuated considerably, first dropping and then rising. It is in good shape just now.

A. White has quit the Leader and has gone to Winnipeg. Frank Marshall has also departed, but for Montreal.

Sincere sympathy will be felt for "Davy" Brown, proofreader on the Daily Post, whose eldest son, Norman, has made the supreme sacrifice on the firing line in France. The first intimation "Davy" had was when he read the proof of casualties, and thus the shock seemed harder. Young Norman was for some time copyholder in the Leader job department, and a smart little lad he was. At the time of enlistment he was working for H. G. Smith, wholesale grocer, of Regina, and to demonstrate the pluck of the lad it need only be mentioned that he reverted to the rank of private in order to get into the trenches. At the time of his death he was only about 20 years old.

The Toronto type foundry has signed up an agreement with the Regina Typographical Union, which extends from now until March 31, 1918. This is the result of patient endeavor on the part of the union and makes Regina practically a 100 per cent union city. Negotiations are also being conducted with the government officials with a view to signing up the government printing office. Although the Saskatchewan government has always been favorable toward labor, it is felt that the cordial relations already existing between the government and the printers will be materially augmented by having a specific agreement between the two bodies. Ex-Premier Walter Scott, who, by the way, is an old-time member of the International Typographical Union and holds his honorable withdrawal card today, was always eminently favorable to labor, and his successor, Hon. W. M. Martin, is carrying on his policy. H. JOHNSON.

MIAMI, FLA.

Death entered the ranks of our allied printing trades on August 26, when Samuel L. Jordan, pressman on the Metropolis, suddenly passed away while fishing for crawfish. The deceased was well liked by both acquaintances and employers, and this feeling was demonstrated by the floral tributes sent by the printing pressmen, Miami Typographical Union, Metropolis chapel and the Women's Label League. Mr. Jordan had no relatives here and his body, accompanied by a member of the pressmen's union, was shipped to Macclenny, Fla., for burial.

Labor day was celebrated here in its usual way, with a parade in the morning and athletic sports in the afternoon. Fully 1,500 union men and women took part in the parade, and each local organization was well represented.

Since my last communication Paul Albury, linotype operator on the Metropolis, has been drafted into the national army and called to Jacksonville for final examination. It is questionable whether he will be finally accepted, owing to the fact that he has a maimed hand. Leo Wolfe, who joined the navy and who at last reports was still at Charleston, S. C., is waiting patiently to be transferred to some battleship. Russell Messler, who also joined the navy, is still here in training, but expects momentarily to be sent to Charleston with another squad of recruits for their finishing touches in training. Harold Silvers, who joined the signal service corps and has been stationed at Fort Screven, Ga., for several weeks, has probably been transferred by this time to some army post, presumably Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Mr. Silvers enjoys his training and seems to be taking a deep interest in the conscientious performance of his military duties. J. W. WITTY.

DENVER, COLO.

The funeral services of the late Charles S. Semper, mention of whose death appears elsewhere in the issue of THE JOURNAL, were held at the All Saints' Episcopal church in this city, on Sunday, September 9, being attended by a large number of members of No. 49, the Pioneer Printers, the Colorado Pioneer Society and the confederate veterans. A full vested choir rendered the music, and the rector, the Rev. T. G. C. McCalla, read the burial rites of the church, following with an eulogy of the departed brother. Brief tributes were then paid by W. H. Neighbor on behalf of the typographical union; Hugh Steele for the Colorado Pioneer Society, and August Koester for the Pioneer Printers. At the grave, Secretary F. C. Birdsall read the funeral rites of the International Typographical Union, being the first time this service was rendered at a Denver printer's burial. For a score of years Mr. Semper had held the office of sergeant-at-arms of this union and was also at one time treasurer of the church from which the services were held. The active pallbearers were Otto F. Thum and Frank C. Birdsall for No. 49; John E. Collett and William Fornholf for the Pioneer Printers and Hugh Steele and Frank Byers for the Colorado Pioneer Society. The honorary pallbearers were Thomas C. Egan, Joseph G. Brown and Thomas M. Hunter, of the Pioneer Printers, and President F. L. Pferdesteller, August Koester, W. H. Neighbor and Charles Carter, of No. 49.

Sol Erickson, "copy chopper" on the News, and Miss Helen Healey, copyholder in the News proofroom, were united in marriage the past month. Sol is a very popular member of No. 49, and has always been a confirmed bachelor.

The apprentice committee of No. 49, composed of Harry Hayes, chairman; William S. Hedley and John Oliver, expects to resume activities again this fall and will endeavor to interest the boys, to the end that they will become more proficient in the trade they have selected as their life's work. The "Junior," the apprentices' own union, which was organized some few years ago, will again become active, and it is their intention to hold meetings once a month. They will also see that some of the recent International Typographical Union laws enacted are carried out.

Denver Typographical Union No. 49 has completed its new job scale, which went into effect September 1, and carries $28.50 per week for days and $31.50 for nights. The new scale includes many advanced ideas in the way of working conditions, among which is that old favorite, "John Priority," both in giving out extra work as well as situations. Any member employed in an office two weeks establishes competency in that office. Apprentices completing their term in an office can not be discharged from that office for incompetency as a journeyman. No. 49 believes this one section will have more to do with an apprentice being made a competent journeyman than any other section it might write. When the employer realizes that he himself must be the loser when an apprentice is not properly trained he is quite likley to see that the boy receives every advantage possible. The apprentice scale also carries a $16 per week wage for the last six months. No. 49 feels grateful to its scale committee, S. S. Summers, chairman; John Robertson, Charles Ferris, Edwin G. Dean and Leo Cuthbertson, who, assisted by President Pferdesteller and Representative Frank J. Pulver, succeeded in establishing the highest job scale east of the Rocky mountains, and, in fact, only equaled or surpassed by few unions in the juriadiction, and these located where living conditions are such that they would not stand comparison. But don't let this burst of enthusiasm regarding the new job scale mislead anyone in coming to Denver at this time, as there is an abundance of subs to handle all extra work.

The newspaper scale committee has held one meeting and is scheduled to meet again this coming month. This committee is composed of William Tanner, chairman; E. S. Close, Osceola Kosciusko Chapman, Merrill Fish, Secretary Birdsall and President Pferdesteller. At its first meeting the committee decided to keep secret its deliberations until ready to report to the union. This is done as a precaution against the union's demands being made known for months before being presented. The members, generally speaking, feel that $33 and $36 are about the right figures.

FRED L. ZIMMERMAN.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

The membership of typographical unions over the Missouri Valley Conference district is herewith reminded that President Scott, of the International Union, and T. W. McCullough, of Omaha, "father of the conference," have announced that they will be present at the January meeting in this city. If these busy gentlemen can find time to visit our city, certainly the rest of you should come. The coffee-pot will be set a-boiling, the table spread, and the chairs set up, and you will be welcomed in the cheerful ring of many voices. You may have to close up shop and suspend publication, but that will be all right. Come anyhow.

As this letter is in preparation, the annual convention of the Oklahoma Federation of Labor is in session in this city, having been transferred from McAlester to Oklahoma City at the eleventh hour. The convention had a large attendance, and among the many faces from out the city we noticed Delegates Van Tilburg, of Tulsa; Stackhouse, of Muskogee, and "Buster" Brown, of Shawnee, all representing their respective typographical unions.

Organized labor had a most successful program in its annual observance of Labor day. Although there were more printers in line of parade than any other craft, and in uniform attire, we failed to win first prize, which had been our good fortune heretofore. Mont R. Powell, of No. 283, was called to Okmulgee, where he made a notable address to organized labor in that city. Another feature of the Labor day celebration was the presence here of a large delegation of trade unionists from Chickasha, who came by special train. They were given the position of honor in the line of march.

Robert Lyons, of St. Louis, international organizer for the cooks' and waiters' union, has been in this city and state for some time and has been quite successful in the organization of a union of that craft in this city. There had been an organization here of that craft in the past, but it had somewhere drifted onto the rocks. Mr. Lyons found somewhat of a problem in the fact that many of this city's restaurants are owned and conducted by the slimy Greek and the greasy Chinaman, a state of affairs not altogether healthy for organized labor, nor the American people.

A postcard (showing a fine place to fish) from Jack Tracy and Charley Jennings avers they will spend the winter in "sunny Cal." Their previous plan has been that of wintering in Montana and summering in Oklahoma.

Henry D. Lawrence, representing Hillsboro (Texas) Union No. 752 at the Colorado Springs convention, dropped off in this city for a short chat with his old friend, Johnny Cronin.

Tom Acton, of the News chapel, and his family have gone to Colorado in the hope of improving Mr. Acton's health. Mr. Acton has been a member of No. 283 for several years, is a splendid young man and well liked, and he is assured that he will be missed.

William MacLaren, chairman of the conference committee of No. 283, enjoyed a vacation during the past month and has returned full of vim for the conference preparations.

The annual industrial number of the Oklahoman and Times, was issued just prior to the Oklahoma state fair and consisted of seventy-six pages, besides the regular heavy Sunday morning issue. This chapel was using every printer it could lay hands on, and even then the boys had to jeff for a night off.

With the co-operation of the army Young Men's Christian Association, the Oklahoman will soon begin the issuance of a weekly journal of army and camp news, free to the soldiers at Camp Doniphan (Fort Sill).

Clyde W. Lyman, monotype operator for the Oklahoman and Times, and for many years a member of that chapel, left during the month to join the national army, reporting at San Antonio. Clyde is a thorough workman and a stanch unionist, and of course will make a splendid soldier. In a letter to the Times, he states, "Let me say that my first experience with Uncle Sam is satisfactory; he certainly feeds the boys well."

Governor Williams has appointed W. H. Gadd, International representative, to the Oklahoma county defense council. Mr. Gadd will handle publicity matters for the council.

In our September letter it was stated that E. M. Willett, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, would make his home in Chicago, but Mr. Willett has reconsidered the matter and is now living in Oklahoma City, we hope, for the rest of his life.

Graham J. Albright, a member of No. 283, is becoming quite an illustrator. The layout for the cover page of the Federationist's big Labor day edition was made by him, and is quite a creditable piece of workmanship.

After a long vacation down in Texas, W. C. ("Dick") Russell, reading clerk for No. 283, returned to the city with a bride, Miss Julia Hurley, of Seymour, Texas. All kinds of best wishes are certainly assured this splendid couple by their many friends.

C. K. Dow presented a motion at the September meeting, in the spirit of which the entire membership present stood in reverent silence in honor of the members of our organization who have departed and are departing for the front. To many, no doubt, it called up the associations of pleasant days in the past, the memories of which were freighted in much that life holds precious indeed.

Cards received: A. D. Hurley, Charles T. Able, H. S. Austin, Maurice M. Leftwich, Charles T. Wood, T. A. Tunstall, Walter E. Thatcher, W. H. Williams, William H. Devine, W. A. Freeman, Ed Sharpe, J. A. Bramlet, Ed Thayer, W. J. Dowell, J. B. Millhollan, C. E. Daugherty, Mattie L. Barker, Clarence T. Barnes, Leo N. Morris, Gus D. Johnson. Cards issued: E. F. Blair, A. R. Tenney, J. W. Lawton, jr., Mattie L. Barker, Walter E. Thatcher, W. H. Williams, H. S. Austin, T. A. Tunstall, A. D. Hurley, Charles T. Able, W. C. Reaves, Joseph Rotchstein, G. T. Sniggs, Aldah A. Meacham, Charles T. Wood, Charles F. Nissen, Ed Thayer, Clarence T. Barnes, James H. Berry.

MINOT, N. D.

Tuesday, September 18, was an unlucky day for two members of No. 376, as R. D. Boyd, of the Periodical Publishing Company, suffered a badly lacerated hand by having it caught between the rollers and the form of the cylinder press which he was feeding. Ernest Solberg, of the News chapel, had his right leg fractured just above the ankle, when a roll of paper was turned against it.

Roy Rogers, who has been doing the make-up on the night side at the News chapel, has taken his wife and hied himself to the wilds near Glasgow, Mont., where he will build a shack on his homestead and spend the winter.

The last heard of Dick Murray, the old warhorse of the News, was at Hurley, Idaho.

Frank Richardson, of the News chapel, has gone to Fort Smith, Ark., and M. J. Klasger, of Minneapolis, is filling the situation on the night side.

The writer has turned in his slip at the Gross Printing Company and henceforth will be found assisting the old veteran, Dad Rogers, at the News chapel.

Guy Humphreys purchased the linotype from the Periodical Publishing Company and acquired along with it the services of our efficient secretary, S. E. George, who will now winter in Minot, instead of St. Paul, as announced in these columns last month.

At this writing the Independent is completing the regular monthly edition of the Business Bulletin, a thirty-two-page two-color magazine issued by the Minot Association of Commerce. The presswork is done on the machine recently installed and does credit to the skill and efficiency of Mr. Gilmore, who is a past master at turning out nifty printing.

E. D. Hicks.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Every member interested in the work of the International Typographical Union should make it his or her business to read the entire proceedings of the recent convention at Colorado Springs. As usual, many extremely foolish propositions were proposed, but the delegates were ever alert and sidetracked all of them, most of the propositions by a unanimous vote. President Scott and Secretary-Treasurer Hays were wideawake during the entire proceedings, and a few delegates seeking to make political capital out of the convention were snowed under by an avalanche of votes. Messrs. Scott and Hays showed up the political office seekers in their true colors, and before the convention adjourned the vilifiers and office seekers did not even have the courage to reply to the gentlemen they had so vulgarly maligned in a so-called progressive sheet, and, further, did not even vote for their propositions. With such a display of weakness, would not the International Typographical Union be in fine hands with them managing the affairs of a million-dollar institution! The record made by the International Typographical Union during the past year is a most remarkable one. Just think of only $4,684.50 being spent for strike benefits and an increase in the earning capacity of our members of $3,940,626, our gross earnings amounting to the sum of $66,652,431. All three of the delegates from Cincinnati, two of whom were elected on a ticket supposed to be opposed to the so-called administration forces, declared in their reports to the union that the convention acted wisely in the course it had taken in all matters, that the executive council had ruled fairly in all the appeals submitted to it from which appeals were taken to the convention, and that the appeals committee made recommendations to the convention as only intelligent and fair-minded men could, and that the unanimous support given by the delegates to the appeals committee's recommendations was a credit to the delegates. The International Typographical Union has been very fortunate in the class of men who have been chosen to lead us, and no better sample of the wisdom of our membership in placing President Scott at the helm of the organization need be asked for than the record of the International Union under his guiding hand during the past year.

Fred A. White, who worked here a short time several years ago, but who has toured through Cuba, Canada and the entire United States for the past four or five years, stopped off here on his way to Louisville, where he will locate. He put in the time between trains with Johnny Dugan at the Typo club. White will organize a bowling team to compete in the printers' tournament at Indianapolis next winter.

D. I. Campbell, of Norfolk, Va., a representative of the International Typographical Union, stopped off here on his way home from the convention, where he was a delegate. He visited the Typo club and was also the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Long for a day. Campbell has lots of friends in Cincinnati and is always a welcome visitor.

Edward C. Holmes and Miss Hazel I. Giffin were married at the home of the bride's father, Charles F. Giffin, August 23. Mr. Holmes is an employe of the government printing office at Washington and well known in Cincinnati. The bride's father is a member of the Commercial Tribune chapel. Her brothers, Victor and Clifford, are employed in the big printery at Washington. The happy couple left on a honeymoon trip through the east and will reside in Washington.

"Senator" John D. Kane and son Cliff, members of Louisville Union, spent several days in "Cincy" last month. Although 80 years of age, the "Senator" has not changed much in the past twenty years. He walked out on a strike here forty years ago, and he met a number of the oldtimers who worked with him here and in Louisville. May many more years bless the life of this grand old man.

Walter A. Grannen, veteran catcher of the printers' ball club, last month announced the arrival of a handsome daughter. His number came out in the draft, but being a man of family he was exempted.

Charles Hicks, ex-foreman of the Commercial Tribune, but now in charge of the Western Newspaper Union's plant in Memphis, paid a flying visit to "Cincy" last month. He met many old friends.

The bowling season will be on in full blast this month, and those desiring to affiliate will hand their names in to Charles Morford or Eddie Sauer, of the Enquirer chapel. Preparations are being made for a big time next spring at Indianapolis, and "Cincy" expects to have a large delegation go on the trip. The teams bowl every Tuesday at Central alleys, Seventh street, near Central avenue. Drop down for the afternoon and bring other members of the printing crafts along.

JAMES W. DOUGHERTY, SR.

Cincinnati celebrated Labor day by having a large parade, and thereafter the different crafts took different routes to various summer resorts to spend the day with their families. The parade consisted of seven divisions. Typographical Union No. 3 headed the fifth division with Bessie's band.

The afternoon papers, the Times-Star and the Cincinnati Post, granted their employes a holiday Labor day by not getting out a paper, and it certainly made those men feel elated over the fact—they then having the opportunity to join in the Labor day parade and also being paid the full day's pay for same.

Quite a number of our members have been sent to the cantonment at this writing from this district, being drafted by the government to do service in the army. They left Cincinnati September 20, 9 A. M., for Chillicothe, Ohio.

The Ohio State Federation of Labor will hold its convention in Cincinnati the first part of October. The committee has everything in good shape at the present time and feels confident that the sessions will produce good results.

Work in Cincinnati at the present time is very dull—both branches—job and newspaper.

Bob Curl, "our grand old man," is still a regular visitor at the union rooms. He is receiving his old-time friends as they come in and go out almost daily. He loves the old haunts, the old faces, the old familiar surroundings, and every one has a kind word for Bob. Yes, Bob is one of the good old scouts, and the only regret he has at present is that he did not have the opportunity to enlist in Uncle Sam's big army. Any old time you drop in to Cincinnati don't fail to call on him.

JOSEPH F. ILLIG.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

We have received THE JOURNAL for September and find a very interesting and comprehensive account of the convention at Colorado Springs. The fellow that covered the convention would sure make a regular newspaper man look like an amateur.

But the convention didn't decide to give us our branch home down here in the sunny south and the best climate in the world. Here's hoping that we have better luck next time.

Our delegate, W. L. Van Wagenen, could not make the trip at the time, as he is the machinist on the Citizen and was erecting two new Mergs. This makes the Citizen plant one of the best to be found anywhere and the boys are all proud of it, as it now makes all the machines except one multiple magazines, and they have most any variety of type or face of type that is needed in a metropolitan newspaper plant.

At the regular meeting held on the second Sunday in September we had a good attendance and also a visitor, Coleman C. Rhame, of Washington, linotype man. While Mr. Rhame does not claim to be an orator, he still carries his card in "Big Six," and is always welcome here. He made us an interesting talk, and all present appreciated his efforts in this line.

Several applications for membership were voted upon at the last meeting. One was from W. S. Scott, who has been apprentice on the Times for several years. Mr. Scott has just left for Fayetteville, where he has accepted a position running a machine on the Observer of that place.

J. Ernest Applegate, who has been showing up at the newspaper offices here for some time, was recently called to the bedside of his little daughter in West Virginia.

The selective draft took several of our members away. They were all eager to go and help to make the world safe for democracy. Several of the boys had enlisted in the national guard, and when the guard left it took six from the Citizen. Two mailers, Sid Weaver and "Crow" Luther, gave up jobs in New York to come back and enlist for their country's good. A number have been drafted and are awaiting further news of how and when they are to report.

The publisher of the Cincinnati Post was in town last month and called at the plant of the Citizen to give it the "once over." Foreman Hogoboom remarked to him that it must resemble a kindergarten after his own magnificent plant, but he said that it was one of the best that he had seen. IRL T. SELL.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

Harry Strange, delegate to Colorado Springs, says the Denver Ex-Delegates' Association certainly gave the delegates on their return trip a swell time. The auto trip to Lookout mountain, with a lunch in the park, could not have been surpassed. Harry extends his thanks for the good time he had in Denver.

Alex Gordon has returned to Winnipeg after a sojourn at the Home, and is now employed at the Saturday Post. On his way back Alex stopped over in Denver, where he annexed a blushing bride.

Manitoba points the way! J. K. Grant, of the Telegram chapel, who is suffering from occupational neurosis, which has almost totally disabled his right arm, thereby preventing him from holding down his machine situation, has been granted compensation under the workmen's compensation act, to the extent of 55 per cent of his wages weekly. This is the first case of the kind brought before the compensation board, and Jack was lucky that the members of the board interpreted the law as meaning what it says.

At the regular monthly meeting of No. 191, a motion was passed unanimously reaffirming the stand of Winnipeg in favor of a Canadian vice-president, living in Canada and having jurisdiction over the Canadian unions, and to be elected by the Canadian membership. This request has been once more turned down by the convention. One of the reasons given, according to our delegate, was that there are already two Canadians on the executive council. Tut! Tut! Up here in Winnipeg we are not in the least interested in the birthplace of any of the members of the executive council. We are broad-minded enough not to care a tinker's dam whether they were born in the United States, Canada, Japan, or Aberdeen. Another reason given for the refusal is that if Canada is granted the privilege of electing a vice-president the other states of the union would also wish the same privilege. But Canada is not one of the states of the union, but is a foreign country with different laws and conditions and a different flag. There is a growing and more insistent feeling among the membership up here that they are entitled to one elected representative who will devote his whole time to the welfare of the Canadian unions.

The executive committee has quite a task in endeavoring to get proper ventilation and sanitary conditions in the printing offices before the snow begins to fly. During the summer, when the windows can be opened, conditions are bearable; but with the setting in of the cold weather it is impossible to put in eight hours a day in some of the offices and still maintain your health.

For the information of those of our American cousins who have been writing to Winnipeg after jobs, the following information may be of interest: News scale, $27; job, $25; coal, $12.50 per ton; wood, $10 a cord. It takes two tons of coal and a cord of wood a month to heat the average house during the winter, when it is generally about 40 below zero; $25 a month is considered cheap rent. After paying rent and fuel the job printer has still about $40 a month left to starve on. We have a fuel controller and a food controller. These are better jobs than printing.

Maxwell Drennan, of the Free Press, is reported wounded for the second time. Jack Neil, also of the Free Press, is reported wounded. Bill Ore, Telegram, has appeared in the casualty lists for the second time, and Sammy Smith, Telegram apprentice, is in the Duchess of Connaught hospital suffering from a bullet wound in the right arm. Jack Stowe, also wounded in the arm, is improving and expects to be back in France shortly. P. J. Stowe is in London, and is enjoying the hard work and feeling good. George Russell is now attached to the forestry corps, and says it was only an army joke to fool the troops when they were told they were being sent back to Canada. George applied for work as a machinist, but because he had never been employed in a sawmill he was graded as "general hand" (laborer). Bert Luff is now in France.

M. D. Fowlkes, late casterman at Stovel's, is now employed with the Ambrose Printing Company, Nashville, Tenn., his home town. G. P. Caudette, of the Stovel chapel, is in the St. Boniface hospital suffering from total blindness.

The Stovel company now boasts one of the most sanitary, best ventilated and best equipped composing rooms in western Canada, if not on the American continent. All the linotype machines have electric metal pots attached, and the difference the electric heating system makes in the composing room is really marvelous.

Frank M. Christian, of the T. Eaton Company chapel, died in the General hospital from typhoid fever, and was buried in St. James' cemetery September 7. The local union took charge of the funeral arrangements and the ladies sent a handsome wreath.

The ladies staged their first whist drive and dance in the Travelers' hall on Saturday, September 22. At time of writing the prospects were for a most successful and enjoyable evening.

Norman Nelson is back at work on the Telegram again, after putting in three months on the Stoney Indian reservation. His sojourn in the Bad Lands has certainly improved him physically. He looks fit enough now to punish a carload of hot dogs.

After being six years with the morning Free Press, John Stevens has quit to take a day job on the Grain Exchange. Alex Anderson, the machinist of the Evening Free Press, has resigned his position. James MacLeod ("Big Mac") is now with the West Canada Publishing Company. W. J. Prittie and Alf White have returned from a tour of the golden west. CHARLES RYAN.

MAILERS' DEPARTMENT

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

The Seattle scale has just been settled by a local board of arbitration. Members receive an increase of 25 cents per day for the first two years of the contract and an additional 25 cents for the following two years, making that scale $3.75 and $4 per day. There is also an understanding that where an office had been paying a bonus to the men, that the award would not affect that condition. I understand the Times office has been paying a bonus for the past six months, which brings their day's pay up to $4. There were a few other minor improvements made. I might say in passing that we gained about five new members by the negotiations in that city.

Los Angeles has at last settled its scale controversy with the publishers. They received a $1 per week increase for the first two years of the contract and 50 cents additional the last two years, with fourteen months' back pay at the $1 rate. They have also eliminated section 7 of their old contract, which caused them considerable trouble during its life. They have several new clauses in the contract which will help their organization considerably, but up to date the publishers refuse to sign an arbitration agreement. Your humble servant assisted the members of the scale committee in this matter and wishes to say that the scale committee should be commended for its ability in handling the subject. I know its services are greatly appreciated by the members of No. 9.

I would call to the attention of our members an action of our convention in Colorado Springs which proposes the creation of a general fund of $100,000 by assessment. This subject will be submitted to our members for referendum vote in a very short time, and I feel sure the members will give the matter considerable thought and vote as their conscience dictates.

I have again given attention to the Kansas City situation and regret to report that I was unsuccessful in signing up the Star and Times or Journal, but there is a possibility of all the mailers, with the exception of the foreman in the Star and Times, joining the mailers' organization prior to receiving this number of THE JOURNAL, and that as our members receive the scale of wages, hours and working conditions, the only difference then between our organization and the Star management is a signed agreement and the foreman a member of our organization, which certainly shows improvement in this matter.

I gave attention to the San Diego situation and find that there are not enough real mailers in that city to form an organization, but I am of the opinion that a year hence our prospects will be brighter there.

Attention has been given to Sacramento during the past thirty days, where I found that only one member was left from our organization. All the others had either enlisted or were drafted. I also found that conditions in the mailing trade there were very bad. On the Bee, they had one man and about eight or nine boys. The boys were all new and do not understand much about the business, and you can understand the results of their labor. I mentioned this to the publisher of that publication, and would not be surprised if there will be a chance to resurrect or form a new local in Sacramento with signed contracts covering the papers there in the very near future.

I have taken up the Oklahoma scale matter with the publishers of that city and found them anything but favorable to the proposition. I interviewed the business manager of the Oklahoman, a Mr. Boggs, and also the circulation manager, Mr. Mathews, to whom he referred me, and both interviews did not last more than five minutes, collectively. I wouldn't be surprised if you heard some interesting news from Oklahoma City soon. At any rate, I feel safe in saying we will either get recognition or we will lose everything trying for it, as our members have been compelled to work for $12 per week. We have one full-grown man that has been getting the handsome sum of $6 per week, and the publisher of the Oklahoman tries to justify this condition. Our members are only asking for $18 per week, and, everything considered, I think they are entitled to every penny of this amount. The peculiar part of the whole matter has been that the publisher of the Oklahoman substituted girls in the men's places, expecting that this would discourage our organization. Three of the girls quit and the other joined the union, and I feel safe in saying here that if an adjustment is made that this young lady will be receiving the same pay that any other member of our organization will get. This is not the case at present, as the management of the Oklahoman, like other employers I have met, exploited the labor of women; and besides, she is entitled to $3 less per week than the men receive, although she is now doing the same class of work.

You may hear something shortly from San Francisco and Portland, Ore., as both organizations have scale matters pending. San Francisco is asking for a flat scale of $5 per day.

Now that the second-class mail matter has been adjusted, perhaps our organization in Topeka will come into its own, as there surely will be very little excuse for the publishers to contend that the unsettled conditions of this postal matter prevented an adjustment of our scale contract. I intend to stop at that city on my way back east and am looking forward to an adjustment.

It may be possible that Wichita, Kan., and Oakland, Cal., will be with us shortly.

We have been losing considerable membership through draft and enlistment. I feel that this condition will continue, and I would consider it a favor if the secretaries of all organizations will report to me each month the number of members they have lost through enlistments, etc., also giving names and addresses; it will be a good thing for the International organization to have a record of the same. Fraternally,

CHARLES N. SMITH.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Vice-President John G. Gallagher, of the Mailers' Trade District Union, paid the mailers of Louisville a visit on his return from the convention.

Owing to the lack of mailing work in Louisville C. O. Baner took out a traveling card and is working in Indianapolis. James Boggs is working at the cantonment. John Gallo is "somewhere in Minnesota" with a circus. Dave Rosenthal, the apprentice on the Evening Post, has joined the marines and is now at Paris Island, S. C.

We have five subs here at present. Would not advise any one to come to Louisville to work at this time. EUGENE E. NORTON.

ALBANY, N. Y.

On last Labor day we made our first public appearance in the parade. This year the parade was more of a patriotic demonstration than it was a labor showing. Being one of the paraders, and being on the end of the line, I was surprised to hear the comments of the by-standers as we passed by. I will venture to say that along the whole route there was not one who knew what the mailers were or what the work was that we did. The general impression seemed to be that we worked in the postoffice. This struck me forcibly, and particularly so after reading the report of President Charles N. Smith to the last convention. In his report he spoke of a condition that has arisen, the inclination that most of the publishers have not to recognize us as a craft, and he said that, in most cases, they are getting away with it. I was a delegate to the Baltimore convention and had a printer delegate ask me, "What are the mailers?" Does this not seem strange, and especially so inasmuch as we are part and parcel of the International Typographical Union? It seems to me that this ought to be food for thought for the executive council. We applied on several occasions for jurisdiction over Troy and Schenectady and we were refused on the ground that we were not recognized in those cities by the publishers. I appeared before the typographical union in Schenectady for the purpose of securing aid in our cause, but it was of no avail. Mr. Scott requested that that local give us any aid possible, but I am of the opinion that had the executive council ordered that we must be considered, that we would be recognized by the publishers of that city today. In most offices there is but one mailer as compared with ten printers, and I feel that inasmuch as we are part of the International Typographical Union it would be an easy matter to force our end if it were made an imperative order to the local that the mailers must be recognized in negotiating a new scale. I am willing to admit that there are angles of this matter which I do not understand, but I am willing to learn, and I hope to see in THE JOURNAL the opinions of many expressed on this subject. FRANCIS J. A. RILEY.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

At our second August meeting the following proposition was adopted: That the dues and assessments of members joining the armed forces of the United States for the period of the war will be paid by the union and a special assessment of 15 cents per member per month be levied to pay for same. This proposition will affect only those holding membership in this union on August 1, 1917.

President Fullam and Business Representative McArdle, delegates to the recent convention, take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation for the many favors shown them at the convention and in the different cities where they stopped en route to Colorado Springs. In Cincinnati, a delegation headed by President Weissman met them at the station and escorted them around the city and through its beautiful suburbs. In Cleveland, a delegation headed by President Robinchek met the train and showed them the town. The new inserting machine at the Plain Dealer was an object of particular interest. In Chicago they were met by President Kinsley and Secretary-Treasurer McNichols with a delegation, who took them around the city and made their visit a pleasant one. President Roehl, with a delegation, met them in St. Louis and took them around the city. A delegation headed by President Cowing and former President Goode met them in Kansas City and escorted them to the principal places of interest. In Denver they were met by a live wire, J. B. Casaday, who is bubbling over with energy. He made things hum, always looking out for their comfort or entertainment, so that they had no dull moments in that city.

The American Educational Press is now established in this city, having moved from Springfield, Mass. This was formerly an open shop, but is now thoroughly union. An agreement was signed September 15. We have eight steady positions and there will be more when they are thoroughly established. We have also secured a publication called The Curb, which will employ twelve of our men one night a week. The Times has another insert, which will continue through the winter. This will give fifteen of our men about four days and three nights a week.

Resolutions were adopted at our first September meeting requesting Governor Whitman to reappoint Industrial Commissioner Lynch, whose term expires December 31, 1917.

CHARLES A. GALLAGHER.

TORONTO, ONT.

The mailer delegates and visitors to the recent convention have had nothing to complain of the splendid manner in which they were entertained by the members of various mailer locals on their way to and from Colorado Springs, especially by Walter Weissman, of Cincinnati, and that fair city was certainly viewed from every point of the compass.

The publicity committee of the Mailers' Trade District Union deserves much praise for the manner in which it conducted its business and the results that it achieved, John McArdle and his trusty henchmen, Adam Hoeger and Henry Noonan, being always on the job.

The war situation is being brought home to our people in this country by the printed proclamations to conserve coal, wood and all kinds of fuel, besides the fact of all restaurants being forbidden to serve bacon or beef but once a day, on Tuesdays and Fridays, as well as all households being canvassed by corps of volunteer workers under the food controller.

The arbitration agreements between No. 5 and the Globe, Mail and Empire, World, Star and News have been signed.

Bonuses are being paid by most of the publishers of morning and evening papers over the new scale recently signed, and all will fall in line very shortly. The Toronto Star gave a bonus of $3 per week to continue until the end of the war.

Delegate Eatherly and his wife, who accompanied him to the convention, had a most enjoyable trip.

The Dominion Trades Congress, at this writing in session in Ottawa, promises to be a most memorable one. The attitude of some brainless fools, who talk general strike if they can't get all their demands granted and these reports going broadcast over Canada, the average citizen, unaware of the facts that the majority of bodies work under agreements, to them sacred, believe such rot. The Trades Congress of Canada or any other body in Canada would not sanction any action of this character. The bona fide labor movement in Canada is suffering from a surplus of either socialistic visionaries or charlatans, apparently allied with avowedly disloyal elements—all in contrast to the stand and attitude taken by the American Federation of Labor in the United States.

Conscription is in full swing, hundreds in this city in the first class going up to be examined.

J. G. GALLAGHER.

PORTLAND, ORE.

There being more work here than could be handled, No. 13 sent out an S O S call for more help last month. "Bill" Mattis, an old member of this local, responded from the wilds of Wyoming and is now back in the Oregonian chapel. Glen Lockwood took a traveler out of Seattle and is now subbing on the Telegram and Oregonian. This is his first visit here and we hope he likes it well enough to stay.

President Charles N. Smith paid us a brief visit shortly before attending the convention. Our president and secretary cornered him, and, with the aid of Mr. Warner and his new auto, we had an enjoyable little spin about town and heard first hand of conditions in our trade. We hope his next stop will be longer.

Speaking of autos, Ed Glosser has a real machine, a big seven-passenger Paige, and as classy a looking car as you could want to see. He sure looks like the millionaire mailer now, as the boys in 'Frisco call him.

L. W. PAGET.

THE SECRETARY'S LETTER.

Word has reached this office through President Charles N. Smith that the Los Angeles Mailers' Union has signed an agreement with the Examiner, Evening Herald and Express-Tribune of that city. This matter has been under consideration since January, 1916, and has just been signed up. Under the contract back pay since that time has been allowed. The agreement carries with it an increase of $1 per week for the two years and an additional increase of 50 cents for the following two years. The overtime rate has been increased 5 cents per hour, making it a rate of 70 cents per hour. Much credit is due President Smith and the local officers of Los Angeles Mailers' Union No. 9 for their determination in bringing this matter to a successful close.

Am also informed that St. Louis Mailers' Union No. 3 has been successful in arbitration. Question of pay for holidays on daily newspapers was the matter of arbitration. The union was awarded a verdict in its favor.

Delinquent unions are Dayton, Ohio; Butte, Mont., and Utica, N. Y.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES AND CORRESPONDENTS.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or, expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a cardholder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 20th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of a list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. Hays, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

EFFICIENCY VS. INEFFICIENCY.

[A short talk on present-day composing-room methods of handling machine-set matter and the effect on the efficiency of hand compositors by H. E. Mounstephen.]

In these days of specialization and keen competition it seems that printers should ask themselves the question—"Am I as efficient as it is possible for me to be with the conditions under which I work or can I become more efficient in another office, or under different conditions?" The hand compositor is, always has been, and always will be, an indispensable factor in the life of the printing world, and for this reason, if he expects greater remuneration for his services, from time to time, it should be his one aim to make himself as efficient as possible so that by his efficiency he becomes more valuable as a workman and as a member of organized labor.

What does the employing printer say today when you ask him how business is? He invariably says: "Business is good but I can not secure efficient help at any price." We realize that this condition is partly due to the war, but will it be any better after the war when a great reorganization will necessarily take place? We think not. Efficient labor has been steadily growing scarcer and printers seemingly have drifted with the tide and pursued methods that tend to make a workman become careless and to use his feet instead of his hands and his head. From time immemorial the man who has been willing to use his brain and who has been ready and capable of doing things that may be slightly more difficult at first, but easy afterward, has been in demand and has very seldom been refused the price he has placed on his efficiency. The man who has always chosen what he thinks the easiest way and pursued it has found that when opportunity knocked at his door he was inefficient and must either stay at the bottom of the ladder or look to his more efficient brother to carry his along.

We all know that the old-time all-round printer was a thorough printer and knew how to handle type, and unless he could did not consider himself efficient, or at least his employer didn't. It was on this basis that the wonderful organization, the typographical union, was built up and on the same basis depends its future success—"the efficiency of its members."

There are a great many printers who handle hardly anything but machine-set matter, and these are the men more especially who should ask themselves the question as to the effect this machine product is having on their efficiency and whether it will be beneficial for them to continue to handle this product or to help themselves and their fellow workers and employers, by telling them of the desire to be more efficient in the future and suggest a change that will increase their efficiency, be more economical for the employer, and place the office on a more desirable and systematic basis.

Employing printers also should question themselves and examine their methods of operation and not be satisfied to go along in the same old way just because they have done so for some time; and should study not only which machine will assure them the greatest amount of product and which is the easiest for the inefficient man to handle, but which machine or method will show the greatest saving and adopt the one which affects the job from the time it comes into the office until it is ready for the customer—find which machine is the most flexible and versatile—the one that will place them in the enviable position of being able to handle any job—whether large or small, intricate or otherwise—the machine that will set double-price matter at single-price time—the machine that will give him all the material that he uses, both type, rules, leads, slugs, spacing material and the method by which he can eliminate his distribution or non-productive time and buy that machine because of what it will do even though it takes efficient workmen to get the results. It is essential that the employing printer considers these questions separately and very seriously because the efficiency or inefficiency of his staff is dependent on his choice of equipment, and should he make a wrong choice he is in a poor position to meet his competitor who has chosen wisely and consequently has to do work at a loss until finally he sees the error of his choice and changes to the equipment which will assist his men to become efficient workmen and reflect credit on himself and his house and place him on an equal footing with his competitor.

These remarks are based on conversations with employes and employing printers in various parts of the country and the deductions made have been arrived at after much thought and study of conditions as they are and will be in the future. We must fully realize the seriousness of the situation and how both employers and employes are coworkers for the welfare of the printing business; and that there should be the fullest investigation and concentration on the work of building up the efficiency of the printing office and of the workmen by the use of the most modern and complete methods.

FOR THE KAISER.

German, why fight for a crown
For the Kaiser?
Tear his old monarchy down,
For the Kaiser.
Toil and war your backs have bent,
Shot and shell your bodies rent,
For a despot's government,
For the Kaiser.

Battlefields and streams run red,
For the Kaiser,
And the aged by taxes bled,
For the Kaiser.
What do common Germans gain,
They who suffer death and pain,—
Were the Kaiser's own sons slain,
For the Kaiser?

By tradition you're enslaved
For the Kaiser,
On your minds by time engraved,
For the Kaiser.
Empire, "builded on the sand,"
Babes are starving by thy hand,
Guilty, greedy Fatherland,
For the Kaiser!

Serbia's fate will hist'ry tell,
For the Kaiser,
How the weaker nations fell
For the Kaiser;
Like a babe by beast devoured,
Belgium brave was overpowered,
Act unworthy of a coward,
For the Kaiser.

Treason lives and bombs are hurled,
For the Kaiser,
Grief and woe spread through the world,
For the Kaiser.
Crumbling is the emperor's throne.
'Tis the victory alone,
That through waste and war has grown,
For the Kaiser.

CHICAGO NEWSPAPER SCALE AWARD

Negotiations for a new newspaper scale were instituted by Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 on November 30, 1914, when the officers of the union officially notified the Chicago publishers of proposed changes as required by the local contract.

It is not the purpose of this article to inflict upon the readers of THE JOURNAL the details of the many conferences and controversies which have marked these scale negotiations, covering a period of nearly three years.

Exercising their constitutional privilege, the representatives of the union have consistently and repeatedly disregarded the recommendations and suggestions made by the officers of the International Union, although those recommendations and suggestions were invited.

Under the provisions of the local contract, and after a delay of nearly three years, the local parties finally agreed to submit the controversy to the International Board of Arbitration for decision.

At a meeting of the International Board held in Indianapolis the second week in October the representatives of Typographical Union No. 16 and the Chicago newspaper publishers presented their evidence and arguments, and on October 11, the board reached a decision by a vote of four to two.

The Chicago scale for 1912-1915 included the following rates for weekly employes, working eight hours per day:

	Day.	Night.
Proofreaders	$29 00	$31 00
Copycutters	29 00	31 00
Copyholders	21 00	23 00
Make-ups	29 00	31 00
Machine tenders	29 00	31 00

The proposition originally submitted by the union sought to abolish the bonus system and provided for a working day of seven and one-half hours for all journeymen at these weekly rates:

	Day.	Night.
Proofreaders	$30 00	$33 00
Copycutters	30 00	33 00
Copyholders	22 00	24 00
Make-ups	30 00	33 00
Machine tenders	30 00	33 00
Operators and handmen	30 00	33 00

The award of the International Board, effective October 11, 1917, provides for an eight-hour day for weekly employes at these rates:

	Day.	Night.
Proofreaders	$31 00	$33 00
Copycutters	31 00	33 00
Copyholders	23 00	25 00
Make-ups	31 00	33 00
Machine tenders	31 00	33 00

The old scale included rates of 62 and 67 cents per hour for day and night work, respectively, for men employed on an hourly basis, for not less than seven hours' work. The award increases these rates to 66 and 71 cents and provides for a minimum day of seven and one-half hours.

The old scale included provisions that bonus operators should be paid 50 and 55 cents (day and night) per hour on an average of 3,500 ems, and 55 and 60 cents per hour on an average of 4,500 ems, with 1 cent per 100 ems after an average of 4,500 ems. The award increases these hourly basic rates for bonus operators to 53 and 58 cents, and to 58 and 63 cents, and provides that operators may be employed on a time basis at the hourly rate for other journeymen.

At one time during the period covered by these negotiations the following increases in the wage rates were tentatively agreed to in the scale conferences: An increase of $1.50 per week for weekly employes, an increase of 3 cents per hour for hourly employes, and an increase of 2 cents per hour on the basic rates for bonus operators. The award made by the International Board provides for an increase of $2 per week for weekly employes; an increase of 4 cents per hour for hourly employes and an increase of 3 cents per hour on the basic rates for bonus operators.

In making its decision in this case the International Board said:

This case was referred to the International Board at the request of the local parties under the terms of the local contract, which provides that controversies of this character may be submitted to the board and considered under the procedure of the International agreement in effect September 1, 1909. That arbitration agreement provides for a board consisting of three representatives of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and three members of the Executive Council of the International Typographical Union, and does not permit the board to call in an additional member in the event of the failure of the six members of the board to reach a decision. The request of the local parties was granted and the proceedings were conducted as above indicated.

* * * * * * *

The board directs that the memorandum submitted by President Scott and the dissenting opinion of Messrs. Barrett and Hays be attached to this decision.

It will be noted that the award was agreed to by a vote of four to two. Vice-President Barrett and Secretary-Treasurer Hays filed dissenting opinions, in which they stated:

We dissent from the above decision on the ground that the increases in the wage scale provided in the award are inadequate.

The memorandum submitted by President Scott, and referred to in the decision, reads as follows:

Notwithstanding the fact that the increased wage provided in this award is entirely inadequate, the undersigned votes to concur in the above decision. The representatives of the International Typographical Union on the International Board are bound by the terms of the local contract, which does not permit a seventh member to be added to the International Board in this case. Rather than permit the Chicago publishers to continue to profit at the expense of the employes through an indefinite deadlock and extension of the previous scale, the writer reluctantly agrees to the award.

By agreement between the representatives of the local parties the award made by the International Board continues in effect until February 15, 1919, unless otherwise changed or amended by mutual consent.

It is not improbable that attempts will be made to use this award as a measuring rod in other jurisdictions. The ethics of their trade permit professional scale negotiators to use this award without reference to the conditions under which it was made or to the memorandum and dissenting opinions attached thereto by order of the board. Officers of subordinate unions and members of scale conference committees may expect to encounter this decision in mutilated form.

The writer offers no apology for voting to confirm this inadequate award. The members of Typographical Union No. 16 were entitled to a substantial increase in their wage scale, regardless of the blunders which had been made by the representatives of the union in these negotiations. The easy way, to which political expediency beckoned, would have continued the deadlock for another year at least, thereby depriving the members of No. 16 of even the meager increases which the award includes.

The Chicago award is inadequate. The members of the typographical union employed in the newspaper composing rooms of that city are not responsible for the failure of the Department of Justice to release the newspapers of the country from the clutches of the paper manufacturers, nor are they responsible for the inexcusable blunder made by Congress in increasing the rates on second-class mail matter. Newspaper publishers in other large cities —no more prosperous than those of Chicago—have found a way to put increased wages into the pay envelops of their employes, and in many instances these increases have been granted voluntarily.

In any event the Chicago newspaper scale deadlock has been broken, and if the officers of the International Union and the members of Typographical Union No. 16 are disappointed in the award, there is some satisfaction in the knowledge that those who rejoice in deadlocks are disappointed also. M. G. S.

San Francisco Scale Award.

After a delay of several weeks consumed in an effort to agree on the fifth man to act as chairman of the board, the San Francisco newspaper scale was submitted to arbitration in Indianapolis on October 13. The board was composed of H. N. Kellogg and B. F. Lawrence, representing the publishers, and President Scott and L. Michelson, representing the union, with George C. Hitt, of Indianapolis, as chairman.

Hearings were held on October 13, 15 and 16, President Tracy appearing for the union and H. W. Norton for the San Francisco publishers.

The union's proposition included an increase of $4 per week for all journeymen. The publishers offered the existing wage for an eight-hour day.

The award which follows increases the weekly wage scale for all journeymen $2 per week, and increases the working day from seven to seven and one-half hours:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., October 29, 1917.
SAN FRANCISCO TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION No. 21
vs.
SAN FRANCISCO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The parties at interest in this case agreed upon all of the terms of a new contract excepting the number of hours to constitute a day's and night's work, the wages to be paid the various classes of men and the date on which the conditions shall become effective.

At the urgent solicitation of the parties at interest, consent was given that the differences respecting these points should be arbitrated in this city by a board to consist of five men, two representatives thereof to be selected by the president of the International Typographical Union and two to be nominated by the chairman of the special standing committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, these four to agree upon a chairman satisfactory to the local parties, proceedings to be conducted as provided for local arbitration in the code of procedure of the arbitration contract between the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the International Typographical Union. The four original members of the board were unable to agree upon any of the points in question. The chairman was then called in to decide these points. The decision is:

1. On both morning and evening newspapers seven and one-half (7½) hours, exclusive of lunch time, shall constitute a day's work, and forty-five (45) hours shall constitute a week's work.

2. Operators and other journeymen (except foremen, assistant foremen and proofreaders) working on morning newspapers, shall receive not less than five dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($5.66⅔) per day.

3. Operators and other journeymen (except foremen and proofreaders) working on evening newspapers, shall receive not less than five dollars and sixteen and two-thirds cents ($5.16⅔) per day.

4. Foremen of morning newspapers shall receive not less than seven dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($7.66⅔) per day. Assistant foremen shall receive not less than six dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($6.66⅔) per day.

5. Foremen of evening newspapers shall receive not less than six dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($6.66⅔) per day. Assistant foremen shall receive not less than six dollars and sixteen and two-thirds cents ($6.16⅔) per day.

6. Heads of adrooms on morning newspapers shall receive not less than six dollars and sixteen and two-thirds cents ($6.16⅔) per day.

7. Heads of adrooms on evening newspapers shall receive not less than five dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($5.66⅔) per day.

8. Proofreaders on morning newspapers shall receive not less than six dollars and sixteen and two-thirds cents ($6.16⅔) per day.

9. Proofreaders on evening newspapers shall receive not less than five dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($5.66⅔) per day.

10. In machine offices where four or less machines are in use, where no regular machinist is employed, there must be at least one machinist-operator, who shall receive not less than five dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($5.66⅔) per day for day work, and six dollars and sixteen and two-thirds cents ($6.16⅔) for night work. A machinist-operator shall be construed to mean an operator who shall be capable of keeping a machine in running order and shall be responsible for the working of such machine.

11. Head linotype machinists shall receive not less than six dollars and sixteen and two-thirds cents ($6.16⅔) per day for night work, and five dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($5.66⅔) per day for day work.

12. Journeymen assistant machinists shall receive not less than four dollars and sixty-six and two-thirds cents ($4.66⅔) per day or night.

13. Journeymen members of San Francisco Typographical Union No. 21 may serve as apprentices on morning and evening newspapers under instructions of machine tenders, and during the same hours, said apprenticeship to be completed in one year. The ratio of such apprentices shall be one to every one, two, or three machine tenders. Said apprentices shall receive twelve dollars ($12) per week for the first six months and fourteen dollars ($14) per week for the second six months.

14. * * * For starting work earlier than 6 P. M. on morning newspapers thirty-three and one-third (33⅓) cents a day in addition to the regular scale shall be paid; provided such extra compensation shall not apply on Friday and Saturday, nor to any shift, on any day, starting not earlier than 7 A. M. and ending not later than 6 P. M. Working hours on evening newspapers shall be between 7 A. M. and 6 P. M.; for starting work before the hour specified, thirty-three and one-third (33⅓) cents a day in addition to the regular scale shall be paid.

15. The time of the taking effect of this scale shall be the date of the making of this award, namely, October 20, 1917.

Respectfully submitted,

George C. Hitt, Chairman;
H. N. Kellogg,
B. F. Lawrence,
M. G. Scott,

The undersigned dissent from the above award, believing that the union was entitled to a substantial increase in the wage scale, without an increase in the working hours.

Milwaukee Scale Award.

Because of irregularities in the local arbitration proceedings, the Milwaukee newspaper publishers appealed from the local decision to the International Board of Arbitration. Upon the evidence submitted it was evident that the chairman of the local board had disregarded the explicit provisions of the code of procedure required by the International Agreement. The irregularities were of such a character that the local award could not be confirmed, and after considering the controversy at two meetings, the International Board requested the representatives of the union and the publishers to appear before the board at the meeting held in Indianapolis, October 8.

After due consideration of the scale sections in controversy the following award was made:

Indianapolis, Ind., October 9, 1917.
Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23
vs.
Milwaukee Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association.

This case concerns propositions for a new wage scale agreement.

The board decides that under section 15 of the code of procedure of the arbitration contract it can not make a decision for more than three years; therefore, this decision shall date from August 8, 1916, until August 8, 1919.

The hours for a regular day's or night's work shall be eight, exclusive of at least thirty minutes for lunch. Help employed on the lobster shift commencing at 12 o'clock midnight shall work seven (7) hours per night and shall be paid at the rate of the regular morning scale.

Journeymen on evening papers are to receive $27 per week to date from the beginning of the next fiscal week. Journeymen on morning papers are to receive $30 per week from the beginning of the next fiscal week.

Superannuated members are to receive $18 per week beginning with the next fiscal week.

Morning and evening journeymen and superannuated members are to be given $2 per week back pay from April 1, 1917, to the beginning of the next fiscal week.

The ratio of apprentices shall be one to five and no office shall be entitled to more than eight. No present apprentice to be disturbed, but offices now having more than eight shall conform to that ratio when apprentices now employed in excess of the ratio complete their terms. Apprentices shall receive the following wages from the beginning of the next fiscal week:

For the probationary six months	$5 00
For the following six months	6 00
For the following six months	7 00
For the following six months	8 00
For the following six months	9 00
For the following six months	10 00
For the following six months	11 00
For the following six months	12 00
For the following six months	13 00
For the following six months	14 00
For the following six months	16 00

The representatives of the publishers and the typographical union having stated that an agreement on the remaining sections of the contract can be reached through conciliation, the board refers these sections to the local joint committee, the provisions of the existing agreement, except as changed by this decision, to remain in effect pending an adjustment as above provided.

Respectfully submitted,

H. N. Kellogg,
Charles H. Taylor, Jr.,
W. S. Jones,
M. G. Scott,
W. W. Barrett,
J. W. Hays.

The Bulletin Fifty Cents a Year.

The Colorado Springs convention authorized the executive council to fix a yearly subscription price for the Monthly Bulletin, issued by President Scott, and "which contains scale and other information of value to scale committees or officers charged with the task of negotiating new scales, especially so in event arbitration of scale contentions becomes necessary." Complying with the convention action, the council has fixed a price of 50 cents per year. The Bulletin will continue to be mailed free to presidents and secretaries of local unions, but any member can be placed on the mailing list by forwarding his address to President Scott, 635 Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind., together with the yearly subscription price of 50 cents.

Canadian Strikes and Lockouts.

The Canadian compulsory investigation act, designed to prevent strikes and lockouts, and held up to America as just the remedy for the waste, suffering and loss entailed by labor disputes, is a failure, reports the United States department of labor's bureau of statistics.

Although the law disclaims restriction of the right to strike or lockout and is limited to industries affecting the public welfare directly. it provides that a strike or lockout in such industries is illegal until the dispute has been reported on by a board of conciliation and investigation, and that other industries, by agreement of both parties to the dispute, may be brought within its scope. Strictly interpreting the act, any strike or lockout in industries within its scope, before an investigation, is a violation.

Many such violations were discovered, showing how lightly the act and its penal provisions were held. Even those strikes and lockouts which occurred after an investigation, and were, therefore, legal, should be charged to the act's discredit, since its sole purpose was to avoid interruption to industry—something it often failed to do.

From March 22, 1907, to December 31, 1916, 222 strikes and lockouts occurred within the scope of the act. These affected a total of 100,608 employes, whose time loss was 4,838,647 working days. In 44 cases, involving 44,086 workers and a loss of 3,665,969 days, application was made for investigation. Of these, 18, affecting 20,330 employes, with a loss of 1,822,803 days, did not result in strikes or lockouts until after the board made a report. These strikes were, therefore, "legal."

Thus there have been 204 "illegal" strikes and lockouts, affecting 80,278 employes, whose loss was 3,015,844 days. Of these 178 strikes, involving 56,532 employes and a loss of 1,172,678 days, occurred without either party to the dispute seeking the aid of the act.

The act also breaks down as a conciliatory agency. Its penal provisions have been lightly regarded. In the nine years ending December 31 last there have been eleven prosecutions—nine for illegal strikes and two for illegal lockouts.

The investigators conclude:

> In the face of this record it does not seem probable that a wholesome respect has been fostered for such provisions. On the contrary, whatever success has attended the act has been due to the conciliatory effort of the Canadian department of labor through its fair wage office and its boards of conciliation and investigation.

Such a report, coming from such a source, will probably put a damper upon attempts to enact similar laws in this country. Up to date only Colorado has such a law, which has been in operation about two years.

A Canadian Soldier's Impressions.

The editor of the Toronto Weekly Sun, an agricultural paper, sends THE JOURNAL a copy of a letter recently received from a member of Typographical Union No. 91, now fighting in the world battle for democracy. The letter follows:

FRANCE, September 6, 1917.

DEAR OLD BOMB-PROOFER—As we go to press the artillery is pi-ing Fritz's defenses, and, judging by the noise, a good bit of the dis. is going into the hell box. You can't see anything for smoke and dust. A year ago I thought we should have had the job run off by this time, but all I can do is give you a few impressions.

I have had a very lucky streak here. Seldom does any one hold down a job in this shop for eighteen months. That has been my good fortune, and I have helped on a few of the special editions—the third battle of Ypres, the Somme and Vimy Ridge—and only once, when I took an impression too literally from a whizz-bang, have I been sent to the bank. I've dodged a lot of minion, nonpareil, and all the way up to forty-eight-point bold face, and am still live matter. But war certainly knocks the serifs off a fellow's civilization. I don't suppose, though, that there are not ways in which we are improved by it. In resourcefulness and cheerfulness in all kinds of discomfort, we perhaps gain a couple of points. In fact, you hear more grousing when things are at their best than when we are really in difficulty. Sometimes the grippers won't grip, or the ink is too stiff, or there is too much reducer, or the stock is full of electricity. Occasionally the whole job is out of register, or the Russian halftone doesn't show up, but we keep on smiling and working. I think we are nearly on the last form, and are going strong on the make-ready. Kerensky's plate may have to be re-etched or changed for a new one from Tokio, but we are hoping for the best.

The next job will be our peace jubilee number, and will be published next year at the latest, in Toronto. The Yankee insert will only be a supplement to our war number. It will be mostly color work; I don't expect they will add much to the text of the edition.

I hope this will find you and your "staff" in the best of health and spirits. I am happy as a lark myself. Drop me a line whenever you get an inspiration. Your old pal,

F. L. HOLLINGSHEAD.

THE JOURNAL is informed that the writer of the foregoing has a wife and six children in Canada, twins having been born shortly after he left for the war front. In the days before the war Mr. Hollingshead had worked in Toronto and Winnipeg, where he was well and favorably known among the printers.

Result of the Referendum Vote.

At the time of closing the forms for this issue of THE JOURNAL sufficient returns had been received from subordinate unions to indicate the result of the vote on the four propositions submitted to the membership on October 17.

The first and second propositions are defeated. The third is adopted, and also Plan A of the fourth proposition.

The first proposition related to payments to the old age pension and mortuary funds; the second proposition provided for a graduated increase in salaries of the president and secretary-treasurer until the figures of $5,000 per year were reached, and the third (the only one adopted) provides that it must be necessary to secure the endorsement of 150 subordinate unions in order to petition the executive council to submit a proposition to a vote of the membership.

The adoption of Plan A of the fourth proposition relegates to subordinate unions the question of keeping in good standing members in the army or navy of the United States or any of its allies. Our members who enlist or are drafted into the great world contest for the establishment of democracy should have their membership in the organization protected during their time of service. However, as the International Union, by referendum vote, has referred the question of such protection to local unions, it is presumed they will all take favorable action thereon.

Nominations of Officers.

According to the by-laws of the International Typographical Union, any member who desires to be a candidate for an office in the International Union must announce such candidacy in the December and January issues of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL preceding the date fixed by law for the making of nominations. The biennial election of officers occurs on the fourth Wednesday in May, 1918, and nominations may be made by local unions only at the regular union meeting in February. The forms for the December number of THE JOURNAL will close on November 20, consequently those wishing to announce their candidacy must forward such announcement to Secretary-Treasurer Hays on or before that date, together with a certificate, signed by the president and secretary of their local union, under seal, attesting that they have been in continuous good standing for one year prior to November 1, 1917. The sections of the by-laws covering this procedure read as follows:

ARTICLE I.—QUALIFICATIONS OF OFFICER.

SECTION 1. The qualifications of candidates for office in the International Typographical Union shall be as follows: 1. Membership in the International Union and in continuous good standing for at least one year previous to making a declaration as candidates and previous to the acceptance of the nomination ("continuous good standing" means that a member must have paid his dues and assessments each month as provided by International law), and freedom from delinquency of any nature to the International or subordinate unions. 2. Membership in a subordinate union which has paid per capita tax and discharged all other financial obligations due this International Union. 3. For second vice-president, membership in the German-American Typographia; for third vice-president, membership in a mailers' union. 4. Candidates for office in trade district unions who, by virtue of their office, become officers of the International Union, shall, in addition to the preceding qualifications, be subject to the qualifications provided for in the laws of their respective trade district unions.

ARTICLE II.—INTERNATIONAL ELECTIONS.

SECTION 1. Members of subordinate unions who desire to be candidates for office in the International Typographical Union shall announce such candidacy in the December and January issues of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL preceding the date fixed by law for the making of nominations. Candidates when making such announcements shall accompany the same with a certificate signed by the president and secretary of the local union to which they belong, and bearing the seal of the union, certifying that they have been in continuous good standing for one year previous to November 1 of that year. Announcements shall not exceed in space four lines of six-point type the full width of one column of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, and shall contain the following:

Name .....
Candidate for .....
Member of .....Union No.....
Continuous active member for.....years

These announcements shall be properly classified under the heading of "Candidates for International Offices" and shall be further classified under appropriate sub-headings designating the office for which the member is a candidate, and this publication shall be an official notification to the officers and members of subordinate unions of the candidacy of such members for the office designated.

Officers of the International Union to be elected on the fourth Wednesday in May, 1918, are as follows: President, first vice-president, second vice-president, third vice-president, secretary-treasurer, one member of the board of auditors, four trustees of the Union Printers Home, four delegates to the American Federation of Labor, one delegate to the Trades and Labor Congress of the Dominion of Canada, and an agent of the Union Printers Home. The second vice-president is nominated and elected by the German Typographia, the third vice-president by the mailers' unions comprising the Mailers' Trade District Union, and the delegate to the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress must be a member of a typographical union in the Dominion of Canada. None but members of the German Typographia may nominate and vote for a candidate for second vice-president, none but members of mailers' unions may nominate and vote for a candidate for third vice-president, but all local unions and members thereof may nominate and vote for a candidate for delegate to the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress and all the other offices.

Changes in the Newspaper World.

Things are happening in the newspaper world with a rapidity that makes a five-reel movie seem slow in comparison. During the past month the Cleveland Plain Dealer absorbed the Cleveland Daily Leader, which leaves the first-named paper in absolute control of the morning newspaper field in the Sixth City, and the Vancouver Sun purchased and "killed" its competitor, the News-Advertiser. This gives the Sun a monopoly in the morning newspaper field of the metropolis of western Canada, a city of 250,000 inhabitants. Forty situations in the composing room of the Cleveland Leader were lost to our members through the consolidation, and about twenty-five in Vancouver. The Montreal Daily Mail, a six-day morning paper, has also suspended publication.

On October 8 the Boston Herald was issued as the combined Boston Herald and Boston Journal. The amalgamation of the Journal with the Herald is one of the most important events that has occurred in the New England newspaper field since the consolidation of the Traveler with the Herald on July 1, 1912.

The elimination of the Boston Journal leaves only four morning papers in the Boston field, the Globe, Post, Herald and Advertiser.

But there is no cloud that has not its silver lining. Some years ago the Syracuse Post-Standard discarded its Sunday edition, and became a six-day morning paper. A few weeks ago, after several months of preparation, the Sunday morning paper was re-established, and a glance over the first issue indicates that the people of central New York state are to have a Sunday paper that will measure up to the great dailies of the metropolitan cities.

On September 8 the Nashville Banner printed its first Sunday paper, consisting of ninety-two pages, with supplements. This is one of the leading evening papers of the south. The Sunday Banner has a rotogravure section, which is the only one of its kind in Tennessee. The paper has set a rapid pace for itself with its first Sunday issue, and editorially and typographically it measures up to the best.

Publishers "Doing Their Bit."

There is no question that the newspaper publishers are doing their share in the present war with Germany. Not the least of these is the Chicago Tribune, which is publishing a paper in France for our soldiers now at the front. In the editorial columns the publishers state the "Army edition is published for the United States soldiers in France as the Chicago Tribune's individual contribution to the war against Germany. The army edition is not published for profit. All its earnings will go at the end of the war to whatever army funds the commander-in-chief of the American expeditionary forces shall direct, and to his representatives at all times the accounts of the army edition will be open for audit."

All the army camps—national guard and drafted men—have a weekly paper of their own, issued under the auspices of the national war-work council of the Young Men's Christian Association. The movement for providing these newspapers was started by John Stewart Bryan, publisher of the Richmond (Va.) News-Leader. Among contributors are Colonel Roosevelt and many of the best-known newspaper workers and cartoonists. The plan is to furnish 4,000 copies of the papers to each of the cantonments, four of these pages to be supplied from the New York office to the co-operating publisher, and the four pages of camp news to be set up and printed by the local newspapers.

A Patriotic Hoosier Publisher.

The publisher of the Indiana Daily Times, Ben S. Boyce, is a soldier with the American army in France. This is not an especially interesting statement on its face, but an explanation of how he got there adds a distinctive feature, and makes it "news." The Times is owned by W. D. Boyce, father of the subject of this article. The elder Boyce is also publisher of weekly papers in Chicago, with immense circulations, and he bought the Indianapolis daily for his son, and expected him to develop and manage the paper as publisher. This was not brought about at once, however, and the name of W. D. Boyce appeared as publisher for some time.

Immediately after the declaration of war Ben S. Boyce enlisted in the artillery as a private. Mr. Boyce was on his way to Jefferson Barracks as an artilleryman when a sergeant remarked to him that he believed the signal corps would be the first to go to the front, rather than the artillery. This remark changed Mr. Boyce's plan, and when he arrived at Jefferson Barracks he applied for transfer from the artillery arm to the signal corps. He wished to get to France as quickly as possible. The transfer was granted and within a short time he was on his way to France as a private in the signal corps.

The young man's patriotic action pleased his father so greatly that he placed the son's name at the head of the Times column as publisher. It will remain there until he returns from the war, and when that time comes the Times will be his property.

EDITORS and publishers representing the leading newspapers of Wisconsin met in Milwaukee last month and organized the Wisconsin Press Association, the object of which, as stated in the constitution, is to "unite the daily and weekly newspapers of Wisconsin in a campaign for patriotic education; to combat sedition; to bring all the people of Wisconsin to a full understanding of the issues of the war and the danger that confronts the United States in the event of a German victory; to promote the work of the Wisconsin Loyalty League and other patriotic societies in the state and nation that are working for the defeat of German autocracy."

PRINTERS and pressmen employed by the H. C. Miner Litho Company, Ltd., New York city, one of the largest concerns in its line in the country, were notified that their wages would be increased 10 per cent beginning with the second week of October.

The action of the company came entirely unsolicited and was heartily welcomed on the part of the employes as a means to bridge the hiatus between their weekly wage and the excessive cost of the necessities of life.

THE executive council of the International Union subscribed for bonds of the second Liberty loan to the amount of $30,000. New York Typographical Union No. 6 invested $10,000 and St. Louis Union No. 8 $15,000. Together with their subscriptions to the first loan, No. 6 now has $15,000 invested and No. 8 $20,000, the latter sum the entire sinking fund of the organization.

THE public is hearing only a very small part of the crusade against publications whose policies are considered disloyal. It is known that newspapers and small magazines quietly have been suspended at the rate sometimes of two or three a day as a result of the activities of the postoffice department officials. Hardly a day passes that two or more publishers, mostly of foreign-language newspapers, are not before Alexander M. Dockery, third assistant postmaster-general, to explain editorials or news articles to which the department has taken exception. In most cases their mail privileges have been taken away.

EARL H. EMMONS, a member of Big Six, has written a new book of army rhymes called "Versified Adventures of the V. C. A." Mr. Emmons is a member of the Veteran Corps of Artillery of New York and has returned from several weeks' service guarding the Catskills aqueduct, and his latest volume tells in humorous verse of the trials and tribulations of the rookie in the army. The book is illustrated by halftone engravings and also pen sketches by the author. Other books by Mr. Emmons include "Redskin Rimes," "Down on the Dear Old Farm" and "Pomes." He also has written several songs, and at one time issued a unique newspaper called The Burglar's Gazette. "Versified Adventures of the V. C. A." retails at 75 cents and is published by R. S. Dunne, 11 East Thirty-sixth street, New York.

THE Bayonet, the first newspaper to be written and edited by members of the new national army, and the official organ of the Eighteenth division, at Camp Lee, Va., made its initial appearance last month. It is a full-size, eight-page newspaper, with a four-page pictorial section, showing camp scenes. All news relates directly to men in the cantonments and their activities. Each company in the camp has a reporter, whose stories go to the headquarters corps of editors, who head and edit the copy. The mechanical work is done free in the plant of the Richmond Times-Dispatch. The first issue had a circulation of 15,000 and carried 618 inches of advertising. Any profits from the enterprise are to be used in providing recreational equipment.

THE New York Evening Telegram thinks that with the rounding up of Industrial Workers of the World in Chicago and the jailing of William D. Haywood the end should be in sight for a dangerous band of malcontents. The Telegram also calls attention to resolution 18 in the book of laws of the International Typographical Union as proof of what legitimate unionism thinks of this "unsavory mob." The resolution declares "that the International Typographical Union does not recognize the Industrial Workers of the World as a labor organization."

SETTING type on the same paper for fifty years is the record of Edward Miller, of the Elizabeth (N. J.) Daily Journal. Mr. Miller retired recently after passing his sixty-ninth birthday. He was born in New Brunswick, N. J., and learned the printing trade on the New Brunswick Times before going to the Elizabeth Journal, where, since the installation of type-setting machines, he has been in charge of "ad" composition.

BEFORE the revolution there were about 2,000 newspapers in Russia. Now there are nearly 3,000. The new papers have little advertising support, but are the organs of political organizations and are financed by political parties. The cost of production in Russia is much lower than in America. The papers seldom have more than six or eight pages, the circulation is limited and no very large staffs are maintained. The price of a little more than 3 cents a copy helps to defray part of the operating cost besides paying for the paper.

THE recent convention of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America, held in Chicago, decided that the name of the organization was too cumbersome, and it will hereafter be known under its former title, United Typothetæ of America.

IN a letter received at headquarters from Thomas J. O'Gorman, Cambridge, Mass., he has the following to say:

It gives me great pleasure to inform you that I am in the best of health and working, all due to my short stay in our Home in Colorado Springs, and I am fully convinced that whatever symptoms of tuberculosis I had before entering our Home have entirely disappeared and a permanent cure is the result.

TYPOGRAPHICAL errors, as every printer knows, are oftentimes costly. Sometimes they sink six submarines, and then at other times they merely cause a "call down" from the foreman. It is said that some of the bills of the last Pennsylvania legislature had to be printed more than half a dozen times on account of lapses of the lowly proofreader. One bill was reprinted nine times before all the necessary changes in typography and phraseology had been made. The omission of one of the "n's" in Pennsylvania was the reason for the reprinting of another of the bills.

A PAGE of publicity for the International Typographical Union has recently been appearing in the Cleveland Sunday Leader, written by President James J. Hoban, president of Typographical Union No. 53. The stories are profusely illustrated with views of the Union Printers Home, tent colony, open-air pavilion and other interesting spots around the grounds of the institution. Work similar to that of President Hoban in every community of the country would result in few people not having an accurate knowledge of the various beneficial features of the International Typographical Union.

E. J. HENLEY, Donalda. Alberta, Canada, in a letter to headquarters in which he forwarded his traveling card for renewal, gives the Union Printers Home full credit for restoring him to health. The following is an extract from the epistle, and shows that he is strong enough to withstand the rigors of a northwest Canada winter:

It might be interesting to you to know that it is now over four years since I left the Home. I wasn't then completely cured of tuberculosis, but Doctor Crouch told me if I took good care of myself I would be all right. I worked in Calgary at the printing trade for a while, then bought a farm here, which is 175 miles from Calgary and eighty-five from Edmonton, and am getting along fine. Once or twice a year, when I can get away and when work is plentiful in Calgary, I go down for a few weeks to keep my hand in and meet the boys. I feel as strong and well as ever in my life and feel not the slightest trace of my old trouble. This I attribute to the good care I got at the Home and the way I was shown how to take care of myself after I left there. Hope many others may derive the same benefit as I did.

INSPIRATION for writing a patriotic song is usually found under different circumstances than that experienced by R. H. Perrett, a linotype operator and member of Chicago Typographical Union No. 16. While in a hospital, suffering from a fractured leg, he composed his maiden effort, "Uncle Sam, I Am Strong for You," and the piece is making considerable of a hit. Besides writing the song, the author designed the cover, set it up and registered it for printing. The song can be had by sending 25 cents to R. H. Perrett, 1007 East Sixteenth street, Chicago, Ill.

THE New England linotype school, conducted by E. N. Carver, a member of Boston Typographical Union, has been closed. Pursuant to an agreement entered into between Mr. Carver and the members of Boston Union and the New England Typographical Union two or three years ago, none but members of the union were to be enrolled as students in the school. The Lanston Monotype Company also had a school in Boston for the purpose of teaching the keyboard and caster to the printers of the Hub. This, too, has been closed, owing to lack of interest.

IN A DRY PROVINCE.

Oft he speaks of the olden days
  When they picked the type by hand,
And memory brings in its golden haze
  The dream of a happy band
That gathered when the jig was up
  Where the glasses clink and foam,
And there between each cheering cup
  Their fancies free would roam.

But things have changed a bit since then—
  And that's no idle dream—
No more can any bunch of men
  Secure sufficient steam
To stand in front of fancy bars
  And talk about the shop;
And this is what the pastime mars—
  It can't be "did" on pop.

MISCELLANEOUS SECTION

THE NON-PARTISAN LEAGUE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

In the July JOURNAL, page 50, under heading, "Grand Forks, N. D.," is contributed an article on the Non-Partisan League of North Dakota—a farmers' union—which gives aid to the exploiting class of that state. I will give the other side—the side of the workers, and particularly the union worker, and let the readers judge.

The constitution of North Dakota, and Wisconsin, too, withholds democracy from the people, but abounds with democracy in permitting private ownership of the industries and enterprises to be carried on by a few for selfish gain against the best interests of the many—the masses. The people desire to reverse this; it is high time—they have endured it all too long.

The farmers of North Dakota have raised large crops of all kinds of grains—especially wheat; their wives and children have toiled long days, year after year, but the wheat speculators, who neither "toil nor spin," reaped in the millions; the insurance companies, the land speculators, the live stock gamblers, the packing companies, the railroads, private elevator and packing companies and banks grew tremendously wealthy from farmers' products and their labor—and from the products produced by union men, too.

Private ownership has enslaved the workers and farmers, and thus they are working for collective ownership to be set free, and stop further robbery. There is a clause in the Wisconsin constitution which forbids collective operation of enterprises and thus ties the people's hands; and a clause in the North Dakota constitution, which the people there have sought to change, is practically identical and which the democrats and republicans shrewdly refused to eliminate, because with its elimination the profit-taking few could not ply their trade, reads as follows:

> Article viii, section 10. The state shall never contract any debt for work of internal improvements, or be a party in carrying on such work. * * *

With this in the constitution no grain elevators or warehouses or other work can be undertaken by the people of that state—or Wisconsin, either—that's why the people need to get this changed and this document brought up to date. The farmers do not only get the short end in the selling, but are again fleeced in being compelled to pay two prices for machinery and material purchased from trust monopolies—they pay toll to the profit takers coming and going. They labored and produced all these years, mostly as renters, but their mortgages on their farms didn't lessen—nearly one-half the farms in that state being mortgaged.

They went about to find the cause for this condition, and also to apply the remedy. They found both—the cause and the cure. They discovered that private ownership of the means of distribution was the big curse, and that organization and social or collective ownership of warehouses, railroads, grain elevators and industries in general is the remedy. The farmers want collective ownership—they need it—and so do we as union men. Every municipal venture undertaken by the people collectively proves it.

The farmers took things out of the hands of the exploiting interests in North Dakota at the last election, electing a governor—Lynn J. Frazier, farmer—and captured all but a few of the legislative seats, and inaugurated many socialistic measures, as correspondent states. They were, however, blocked by certain holdover state senators, but if the election of John Baer, the league candidate, to fill a vacancy, which occurred July 10, last, is a criterion of future success, they will sweep the field next time. Baer was elected by 3,000 majority.

Let me say as a socialist member of the Wisconsin legislature, and being in a measure familiar with the obstacles that obstruct the work of North Dakota farmers, that this state, too, is sorely in need of a new document. We are trying to get one; we introduced the same measures long before North Dakota woke up, but of course we were turned down—so were 95 per cent of the labor bills presented—the eight-hour printing bill included. The combined unions' prestige had but little influence on the legislators of big business.

The people's hands here in Wisconsin are tied by an obsolete document framed some seventy-odd years ago—men in their graves impeding progress! The state constitution even forbids the building of a printing plant—and the printing is being done, and has been for many years past, in a non-union establishment, and as printers we have been turned down year after year by the democrats and republicans, just as the farmers of North Dakota.

Correspondent says the state federation of that state has endorsed the farmers' league, as if it were a crime for unions to co-operate with other progressive bodies! Why, sure. The printers and organized labor in Wisconsin want the same changes as the North Dakota people. The changes are in the interest of the public. The changes, if made, will mean democracy for the people; the people will then have the opportunity to really undertake and carry into effect works in the interests of the masses, and this of course will bring wails from the plutocratic element whose unearned profits will stop—and the people benefit.

The labor movement of North Dakota is to be congratulated for co-operating with the league. Wisconsin, I am sure, approves their work likewise, the labor movement here having backed similar measures in the last session of the legislature.

Correspondent quotes the league president as follows:

> I refuse to urge you farmers to raise a larger crop until you or they wipe out this monstrous wrong, and I will say that unless they are big enough to control the transportation of food and coal for the northwest, I can not see a possibility of the United States being successful in this war.

He evidently viewed the situation correctly. Washington is now grappling with the food question. Why should a few in this country make huge profits while our boys are in the trenches? Why should even a penny of profit be permitted; the soldiers are giving their all—their lives. The league president uttered patriotic words. Here are a few samples that substantiate his remarks as to profits made:

Plankinton Packing Company, profits in 1914 (before the war), $285,636—in 1916 (during the war), $1,026,134.

Dupont Powder Company, profits in 1914, $157,-361—in 1916, $1,379,858.

Cudahy Packing Company, profits in 1914, $137,-000—in 1916, $836,698.

Pfister-Vogel Leather Company, profits in 1914, $558,551—in 1916, $832,995.

American Hide and Leather Company, profits in 1914, $89,183—in 1916, $406,000.

In Wisconsin the stock fire insurance companies in ten years—1903-13—collected in premiums $68,965,040 and paid back to the people in fire losses in same period $29,152,025, thus taking from people $39,000,000. This neat sum that these companies retained would run the government of Wisconsin for two years, including all educational institutions from common schools to university.

In Milwaukee the stock fire insurance companies in four years—1911-14—collected $6,257,101 and paid back to people $2,693,781, taking from people nearly $4,000,000.

Another instance: The Milwaukee Gas Company —98 per cent of the stock being owned by eastern financial interests—according to company's statement to the railway commission, made $1,100,000 profits in 1916. At $3,000 a home, this sum taken out of the pockets of Milwaukee citizens, would in a single year have bought 360 workingmen comfortable cottages.

Net earnings of the steel company for the quarter are about $90,000,000—highest on record.

The farmers of North Dakota have been unmercifully robbed and have waited in vain for relief.

They realized that they must pursue a different policy than in the past, and not merely have a mutual good fellowship farmers' society. They need a strong economic organization; they need to elect their own representatives and stand back of them —control them, if you please, the same as big business controls its representatives. They realized that they must cease working in competition while capitalists work in co-operation. They paid dearly for their lethargy and indifference in neglecting to build up a good economic organization and exercising their duty at the ballot box wisely.

It, therefore, comes with ill grace, in my opinion, for a union man to work in opposition to such a worthy cause. The farmers' league represents a portion of our own work. If any union man is ambitious there is plenty of work to do in furthering real union principles.

In conclusion, let us not throw pebbles in our own pathway; let us labor to bring about a better society—to abolish poverty and misery; there are children by the thousands on the farm whose childhood days have been spent not with playthings, in school or recreation, but in hard labor assisting to pay off the mortgage. What cruelty! There are plenty of little children living in the slums that would welcome a better place; there are plenty of mothers working in factories and drudging that would like to remain home to enjoy home life wholesomely and care for their children. Therefore, let us not widen the misunderstanding between the farmers and organized labor (we here in Wisconsin are trying hard to weld these two forces together)—the organs of the big interests will tend to that; let us as union men rather use our every effort to bring the farmers in closer relationship with us, urging them to buy and use union-made products and convince them that organized labor's mission is one of high and sublime purpose—to elevate mankind, to annihilate wrong and injustice and to secure and maintain working conditions conducive to the bests interests of not alone present workers in cities, but for farmers' sons and daughters as well, should they seek employment in cities. In this manner we will be doing great constructive work; the farmers' prejudice of past against unionism will cease, and when the junior workers from the country come to cities they will understand the necessity of organization, and will not so readily yield to the corporations in accepting the places of union men in case of trouble. That is the course we here in Wisconsin are pursuing in bringing the Farmers' Society of Equity—a farmers' union—nearer to the labor movement, and likewise work hand in hand in the legislature for the enactment of labor legislation. And this accounts for the fact that Wisconsin in real sound labor legislation leads all other states because this wise judgment has prevailed.

There are a thousand things that can be done for humanity, and in which work we as union men ought to be in the vanguard. We can lend the strongest arm among all the forces working to alleviate the afflictions upon our brothers and sisters. Let us therefore be grateful for the farmers' assistance and co-operate with them—work unitedly to banish the rule of gold and establish the Golden Rule—and to this mission we invite the North Dakota correspondent to lend his full support.

FIFTY-FIFTY.

The above caption seems a suitable one concerning the relationship which should exist between the foreman and "the men" in their respective spheres, of which I wish to speak.

As I understand the matter, the foreman, in effect, is simply an agent of the International Typographical Union; i. e., the International Typographical Union, where agreements exist, agrees to furnish a sufficient number of union employes to a plant to get out a certain amount of work for a specified local wage. That being the case, the foreman is supposed to hold his position in order to protect the rights of the office and the employes in his department.

But does it always work out that way? I think not. And right here, to my mind, is where Old Man "Friction" gets busy. The foreman, in his anxiety to see that the office is properly protected, forgets the fact that "his men" are just as needful to him as he is to the office, but is soon forced to admit it when he attempts to ignore it. Soon the shop is in a chaotic state and ill-feeling prevails between the foreman and his fellow workers, which would never have occurred had the foreman been a man of the caliber that at all times had realized that the crew was not made up of "his men," but his fellow workers, most of whom, perhaps, had been carrying a card much longer than himself, and realize what the real significance of it means.

Is this particular kind of a foreman living up to his obligation? Is he advancing the cause of unionism as promulgated by the International Typographical Union? Again, I think not.

In a word, to be a successful foreman, a credit to the craft and an exponent of union principles, especially to the young members, it requires something more than a mere mechanical ability to juggle forms and get the paper out on time at a minimum cost to the proprietor. What do you think?

AN IMPROVED DUPLEX LINER.

Dan M. Jones, compositor at the Pressmen's Home, Rogersville, Tenn., has invented and been granted patent papers for a duplex liner for the intertype machine. This patent eliminates all half-em liners by providing an extra half-em circle to the whole em of the left-hand liner. By this method each liner contains a whole and half-em, which enables the machine to produce either whole or half-em lines of their respective length up to thirty and one-half ems, and likewise all even or odd lengths above thirty and one-half ems.

It can be readily seen that such a liner as this patent is advantageous in many ways. The elimination of all half-em liners is quite a saving in cost to the machine users; it also increases the capacity of machine slugs one-half em in length and its scope embraces every whole, half, odd or even em measure that the machine is capable of casting.

The lug bolt slot of this liner has also been improved in that the full length of slot is given to hold on bolt, also the liner has been tempered, which increases the life and reduces wear of same to a minimum.

The invention is known as the Jones Duplex Liner, and the inventor is now negotiating for the necessary machinery for their manufacture, and expects to have the liner on the market in the near future.

WHY THE INCOMPETENT?

The question of competency among printers has long been one that has caused much anxiety to those having the interests of the craft at heart. Here in St. John we are not troubled with incompetents to any very serious extent, but, with the advent of labor-saving appliances of all kinds, as well as the rush to accumulate money, which is the bane of present-day life, the question has cropped up on several occasions. Charles Lawson, one of the old-time school of printers, but who has kept himself abreast of the times, and who is now a member of No. 85, has written an interesting letter to the union on the subject, prompted by a discussion, about eight years ago, with one of the principal officials of the American Type Founders Company. The letter is in a manner reminiscent and at the same time food for thought on a subject that has to do with the future of the printing craft. Under the above caption, Mr. Lawson writes:

Complaint is general among employing printers that they find it difficult to secure efficient help and they deplore the number of "incompetents" in those coming forward to fill the depleting ranks of skilled workmen; that the business of the best paying branches is now divided up between so-called "artists" and the pressman; and that the men who can assemble the present beautiful products of the typefounder in effectual combination are exceptional. If this is true, it leads directly to the caption of this letter.

Reverting to my own apprenticeship, which began about fifty years ago, I can still recall with what pride I set my first stickful; but also realize how much I was imposed upon by my employers, and how very, very much I was indebted to one "oldtimer" in the office for what I know of craftmanship. It was in the early days of press development—no monotype or linotype, no roller-casters, no individual motors, no electric lighting, no steam heat. The main standby was a first pattern Adams, driven by a small horizontal engine located in the basement, for which I was both fireman and engineer, and when not officiating in this capacity was posting hand-bills or delivering papers. I "rolled" for a medium-sized Washington hand-press, which was almost constantly running government blanks of all kinds—reams of them—and for two years the only lookout was the blank wall at the back of the roller table and fifty square feet of a neighboring garden. The pressman was an elderly man who had served his apprenticeship in the office, but whose horizon was widened by the exercise of a liberal mind, and from whom, in close companionship, I obtained the most of my printing education. During the time of our association I never heard anything from him that was "off color" and every hour of the day was packed with nuggets of experience that I find are still valuable. There was abundance of material in the office, well kept; and habits of carefulness, accuracy and cleanliness were inculcated by example as well as precept. Wrong letters found in cases after distribution formed the subject for a lecture, and my shoulders ached many a time from operating the bellows. At the expiration of two years I saw that I would have little chance to gain general experience, and opportunity offered to enter the employ of a young man who had worked for some years in Boston and who was just starting a small job office.

Here I was general factotum and motive power for a small rotary "Ruggles," and my lessons from the hand pressman offset the lack of press experience of my new employer, who was a good compositor but knew literally nothing of presswork. [As an example, he cast a set of rollers on Saturday at his home and brought them in to use on Monday morning on a special job requiring stiff ink. On the first revolution (the rollers revolved around a large cylinder, a flattened section of which formed the press-bed) the stocks came around stripped to the cores, the composition being so pulpy from the surplus water used to make it run in the mold that it adhered to the surface of the cylinder.] Having prepared and cast the rollers for the Adams (glue and molasses camp) for upward of a year, I was able to meet this difficulty.

One possession of his, which I had the privilege of taking home on Saturday nights—it weighed about ten pounds—was the large edition of the specimen book of the McKellar, Smith & Jordan foundry, issued about the close of the civil war in the United States. This was my Sunday curriculum during my apprenticeship—and that and the monthly issues of the Typographic Advertiser have not been surpassed for type display to the present time, except, perhaps, in the multiplication and improvement in type faces.

I mention these personal items in order that the reader may better understand what my opportunities would have been without the inspiration furnished by my pressman friend, an inspiration entirely lacking in the case of many boys who go to "learn the business" at present.

Fifty years of experience (principally as foreman) has led me to this conclusion: That for every incompetent in the rank and file there is an antecedent cause in an employer who was imbecile, or worse. By this I mean (with some qualifications) that he was either a fool or a knave. A man having sufficient prominence in the trade to warrant him in taking an apprentice should do so with some thought as to the influence of the act on the craft and his fellow craftsmen, and on the boy himself. For this reason an applicant should stand the test of a probationary period to determine his qualifications, for many a worthy applicant might be better fitted to be a shopkeeper, horseshoer, teamster, baker or lawyer than a printer, and it will probably take his employer and himself some little time to discover that. It is doubtful if this is considered at all. The necessity for some cheap help in certain departments leads to the engagement of the first applicant who may be reasonably presentable and he is put at work—running errands, pulling proofs, washing rollers; and to cap the climax, "chucking in." Think of it! Almost before he knows a "nick" from a "nancy" or the difference between a serif and a semi-colon, distributing!

These boys and men do not "break in" to the business—some one opens the door, and if they develop into incubi in the trade the fault is less theirs than that of the doorkeeper. A desire to serve their own selfish ends, regardless of the injustice of inducing a boy to waste the best years of his youth in a business for which he is unfitted lies at the bottom of the trouble and, like all selfish scheming, usually reacts on the perpetrator, although it may cause untold misery en route.

The difficulty is aggravated by the lack of discipline and training either in the home or public school. Neither the boys nor men seem amenable to reasonable regulations, and a deterring factor in endeavoring to teach a boy a trade is the necessity for inculcating respect for authority, cleanliness, order and civility, apart altogether from the absolute disinclination on the part of either a boy or his parents to abide by a definite agreement.

The present deification of sport is also having an unfortunate effect. The boy of today, whatever his other shortcomings, is up to date in newspaper lore; and when he sees that a good pitcher or shortstop receives (I do not say can earn) three or four times as much as an ordinary tradesman, and have a good time as well, he is apt to think it wasting time to stick in a stuffy workshop when the out-of-doors emoluments are so much greater, the employment so appealing and the apprenticeship so much shorter and enjoyable. We appear to be educating men to play rather than to work, and the leadings of ethical culture seen trending to the banjo and the tango.

In view of all this, what is the incompetent going to do with himself—what is the trade going to do with him? Obviously he has arrived at this stage of his pilgrimage more sinned against than sinning. He should be taken care of at the expense of the parties responsible—the employing printers—and it is manifestly in their interest to cut off the supply at the source. This can be done by some sensible scheme of office apprenticeship (the best way, in my judgment) that would not permit the boy to be imposed upon and would safeguard the employers' interest as well; or some method of teaching outside the regular offices that would approach as nearly as practicable to workroom practice. The latter means great expense, none of which the boy should be called upon to bear; and, as he is being educated in the interests of the trade, it would seem proper that the trade should shoulder a portion of the burden.

The movement for trade schools as part of the educational system appears to be gaining ground; but it is a question if the best results can be secured in this way, where so little time can be devoted to printing as one of a number of avocations. One provision should be made definite: that none of these schools should be allowed to graduate pupils in such numbers as to lead to their exploitation by unscrupulous promoters in cutting the ground from under the feet of regular workmen or in reducing wages. These safeguards should be emphasized by legislation.

Some years ago the writer was instrumental in having the union appoint a committee to confer with the employers regarding a progressive apprenticeship system on the indenture plan, following somewhat the ideas expressed by Mr. Larson in the above letter. Circulars were printed and sent to the employer outlining the scheme and asking a conference on the matter. Through rivalry and other reasons among the employers the matter died from lack of nourishment. It has never since been dealt with except in a perfunctory manner. It is a matter that should engage the attention of every union, whether in large or small jurisdictions, as the tendency of the age is for speed rather than quality and thoroughness. A. D. COLWELL.

REFLEX OF POLITICO-ECONOMIC CONDITIONS UNDER QUASI-MILITARY RULE.

In the face of the monopolistic attitude of the daily press in crowding each other out of the diurnal field in the doubling-up process, party interests and various institutions will run the risk of becoming atrophied in the community group. To the "man in the street" it looks like another phase of taxation without representation. The people are distinctly ignored in their varied politico-economic interests, and a pan-despotism is looming large in the horizon of the oligarchy—the concentrated aristocratic element—with its back to the wall, is straining every nerve in the expenditure of energy in the slaughter of the class that has numerically increased to such proportions that it has threatened the régime and the regimentation of the parasitical drones that the modern feudalism, through sinister star-chamber methods, has foisted upon the world.

State ownership of men has drowned the world in blood, behooving the proletariat in the person of organized labor to stand shoulder to shoulder and husband their means and their monetary makeshifts by strict economy.

The expenditure of approximately $60,000 a year on conventions it would be well to cut out. We have arrived at these figures by the average number of delegates—300—and the average expenditure of the individual delegate at $200. The executive council of our International Union, a highly scientific body, can well take the place of a committee on laws, and, as the important questions go to the referendum, abolish the convention, as the cigar makers have done. The locals are too much handicapped by yearly appropriations for the ornamental gentry who, in the language of old Shakespeare, "struts and frets his hour upon the stage" and gradually evaporates into the ordinary combination of nitrogen and oxygen.

PASSING OF AN OLD BOHEMIAN.

On October 9 there passed out in St. Louis another of the "bohemians" of the old handset days —John Renick Love, at the age of 55 years. John had lived in the lowly Hotel Ivy, in the heart of the business district, for five or six years past. On the evening of October 8, after passing a joke or two with the day clerk, he went to his little room, lay down in his clothing, drew a blanket over himself—and was there discovered dead at 1 o'clock in the morning of the 9th. His heart had ceased to beat, and the well-known old "bohemian" had passed out in his sleep, calmly, without pain, without a moan. Nature's machinery had simply worn out and stopped, never to go again.

Almost a giant in stature, the towering figure of John Love had been a familiar sight in the haunts of the daily newspaper rounders in the downtown districts for thirty-five years. John was a true "bohemian." He lived his life as a bachelor, without home ties, without so-called "social" connections, loving and depending upon the friendship of his fellow workers of convivial temperaments similar to his own. On the 30th of August he sorrowfully followed to the grave one of his old-time associates, Lide Sawtell, of the Republic chapel. Sawtell was a "good fellow;" he and John had wrought together for many years in the Republic proofroom, and when Sawtell's silent form lay in the casket at Mullen's chapel, John looked lovingly down into the cold white face of his dead workmate and reverently said: "There lies the best friend I ever had." He spoke the truth as he felt it. I personally know that, for he often referred to Sawtell in a way that left no doubt of his warm friendship for that other old "bohemian."

John was a thorough proofreader—there were few better in his time. On one occasion a fellow workman, who had had opportunity to follow John as reviser, after carefully going over fifteen or twenty proofs, discovered it was a waste of time, and said: "It's no use to revise after Love—he gets them all." Being a good workman, John could have been steadily employed—he need never have wanted for work. But he often wanted for employment, and he often went hungry and cold. There was a reason. One word: Drink. The good, gentlemanly, warm-hearted old "bohemian" was "his own worst enemy."

Ed S. Vance, a railway mail clerk, one of John's old-time chums, wrote to me the other day: "John was a good fellow, always a gentleman, and I had always been his friend as he had been mine. Occasionally I would read the riot act to John, in pure friendship, of course, with the idea of starting him on the right track. He was well thought of by those who knew him, as he was always inoffensive and had the instincts of a true gentleman. Oh, well! Poor fellow! He is better off now, and he has preceded us just a few years."

Among the few simple effects left by John I found a beautiful, well-preserved valentine. It mutely told of the one romance in the almost social dearth of his lonely life. It was inscribed: "C. to J., February 14, 1889." The true-hearted old "bohemian" bachelor had preserved this cherished memento for more than twenty-eight years. It had been presented to him while he was employed on the Post-Dispatch, and I personally knew and admired the charming, modest and lovable girl who sent it to him. She is married now to a man of affairs and wealth, a ranchman away up in Idaho. By a coincidence, that dear girl was in St. Louis, visiting relatives and old friends, when John died. She sent a tender letter of sympathy on the day of John's funeral. In a later letter she told more of the old-time friendship between her and John. This is her testimony: "I agree with you that family ties and pleasing environments thrown around him surely would have changed him for the better, as he was a noble character; and my mother never mentioned him without tears, because of her motherly love for him. I, too, have a token of remembrance, and an only one, written December 25, 1888:

'Tis not the value we prize most, but the gift.
Please accept this trifle, as a token of friendship, from one whom you have taken captive by your bewitching ways; and thus accept the homage and reverence of your slave.
Yours to command,

Ne'er would poets speak of the charming Greek,
For whom a god might die,
If they could greet a sight so sweet
As a glance from thy bright eye.
More beautifully bright than stars at night,
They bewitch where'er they go;
Oh! methinks that I for thee could die,
Bright Eyes, I love thee so.

"This came anonymously, but I learned later who sent it to me, and in return compliment, I sent the valentine. I am not surprised to learn that it was among his effects. I am sure he was a noble and grand character."

This is the testimony of two of John's earlier and oldest friends; and I wish to add my testimony to theirs. I knew him longer and better than any; and I will say that he was a man of lofty ideals, disdained to stoop to the meaner things of life, though he died "his own worst enemy." He was educated, had attended the state university at Columbia, was well read, loved history and the poets; and, all in all, his youthful prospects were as bright as any young man need long for.

But he died "his own worst enemy." Oh! fellows, let me ask you to let the accursed stuff alone. It never benefited any man one iota. It never brightened any intellect. It does not get all who dally with it, but it is sure to get some of us in the end.

John Renick Love lies out there in the beautiful Park Lawn cemetery, in the union's lot, at St. Louis—that is, his body rests there. But the true John Love, his spirit, his memory, is enshrined in the hearts of those who loved him. He was a gentleman, warm hearted and true. He was my brother, and I loved him.

WANTS THE PENSION INCREASED.

Another session of the International Typographical Union has come and gone, and in spite of several attempts by the delegates to have the old age pension increased, they were, as usual, voted down, and the pensioners, at $5 per, less local dues, International Typographical Union per capita, pension assessment, with the local mortuary assessment, as in Detroit, all amounting to $2.05 per month, which makes the plutocratic pensioners revel in the munificent stipend of about $4.50 per week. Of course, if we are to consider this pension payment to members in the light of an honorarium (I think that's the proper word), small change, cigar money, similar to the five-dollar gold piece banks generally give to their boards of directors at each board meeting, all well and good; in that case if perfectos that usually stood at two for a quarter were bought, but now are two for a half, well then, get a flor de fuma at a dime the cigar. But this is not the case; it is in many cases not only all they have for perfectos, champagne, a limousine every so many years, but for bread and butter, and meat at 25 cents the round steak per pound, for rent, clothes, tobacco, shows, stockings, and, unless they live, say in that lovely town, with the beautiful climate, with oranges on the side, which same is Tampa, in the state of Florida, then heavy underwear and an overcoat is needed, if you are to be comfortable—and can you do it all on $5 a week, ladies and gents? You know you can't, and yet the convention voted down numerous propositions to make that $5 a little higher. Yet we read that the increase in earnings for 1917 was $2,384,106, with average earnings $1,086.43. Rolling in wealth, every mother's son, and yet the raising of the pension, that would take less than an ordinary cigar a week from the average member, is looked upon with holy horror, something that might disrupt the union. Hear what the president says: "* * * the membership will in the near future be confronted with a situation which will require an increase in the pension assessment!" Raising billions to knock off the kaiser's block is a small matter compared to increasing the pension assessment one-half of 1 per cent. Small potatoes and few in a hill—few! Why was not a referendum ordered on the question of increasing the pension and at the same time the pension assessment? Printers, as a rule, are the most liberal men in the world, and not tightwads, as the International Typographical Union would have us believe. Have patience, pensioners, next session will act differently, I think.

Windsor, Ont. ROBERT TIMMS.

THE OLD BOSTON JOURNAL.

[From the Christian Science Monitor.]

It was not, formerly, customary, in the United States, to depend to any large extent on capital in the founding of a newspaper. Franklin did not have much ready money when he went into journalism, neither did Childs, or Bennett, or Greeley, or McKee, or the Knapps, or Prentice, or McLean, or any of the founders of the innumerable journalistic ventures of early days, that have passed away, or of the journalistic enterprises that have held out against adversity and prospered. When Ford and Damrell started the Mercantile Journal, in Boston, their resources, like those of most of their competitors and rivals, were principally confined to a certain gift of news sense, a certain talent for easy composition, and a limited credit at the bank.

It was not deemed necessary, in 1833, or for a number of decades afterward, that a newspaper should have an equipment costing a fabulous amount of money. The main thing was a "stand," not a "plant," a few kitchen tables for desks, an editor to do the posing, another to do most of the editing, and courage enough behind the undertaking to print what its writers produced. Such accessories as cases, type and presses were essential, of course, but advertising was a negligible quantity, and circulation, outside of a certain coterie, a secondary consideration.

It required, first, the Mexican war, and, second, the civil war, to whet the public's appetite for news and to stimulate the publisher's ambition to satisfy it. The Boston Mercantile Journal had its financial troubles. They led to the retirement of the junior partner, and to reorganization. John S. Sleeper, James A. Dix and Henry Rogers got into the enterprise, and into control of it. By this time it was the Boston Journal. It flourished. It passed, in time, into the possession of a still more progressive group. Stephen N. Stockwell became its editor. Colonel W. W. Clapp, who had owned and edited the Saturday Evening Gazette, became its controlling lever. Stockwell and Clapp, following in the footsteps of Rogers, made the Journal not only one of the most influential newspapers in New England, but, perhaps, the most profitable. During the eighteen years of Colonel Clapp's administration, to "be anybody," in New England, one had to take the Boston Journal, and the taking of it was worth while.

Across the continent, in the '50s and '60s, stretched a line of blanket sheets. The New York Herald was one of the first to become Europeanized, and its eight pages made it conspicuous. For the rest, the leading newspapers of the country were four-page sheets, the more important using a single-page "insert" on Saturdays. Nine columns to the page was the usual thing, and the blanket sheet, open, would easily make a coverlet for a bed, or a spread for a dining-room table.

The web roll had not been invented, and the perfecting press had not been thought of, when the Journal, with its office at 264 Washington street, was called upon to announce to New England the fall of Fort Sumter, and all the stirring events of the next four years. Bailey's Herald, of course, was in action, as were the Traveler, the Post, and the Transcript, but republican New England found it difficult to believe anything about local, state, or national affairs that was not published in the Journal. It was when handicapped with a four-cylinder press, "turtles," hand folders, and one of the most unwieldy forms that human ingenuity could conceive, that Colonel Clapp rose to the emergencies and proved himself an equal of the most enterprising and progressive publishers in the country.

He reached out for the news, and got it. He published a morning and an evening edition, with "extras" and "postscripts" in between. At Washington and at the front he had able correspondents. One of them, Charles Carleton Coffin, better known to the newspaper world of writers and readers simply as "Carleton," shines out in the brilliant galaxy of civil war correspondents, which was composed, in part, of Frank B. Wilkie, Joseph B. McCullagh, Whitelaw Reid, Gen. H. V. Boynton, George Alfred Townsend, Ben Perley Poor and Richard J. Hinton. "Carleton" contributed to the Journal some of the best descriptive war matter published anywhere in the country, and he followed this up with pictures of the south, in reconstruction days, that have been incorporated into the accepted history of the times.

The era of the "old" Boston Journal may be said to have passed with the close of the Clapp management. Since then many changes have come to pass in the conduct and policy of the newspaper. Those of the present generation of newspaper readers in Boston know little of what the Journal was, what it stood for, or how great was its influence for good, in the days when it was a question whether or not the United States should endure.

FOR I'LL NEED THE NEWS FROM HOME AND YOU.

I was waiting at the station
Where the manhood of a nation—
  The boys in olive drab—had come to go.
There, apart from all the others
With their sisters, sweethearts, mothers,
  I sought the wistful eyes that I love so;
Just a kiss as tears were starting,
Then a few last words of parting
  From lips that trembled as he whispered low:

"Good-by! Good-by, my Rosa Lee,
When I am somewhere o'er the sea
Remember, dear, to write to me,
  For I'll be lonesome sometimes there,
  And I'll need news from those who care.
You don't know how much it means, dear—
And how it brings the home scenes near—
To have a line from sweetheart mine.
  So write to me, and I'll write, too,
  For I'll need news from home and you."

Oh, we parted little knowing
Of the place where he was going,
  We only knew 'twas "somewhere over there;"
Now he's far across the ocean
And I'm sending my devotion
  In a letter with an address "just somewhere,"
But I'm sure he'll not be failing
A long letter to be mailing;
  He said he'd need the news from those who care.

A COLLEGE COURSE IN TYPOGRAPHY.

The College of the City of New York, St. Nicholas Terrace and One Hundred and Thirty-seventh street, New York city, has created a department of typography and proofreading, which is conducted by Arnold Levitas, who has for many years taught typography in the public schools of New York city, and who has lectured and written extensively on the subject.

With the development of the printing industry and its advent in the field of industrial education there has sprung up a demand for such typographical instruction as may be applied to the various activities allied to the printing industry.

The modern methods in printing have developed an artistic tendency commensurate with the general evolution of art. Added to this there has developed a demand for a kind of typography that is plain and readable and which tends toward bringing out the literature most effectively and concisely.

Men and women have entered the new field of fine typography, and many are the aspirants and students in the fast-growing vocation.

Until now these students of good typography have sprung up in a haphazard manner, and the shortcomings and handicaps, as a result, have been noticeable.

That a need exists for systematic instruction in the trade goes without saying, and it is the university which is to provide the practical means to carry out such training successfully.

A great number of men and women in various walks of life seek instruction in such classes, and such a course opens opportunities in the trade as yet unknown.

Among the aspiring students at the City College there are found working printers, people in the advertising field, office workers in various publishing houses, editorial workers, proofreaders, aspirants in the field as typographic experts, and also those who desire to apply their knowledge of art to practical purposes in the printing and its allied trades.

Men who desire to qualify for executive positions, such as foremen, superintendents, managers, etc., and also men who aspire to teach, supervise, and direct in any of the branches of the trade are welcomed most enthusiastically.

The methods and courses of study are taken up with a view to help these students in a most practical way. Since every job that is printed has its definite reasons for existence and its proper place in the commercial world, it is, first of all, necessary to make these phases plain to the students. Once this is known, it will become a much simpler thing to teach them the planning and layout of a job, the relationship of words and lines to each other, and the value and appreciation of harmony, balance and spacing. The actual practical work in a course of this kind is perhaps the least difficult problem.

The courses consist of the following subjects:

I. Executive Course in Copy Editing and Theoretical Typography.

BALLADE OF WRONG FONTS.

In dreams of days agone I hear a "click"—
  A pleasant "click" I've often heard somewhere,
When leaped the living type into the stick,
  Beneath the garish gaslight's fitful flare.
  Then suddenly I hear the make-up swear
A string that starts with D and ends with H——l,
  And in a tone that chills the blood, declare
"Brevier won't justify with nonpareil!"

Though uttered in a passion hot and quick,
  And couched in diction anything but fair,
The words of that old red-eyed make-up Mick
  Could not be apter, had he used more care.
  What though he howled and rudely mussed his hair,
Despite the murder vibrant in his yell,
  A truth he had uncovered, bold and bare:—
"Brevier won't justify with nonpareil!"

How often doth the unsuspecting hick
  Fare forth to beard the tiger in his lair,
Or buck the vender of the golden brick,
  Or play at games in which he isn't "there!"
  How many a youngster, blithe and debonair,
Essays to travel with the sporty swell,
  To find disastrous "pi" at last his share—
Brevier won't justify with nonpareil.

L'ENVOI.

Prints, all, dispute the obvious if ye dare;
  The lesson of my burden wit ye well.
When tempters urge to hit the pace, beware!
  Brevier won't justify with nonpareil!

IF YOU WANT TO BE A WRITER.

He never was a fighter—he chose to be a writer;
  He thought he had a soul of harmony.
He always did aspire to play a poet's lyre
  And make the world a place of melody,
So he spent the golden hours singing of the flowers
  And skies, and dreamy eyes with love aglow;
Forever he was dreaming, and life to him was seeming
  So very, very slow. He didn't know—

If you want to be a writer, like a first-class fighter,
  You've got to have the punch—a knockout blow,
Then you'll have to keep so busy you make the whole world dizzy,
  And all about the game you've got to know.
Oh, you never will be "found" till you can pass the "pep" around
  And put the mustard on a million eyes.
If you want to be a writer, like a first-class fighter,
  You've got to be a geezer dog-gone wise.

He sent his little ditties to firms in many cities;
  He thought he had some fine philosophy.
The publishers exploded—said they were overloaded;
  They didn't even give him sympathy.

Now he spends the golden hours singing to the flowers;
  He's wise, and summer skies smile on his brow;
Where life with toil is teeming you'll find his bright face beaming,
  For now he's learning how to run a plow.

LAWRENCE O. NICHOLS.

THE GLAD NEW TIME.

When ev'ry one in law and fact
  Can have full product of his toil;
When no one can by whim or act
  His neighbor legally despoil,
Or keep him from well-paid employment,
  Make him a deadbeat or disgrace,
And from his children take enjoyment;
  When social justice shall displace
Commercial kingcraft's wily power,
  And man be helped by honesty,
Without a chance to make him cower,
  Then—only then—can man be free.

A VISIT TO THE HOME.

[On its twenty-fifth anniversary, August 15, 1917.]

Through pleasant scenes and scenes of grandeur far renowned
We sped by day and night until we reached the hallowed ground,
Where, reared by loving hands and noble mind,
There stands a monument inscribed with healing, rest for frail and tired 'mong mankind—
A sanctuary for the brother sick and in distress,
A haven for the weary one, his final days to bless.

Twenty years and five its beacon rays have shed their light,
Proclaiming to the world: "In union there is might"—
Not the might that wills to rule with iron hand the man
Who by his sweat and toil does the best he can,
But the power born of Justice and of Right
To live and let live, with never need of fight—
The strength that lies in Love—to others do
What you would have them do to you.

In the shade of mountains grand whose giant peak, like a sentinel of old,
Forever keeps its watch as in ages past untold,
We saw the Home—a gem in verdure set, mid bloom of flowers bright and sweet,
Within and 'round about, free from trouble, care and strife, which in the world we meet,
We saw a goodly company of men—some in play of varied kinds,
Others seeking knowledge and improvement of their minds
From founts of wisdom—books by thousands, shelved and classified.
(To none who wanted knowledge was this precious boon denied.)

We saw the young, we saw the old and feeble, and many very ill,
But in spite of illness and of suffering we saw good will
To one another and to those who by their loving, tender care,
Do minister to all their needs. And seeing all, we could not still a prayer,
That heaven bless the printermen who by their daily labor, one and all,
Make possible such deeds of mercy, nobly heeding duty's call.

And as the eventide crept on, and night's deep shadows in their gentle fold
Enwrapped it all, a longing rose—to see again our Home when its silver crown is topped with gold.

FROM LOCAL UNIONS

SCRANTON, PA.

"The Electric City, 1918."

Many of our friends and fellow craftsmen who will attend the Scranton convention next summer have asked us about going "down in the mines." Well, that has been arranged for, and now we will tell them something about the mines they are so desirous of visiting.

Long before the subways of the big cities were even dreamed of, there was under Scranton and the Lackawanna valley a winding passageway, nearly thirty miles long, that could be traversed by mule car and motor by the men of the anthracite mines. Winding in and out, through coal beds worth billions of dollars, this subway connected scores of anthracite mines, their Stygian darkness broken here and there by the faint flicker of the blaze of an oil lamp fast to some miner's cap.

Few people outside the anthracite regions of which Scranton, the greatest coal mining city in the world, is the metropolis, have any idea of the manner in which this great wealth is taken from the ground, and a trip through a coal mine is an experience never forgotten. The coal in the Scranton coal fields runs in veins or seams from three to fourteen feet thick, and generally paralleling the surface. In some sections there are as many as eight of these seams.

To dig the coal out of the earth, vertical shafts are sunk, tapping each vein, and from the shaft roads or tunnels are driven in all directions. As these tunnels proceed, rooms, or chambers, are opened from them, and a miner is given the work of blasting out the coal in the chambers. This coal is loaded into small cars and hauled to the shaft by mule or motor and hoisted to the top of the breaker on the surface. By gravity the coal runs down through the breaker, passing through heavy rolls that crush it and over screens that separate the sizes for market. Boys also help clean the coal by picking slate and rock from it as it passes through chutes, but the boys have been largely displaced by automatic metal slatepickers. From the breaker the coal is loaded into the railroad cars for transportation to all parts of the country.

The interior of the mine may in many ways be compared to an office building of eight or less stories. The vertical shaft replaces the elevator in the office building, the roads or tunnels the halls leading from the elevator, and the chambers the rooms or offices. The darkness is dispelled nowadays by electric lights; electric motors running on tracks and fed by power from a wire to which a trolley is connected carry most of the coal, although the mule still has a big place in the industry. A marvelous system of ventilation keeps the air fresh and cool and every safety-first precaution is taken to prevent accidents. So great is the interest and fascination of a trip through the mine that many persons have traveled miles for the experience, and convention delegates who have been to many cities say they have never enjoyed a convention entertainment feature more than a trip through a Scranton coal mine.

Edward Kinney, member of No. 112, was in charge of 217 drafted men who left this city September 21 for Camp Meade, which is located between Baltimore and Washington. Mr. Kinney was a member of the Republican chapel and the boys were on hand the day of his departure to wish him good luck and a safe return home. At this writing that makes three members of No. 112 now doing their "bit" for Uncle Sam, the other two being R. Kunz, jr., and Patrick J. Harrity.

P. W. Haas, a member of Scranton Union, and present recorder of deeds of this county—Lackawanna—was renominated for the same office at the recent primaries. Mr. Haas has made an excellent official, which was popularly attested to by the large vote he received at the primaries. "Pete" Haas still takes an active interest in matters pertaining to the craft, and will be found among the hustlers during International Typographical Union convention week in Scranton.

Scranton Typographical Union will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary in connection with the International convention to be held in this city next August. The convention committee will set aside one evening during convention week for the celebration of the anniversary and will make it an event that will last in the memory of those who attend. It is the desire of the committee to secure the present home address of former members of No. 112; also, what year and how long they were affiliated with the local union. Their names and addresses, together with a copy of the souvenir and all data pertaining to the celebration, will be placed in a fireproof steel box, to be opened fifty years hence, or when No. 112 is 100 years old. The tracing of the early history of our local union we have found to be no easy task, but with the data of the golden jubilee safely stored away the work of the anniversary committee fifty years hence will not be so difficult. We may not be at the opening of that box on the occasion of the one hundredth anniversary of the local union, but some member of your family may be there and point with pride to your name as one who was true to the colors of unionism while working under the banner of the International Typographical Union. Former members of No. 112, scattered throughout the country, get busy and send your address to the writer, box 226, Scranton, Pa.

Hon. John R. Farr, printer-congressman and member of No. 112, stopped off at his home town recently while en route to Washington. He was on his way back from the Danish West Indies, where he had spent several weeks.

No. 112 will hold its ninth informal dance on Thanksgiving eve, November 29, at the Casino. This is the event of the ball season in Scranton, and this year's dance will be no exception to the previous ones. The writer is chairman of the dance committee; James S. Walton, secretary;

Neill Lally, one of the foremost exponents of modern dancing in the city, is chairman of the floor committee; W. G. Nelms, chairman of the refreshment committee; William Corless, chairman of the reception committee; and D. A. Brislin, publicity agent. The receipts from the dance goes into the convention fund.

During the present month local unions will receive a letter from the convention committee of No. 112 announcing the fact that it will issue the annual souvenir in connection with the International Typographical Union convention. This will be the first time during its nearly fifty years of existence that Scranton Union has ever sent an appeal either to the International Typographical Union or to the local unions. No. 112 has always contributed liberally to every worthy cause brought to its attention during these many years. The committee is working with the aim in view to make the souvenir a fine specimen of the printer's art, and every union that can possibly afford it should be represented in its pages. Local unions should by all means have a list of their members who are doing their "bit" for their country in their membership cards in the souvenir. D. A. Brislin, formerly financial secretary of No. 112, who has had considerable experience in the advertising line, is secretary of the souvenir committee. A line to him addressed to box 226, on any matter relative to the souvenir, will bring an immediate reply.

Al Jennings, former member of No. 112, but now of Pittsburgh Union, was in the city recently. He was in town to take the physical examination for the draft.

Frank P. Vanderslice, of Philadelphia Union, was in Scranton during the month. He stopped off here to visit his former co-workers at the I. C. S. printery on his way to his home in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

President Ed Sims, of Wheeling (W. Va.) Union, has already served notice on chairman W. H. Hughes, of the convention committee, that a large party of Wheeling printers will be in attendance at the Scranton convention. He adds, also, that "he has his fare tucked away in his inside pocket." Lucky boy, Sims.

James S. Gibbons, a member of the newswriters' union of this city, has accepted a position to supervise the bureau of publicity of the Scranton Board of Trade. He was formerly employed on the Scranton Republican. The writer is indebted to Mr. Gibbons for the "leader" on Scranton in this letter. Mr. Gibbons is a brother of Joseph P. Gibbons, former International Typographical Union representative in this section and member of No. 112, but now of "Big Six."

John Williams, one-time member of No. 112, but for some years affiliated with Pittsburgh Union, was in the city recently renewing old friendships.

President W. H. Hughes, M. W. ("Commodore") Walton, and the writer paid a fraternal visit to Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Union on October 7, attending the regular meeting. The visitors brought greetings from the Scranton Union and informed the Wilkes-Barre "prints" how Scranton was progressing in the work for the coming convention. President Lew Hunt Bachman responded for No. 187, assuring the visitors that Wilkes-Barre day will be the banner day of convention week, and that the committee was planning an agreeable surprise for the delegates and visitors. Scranton can vouch for Wilkes-Barre hospitality; we have been their guests in the past, and they have never failed to go the limit. A. J. LANGAN.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The newspaper scale committee that was appointed by President Rouse some time ago has finished its labors in so far as the drafting of the document is concerned, and a special meeting of the union was held on Sunday, October 14, at Saengerbund hall, Brooklyn, to consider the report. The meeting was called to order by President Rouse, after which a motion was adopted to go into a committee of the whole to consider the matter. President Rouse called John H. Maxwell, of the Herald, to the platform to preside as chairman, and the latter appointed J. Jefferson Hughes, of the Brooklyn Standard Union, to act as secretary and William Leeper, of the Times, as reading clerk.

The document is the strongest of its kind ever presented by a scale committee of New York Typographical Union No. 6 during the writer's membership. But conditions never warranted such drastic action by a scale committee before. To begin, it calls for $1 a day increase and at the same time reduces the hours of work for those laboring on the night and third shift one-half hour. The document also stipulates that during July and August (the two warmest as well as dullest months of the year) an additional reduction on all shifts of one-half hour shall take place.

At the special meeting an endeavor was made to go even farther by reducing the hours to seven on all shifts. This caused much discussion and consumed considerable time, but eventually the committee's report prevailed.

The representatives of the newspaper publishers' association, no doubt, will be somewhat horrified when they read what is wanted by their employes in the composing rooms, and may attempt their old game of bluff. But the newspaper printers are in no mood to be trifled with at this time. A good percentage are of the belief that they have not been treated fairly by their employers. In this feeling they are justified, for they have been shackled with an agreement while the cost of living continued by leaps and bounds to soar to the skies. The employers were in a position to meet these changed conditions by raising the price of ads, but not so with the employes—they had no redress. As honorable members of society the employes were compelled to work at the old rate of wages until the termination of the contract, while business men in other walks of life showed more fairness by voluntarily raising their employes' salaries and giving bonuses to meet the much-changed conditions.

Instead, the newspaper proprietors were complaining of the high cost of paper and called in the United States Department of Justice to break up the paper trust. This seemed like a case of the shoe being on the wrong foot, for there is no more gigantic trust in this wide world than the newspaper publishers' trust (Associated Press), nor a more cold-blooded combination. By its methods it has not only throttled the birth of newspapers, but it has bought up franchises and smothered old ones.

There were reports of a few proprietors in other cities who voluntarily raised salaries to meet conditions, but not so in New York. Some raised the prices of ads to offset the cost of paper, but nary a one of them considered for a moment those who produced their newspapers. They left them to sweat it out the best they could.

As the writer said above, the men are not in a mood to be trifled with at this time. They have been slow to awaken, but have their eyes open and are thoroughly aroused. They realize that their money will buy but half of what it did a few years back and much less today than its purchasable power is in other cities where as high rate of wages is paid for the same class of work.

There is one other thing that the employes of the composing room in newspapers realize, i. e., that the employers have not played the arbitration game fair. Previous to 1912 they worked under the national arbitration agreement, but after the signing of the new document at the San Francisco convention in 1911 the New York publishers refused to continue under that agreement, desiring a form to meet their own selfish motives. Up to that time the officers of Typographical Union No. 6 had the time of their lives to jimmy a raise of $1 from them, and without question always gave them the equivalent in return. Yet it is said that the New York publishers withdrew from the National Board of Arbitration agreement because they claimed they were getting the worst of it.

The writer has always been a supporter of arbitration, because he has believed it the fairest way of adjusting our differences, without loss of time, but does not believe that the publishers should be allowed to withdraw from the agreement of their own organization and dictate some new agreement that will more fully meet their selfish ends.

One dollar a day seems at first glance to be a large increase, but when it is considered that much of that dollar was due several years ago, it strikes the writer that even though the scale committee handed in a strong document they did not ask for enough money, for the $6 will not meet the extra living expenses of today.

The newspaper publishers of New York have been playing a fast game, believing, no doubt, the supply and demand should govern wages. Whether this be right or wrong, there is no question but that the number of printers in excess of positions has been a handicap in the raising of wages. But the writer believes that the war is changing this condition somewhat. It is a pity that we can not reduce the supply to conform with the demand without waiting for a bloody conflict between nations. It is the writer's belief that it is high time that the members of the typographical unions, not only in New York but throughout the country, should take steps to curb the supply so that it will not exceed the demand. Some have answered this in the past by saying we would be severely criticized if we should attempt to reduce the number of apprentices. Why should that interfere with our actions? The employers do not let a small thing like criticism interfere with their actions. If we believe we are right what should we care for the criticism of those who themselves do not fear it? Other organizations in the printing industry are keeping the supply down to conform with the demand. This can be found both in the stereotypers' and photo-engravers' organizations. Why should there be so many printers on the floor of the composing room who are looking for work from day to day and are at the beck and call of the foreman? If this was not the condition the foreman in many instances would put on more situations instead of taking a chance from night to night.

Though the members of the union differed at the special meeting of October 14 they made it plain that the difference of opinion was merely as to how far they would go in their demands. And they are not only asking, but believe they are entitled to all they ask for; they are united in the belief that they must have a raise in salary to meet conditions. It is hoped that the union's conference committee will make this plain, and stand by its guns.

At the regular October meeting of Typographical Union No. 6 the newspaper scale committee's report, with a few minor amendments, was adopted by a vote of 400 to 3. The newly-adopted scale now goes to the executive council for its approval.

The October meeting of No. 6 endorsed by unanimous vote a resolution introduced by Secretary John S. O'Connell to purchase $10,000 worth of Liberty bonds. Five thousand dollars' worth was purchased of the first loan, making $15,000 in all.

The ball committee recently appointed by President Rouse is now busy as a hive of honey bees preparing for the coming ball, which will be held in the Harlem River Casino on Thanksgiving eve, November 28. The committee met and organized on September 23, selecting Arthur L. MacMullen, chairman; Clark Pierce, vice-chairman; Leo A. O'Brien, secretary, and William A. Gore, assistant secretary. The subcommittees are headed by the following chairmen: Printing, H. T. Dunsmore; music, T. W. Johns; badges, J. W. Muller; boxes, J. Freund; publicity, Clark Pierce. The aggressiveness of the committee assures a successful ball and a large addition to the hospital fund.

At the outbreak of the war with Germany J. P. Battley, an apprentice employed on the Herald, was one of the first to enter the United States army through the merging of the national guard into United States service. He had previously served on the Mexican border. Mr. Battley has been honored with promotion and is now a sergeant in Company G, Forty-seventh infantry, located at this writing at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va. Recently a letter was received from him, in which he spoke of the scarcity of letters coming his way from the office. A reply was assembled by some of his friends, containing 150 signatures and the following verse:

Attention, Sergeant Battley! You're accused before this bar
Of having friends so numerous you don't know who they are.
Of this we find you guilty, and for punishment decree
That you tote this little sample list wherever you may be!

BEST WISHES! GOOD LUCK! GOD BLESS YOU!

W. T. Pankey, of Houston, Texas, was a recent visitor to New York, being imperial representative from El Tex Temple No. 114, of Houston, to a session of the Dokk, Knights of Pythias. Mr. Pankey is a well-known member of Houston Typographical Union.

O. Judson Houck, a member of Typographical Union No. 6 and for a number of years with the unitype department of the American Type Founders Company, has joined the sales force of the Intertype Corporation. He will cover the eastern Pennsylvania territory, where he is well acquainted.

The New York-New Jersey Association of Ex-Delegates to the International Typographical Union held its quarterly meeting at Gruber's hall, Hoboken, N. J., on Sunday, September 30. It proved one of the most interesting held for some time past. It was decided to discontinue the quarterly meetings and have one session a year, at which a dinner and other forms of entertainment would be had, and at which wives and lady friends of members could be invited. The new departure caused much discussion. It was also decided to make another effort under the new plans to interest the ex-delegates to the International Union in this jurisdiction. A committee was appointed, of which J. J. Soffel, of Hoboken, is chairman, to make arrangements for the annual affair to be held in February next. John T. Hudson, of Newark, is president, and Charles J. Marquart, of Brooklyn, secretary-treasurer.

The 18-year-old son of Charles Polk, of the Herald, has passed all examinations for the aviation corps and has been ordered to report to Cornell for instructions. He is rated as a second lieutenant.

The management of the Brooklyn Standard Union issued a notice on October 16 that beginning that day every employe of that concern became insured in the Travelers' Insurance Company under what is known as the group insurance. Each policy calls for $500 or more without any expense whatsoever to the insured. In addition to the $500 policy which each employe will receive, an additional $100 of insurance will be added to each and every policy for every year that the individual has been in the employe on the newspaper up to $1,500. In case of total disability of any employe from sickness or accident, up to the age of 60 years, the face value of the policy will be paid either in a lump sum or instalments, at the option of the insured. Each policy is granted without medical examination or any condition whatever, but when one of the insured leaves the employ of the Standard Union his policy automatically becomes null and void. This is a laudable move on the part of the management of the Standard Union and one that might be followed by other newspaper managements.

Gifts to departing soldiers have been in order in many chapels recently, but none that I have heard of has been made quite in the spirit shown by the members of the Williams Printing Company chapel. At the last meeting of the chapel a committee was appointed to arrange for testimonials and also to remain in commission during the war for the purpose of looking after the interest and welfare of the members who may go to the war. Three of the young men of the chapel have already gone and several others have volunteered and are waiting orders. The chapel intends that their soldiers shall be looked after, and voted unanimously to pay an assessment of $1 to start this plan going. The committee appointed—W. E. McQuillan, Thomas Miller and E. J. Fuld—approved heartily of the chapel's action and no doubt will do its best to carry out its desires. They have already met a request for books from one of the boys at Yaphank by arranging with the public library to send books to the camp on request and allow them to be retained for longer periods than has been customary.

The celebrated Press-Sun controversy came up before Judge Lehman, of the Supreme Court of New York County, on Friday, October 5, and was continued for three days to take testimony. This was the outcome of the merging of the New York Press with the Sun by Frank Munsey. The case hinges on whether it was in every respect a merger or whether Mr. Munsey merely bought a majority of the stock of the Sun Publishing Company and by agreement took his (Press) Associated Press franchise to the Sun and at the same time discontinued the publication of the Press. The executive committee and the union supported the theory that the two papers were merged and therefore ordered the two chapel lists merged. This contention was sustained by the executive council and International Typographical Union convention held at Baltimore. Now it remains to be seen what view the courts will take of the situation. The first day of court was consumed by arguments of counsel, and when both sides rested their case on the following Tuesday counsel were given three weeks to hand in briefs. Therefore it is not likely that an early decision will be had.

Secretary O'Connell recently received an extremely interesting letter from William J. Wells, a member of No. 6 for fourteen years, but now employed on the Paris edition of the New York Herald. Mr. Wells told of the visiting at the Herald office recently of a number of Americans dressed in khaki, and after a short conversation he found three were members of Typographical Union No. 6. They were Corporals Charles E. Ritter, J. V. O'Hara and A. B. Fox. They, with four other members of No. 6, are those furnished by No. 6 at the request of army authorities to be sent to France to work as printers at army headquarters. The other four are Earnest ("Colonel") S. S. Smith, Lester Davies, John Keahon and Millard Jacobs, each of whom carries a letter signed by President Rouse certifying to their standing and requesting courtesies be extended them. He also said the boys looked in the best of health and were gradually mastering the French language. Mr. Wells terminates his letter with: "As a member of No. 6 for fourteen years, I stand ready to render any service I am capable of. In that case No. 6 has only to command." The men mentioned above are now located at American barracks, No. 27 Rue de Constantine, but expect to be transferred to other quarters soon. Communications or reading matter can be sent to them in care Mr. Wells, Herald, No. 38 Rue du Louvre, Paris, France.

A rather unique occurrence took place one night recently in the Herald office. Five men were assembled at machines in one alley that worked in one alley in the old Herald building downtown thirty years ago. They were Onby H. Peck, James Forbes, John ("Jock") McClatchie, John Fitz and Thomas J. ("Tip") O'Neil. Their association in the downtown office, of course, was before the machine supplanted the hand type, and when the executives of the Herald were much more particular in its construction. That was before railroading of matter was countenanced; when a double-column ad must have a column rule running through its center, and cuts were limited to a column wide. Along with these were quite a few more "musts" that sound extremely odd today.

At the September meeting of Typographical Union No. 6 the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy was endorsed and by a rising vote adopted the following membership pledge:

The undersigned hereby affirms that it is the duty of all people of the United States, without regard to class, nationality, politics or religion, faithfully and loyally to support the government of the United States in carrying on the present war for justice, freedom and democracy to a triumphant conclusion, and gives this pledge to uphold every honorable effort for the accomplishment of that purpose, and to support the American Federation of Labor as well as the declaration of organized labor's representatives made March 12, 1917, at Washington, D. C., as to "Labor's Position in Peace or in War," and agrees that this pledge shall be his right to membership in the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy. Any deviation on my part from the above pledge shall in itself sever my membership in the alliance.

mation of the first alliance in New York city, held in Beethoven hall, September 20. Delegates were in attendance from the principal labor unions in Greater New York. President Rouse was elected as president of the alliance and committees on by-laws and ways and means appointed. Membership petitions have been circulated in the various chapels and have been universally signed.

The following deaths occurred during the month: Thomas Teddy, D. Schwartz, Andrew B. Wood, Charles J. Schweitzer, Thomas J. Brown, William C. Johnson, H. Macdonald, F. C. McCollum.

A rather unique drawing took place on the afternoon of October 5 at the Owl club. A member of No. 6 after a long illness passed away, leaving very little ready money, but several parcels of ground. An attempt was made by his widow to dispose of them, but found a poor market. After a time a scheme was worked out by some friends and former shopmates which culminated in two lots being placed on the market to be disposed of by lottery. The stubs were placed in a bag, which, after being tied securely, was used by those present for a football around the clubrooms. This sport ended, the committee decided that the name on the twenty-sixth stub drawn from the bag should become the owner of the lots. Jack Kavaugh drew the first ten stubs, W. J. Martin the next five, Louis Butz drew the next five, then S. W. Barry assisted with the next five, and Larry Pendergast was called forward to draw the winning number, which was 3815, and contained the name of Alexander Newbauer. This ended a most unique affair.

On Tuesday, October 9, the New York World displayed a service flag in front of its building which contained seventy-five stars in honor of the seventy-five employes in the army and navy. The World took a stand at the inception of the war that no doubt would have assisted the president of the United States had others followed its example. It posted notices proposing to pay the difference in salaries of that which they would receive from the government and that as an employe of the World if they volunteered, which resulted in seventy-one volunteering on the first call. The management of the World is today living up to that agreement, which is a laudable one.

The second annual reunion dinner of the members of the old New York Star chapel will take place at the Broadway Central hotel on Sunday, November 18, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The committee having the affair in charge is composed of William D. Caspari, of the World; E. C. Bell, of the Globe, and W. L. D. Wright, of the Herald. Martin L. Frescoln, of the Globe, is president, and George A. Perry, of the Evening World, secretary-treasurer.

George H. Betts, sr., an old member of No. 6, recently sent the following communication to the writer:

I am getting too old to do much fighting myself, but thank God I have two sons to do it for me—two boys in the flying corps, Canada, but Had I a dozen—I am no miser—
I would give them all to down the kaiser;
And I hope the bomb the kaiser gets
Will be plainly stamped with the name of "Betts."

A decision was handed down recently by Judges Jenks, Stapleton, Rich, Putnam and Blackmar, of the supreme court, appellate division, in which the decision of the lower court was sustained with costs in the suit of James H. Dahm against John S. O'Connell for $10,000 for slander. This suit was started as a result of a heated debate on the floor of the union. The defendant's counsel entered a demurrer which was sustained, after which the appellant appealed to the above court, with a like result, with costs attached.

James M. Bell, jr., son of "Jim Bell," an old member of No. 6, who is in the United States army, connected with the Fifty-fifth regiment, Company L, located at Chickamauga Park, Ga., recently wrote a letter to his mother, which proudly told of his promotion to the rank of corporal. He also spoke of his anticipated promotion to higher honors.

The result of the referendum election on Wednesday, October 17, resulted in this city as follows: First proposition, 1,672 for and 2,922 against; second, 1,214 for and 3,456 against; third, 2,678 for and 1,740 against; fourth (plan A), 3,092 for and 999 against; (plan B), 1,029 for and 2,670 against.

Caleb Leverich, of the Herald, has a copy of the Ulster County Gazette, dated Kingston, N. Y., Saturday, January 4, 1800, and contains matter relating to the death of George Washington, with black rules between columns. Running lengthwise of the first page in large type is: "Gen. Geo. Washington's Death, and Funeral of Our First President, 1800." This is but one of the many odd features of its make-up. George Washington died December 14, 1799.

The honor roll of members of No. 6 is increasing rapidly. There are more than 150 cards of members enlisted in the war on deposit at the secretary's office, which will be kept in good standing out of the funds of the local typographical union. At this writing it amounts to $225 a month. Besides there are seventy-nine registered apprentices in the service of the government.

WILLIAM MOUNCE.

HARTFORD, CONN.

At our October meeting a new wage scale for the newspapers was discussed pro and con and will be opened with the following committee to draw up a scale of prices: F. Flynn, president; O. A. Miles, secretary-treasurer; L. Dunn, chairman of Post chapel; J. Rogers, chairman Times chapel; A. Smith, chairman of Courant (night side); P. Gray, chairman of Courant (day side); A. Brown, chairman of Globe, and C. Laffin, G. Loeffler and O. Miller. There was a large gathering of members at this meeting, but the majority were absent. The repeal of the 25-cent rebate was brought up again after two unsuccessful attempts to down it and was finally voted out of existence.

Associates of James M. Kelly in the various departments of the Globe gave him a farewell party at the home of A. Edwin Brown recently. Kelly was one of the members of No. 127 called in the draft. His associates presented him with a large box of smokes, while the management of the Globe presented him with a wrist watch. Mr. Kelly takes with him the best wishes of his friends. A. Meyers, who held a "sit" in the Peck job office, and Ray Van Gasbeck, who held a job in the Bronson & Robinson (cigar-box makers) office, were the latest to be caught in the draft.

Harry McInnis, operator on the Times, handed in his resignation as recording secretary at our last meeting after faithfully performing his duties the past year, and John Rogers was elected as his successor.

The new label committee appointed, consisting of Messrs. Loeffler, Wright, Drurie, Secretary Humason and your correspondent, elected as chairman, has started the ball a-rolling again. The first week the committee was organized it collected over one hundred pieces of printed matter not bearing the label. Don't leave it to the committee to do all the collecting. Let us all put in a hand and see what we can accomplish.

Another member was added to our roll last month. Well, it's getting cooler now and better conditions to work in. Let's get busy and get some more members. Every one help. It won't be long before we catch our next-door neighbor—Springfield.

Carl Maugs, machinist of the Post, was elected as delegate to the central labor union and also the label section in the absence of Benjamin Barbeau, who has been called to the colors.

The campaign for the second Liberty loan has passed and Hartford Typographical Union was the first organization in the city to come across with its "bit." This is the second contribution for No. 127.

Cards deposited with us: H. F. Willett, John Connors, John Reilly. The departures are: Bert M. Quinn, John Laird, John H. Frew, C. S. Runyon.

The central labor union has started a tobacco fund and is progressing with the undertaking. A committee has been appointed to look after the fund, and your correspondent is one of them. Donations are accepted from local unions and also individuals who desire to help furnish union-made tobacco and cigarettes for the boys at the front.

William Carey, one of our pensioners, 53 years old, died in Rockville, October 12. "Bill" was one of the regulars on the Worcester Telegram in the old hand-set days in the early '90s.

"Bard" Healy, who has been working on the Times for the past year, has taken out a traveler and is back in his old haunts in New Haven.

O. A. Miles, secretary-treasurer of No. 127 and first vice-president of the New England Typographical union, attended the executive board meeting of that body the past month.

"Ab" Smith, chairman of the Courant (night side), met with an accident the past month while riding his motorcycle home from work. He was taken to the Hartford hospital and at the time of closing this letter was resting comfortably.

H. F. TROMMER.

EL CENTRO, CAL.

Fred H. Floyd, operator at the Brawley News, who was recently operated on for appendicitis, has recovered sufficiently to go to work again.

The plant of the Swanson Printing Company has been sold and moved to Mexicali, Mexico, just across the line from Calexico, where it will be employed in the publication of a weekly newspaper in Spanish with the title of La Vanguardia (The Vanguard). Manager Swanson, of the Swanson Printing Company, has ordered a new and up-to-date job printing outfit, which will include a Ludlow typograph, the first in southern California.

The Progress, El Centro's morning daily, is about to add to its mechanical equipment a three-magazine intertype with side magazine unit.

Former members of No. 707 now serving with the Liberty boys include ex-President A. F. Neil and H. E. and C. E. Endsley.

While returning from an eastern trip recently the writer had the privilege of spending a day at the Home at Colorado Springs, and was much gratified at the rapid progress toward recovery being made by L. F. Brooks, one of our members. The tuberculosis sanatorium at the Home is doing a splendid work, but the thought has often occurred to the writer that there would be fewer patients there if subordinate unions would insist upon adequate ventilation of composing rooms. It is true considerable has been accomplished along these lines during recent years, but much still remains to be done.

G. A. MCDONALD.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The referendum vote of October 17 resulted as follows: The first proposition won out, the second lost, the third was voted on favorably and the fourth (plan A) had a winning margin. When it comes to salary raises (except when it redounds to the printer)—"O tempore! O mores!" Please pass the smelling salts.

After an interminable wait the union newspaper proprietors of this city finally came through with a $2 increase in the scale. Who said the newspaper props. had hardening of the arteries?

President Young was authorized at the September meeting to negotiate an increase for the book and job branch.

The Western Newspaper Union has absorbed the American Press Association "boilerplate" plant and will continue along the same line established by its predecessor. There is no change in the composing-room force, of which Bill Lawrence is the managing editor.

Respectfully submitted by Heinie Shaner (himself):

Yea, bo, you bet I'm plantin'

That's 'neath a loosen'd scantlin'

  When that good ol' sock is full,
Fer with kale t' grease th' skids
  From this burg t' Scranton town,
Where I'm goin' t' mitt th' kids
  Who won't 'low a rat aroun',

If then ye'd chance t' hit me

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

President Seth R. Brown has again received most favorable recognition from Governor Stephens for his efforts in behalf of labor by being appointed as one of the six from the state council of defense to co-operate with the national commission appointed by President Wilson to investibate labor conditions in the west, and after investigations in California will make recommendations to the state council of defense on the findings of the full committee.

The cold weather in the east and north is the cause of quite an influx of our "traveling" members and the slipboards all over town are full. Work has been fairly good all summer on the newspapers, but the job end has suffered considerably owing to the steady raise in prices of all papers, etc. My advice to the members is, hold on to the work you have at present instead of steering for this port.

John M. Dormer, formerly of the Examiner chapel, but for the past year of Phœnix, Ariz., has returned to Los Angeles owing to the illness of his wife, who could not stand the extremes in the climate of Arizona.

C. W. ("Biddy") Slighter, of the Herald chapel, after a severe illness of nearly a month, is back at work. Too many molars extracted at one sitting started the trouble and caused a case of "nerves" and also affected his eyes.

Ed L. Schlegel, foreman of the Tribune, spent the latter part of September in San Francisco and Oakland.

Ralph L. Criswell attended the convention of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, held in Minneapolis in September, being excused for the time from his duties as councilman of this city.

William A. Snyder, formerly superintendent of the Express-Tribune plant, has turned to farming as a side issue, having leased 180 acres near Sacramento and expects to "assist the government" by raising barley, the call for which has been insistent since the war started.

The writer, as a delegate to the state federation of labor, had the pleasure of assisting in the passage of the following resolution, the delegate from our state federation of labor to the American Federation of Labor being also instructed to introduce and work for its passage at the coming American Federation of Labor convention:

Whereas, The Industrial Workers of the World, commonly referred to as the I. W. W., have an avowed policy of destruction toward all existing forms of society and particularly the policies of the American Federation of Labor; and

Whereas, Through the ignorance on the part of the public the misdeeds of the Industrial Workers of the World are sometimes laid at the door of the American Federation of Labor; and

Whereas, The activities and practices of said Industrial Workers of the World have interfered with and hampered our government in the successful prosecution of the war; therefore be it

Resolved, by the California State Federation of Labor in eighteenth annual convention assembled, That we hereby denounce the teachings and practices of the said Industrial Workers of the World and recommend to our affiliated organizations and membership that any member belonging to an American Federation of Labor union shall be expelled therefrom.

With such action by the different state federations and by the American Federation of Labor the general public would be finally convinced that organized labor has nothing in common with such cattle, despite the attitude of certain papers, such as the Los Angeles Times, in trying to make them appear as twins.

E. A. Sullivan, for several years a make-up on the Examiner, is now working on the San Francisco Chronicle, arriving in that city just in time to be "slipped up" by one of the boys who was called by Uncle Sam to serve in the new Liberty army.

Lawrence Garrett, George E. Clapp and John Down, three apprentices on the Express, are now serving Uncle Sam, being drafted and sent to American Lake during the past month. Before their departure they were presented with solid gold identification medals by the members of the chapel. W. K. LOCKWOOD.

MINOT, N. D.

M. J. Klaesges, of the News chapel, has turned in his slip and left for Independence, Iowa, and Ben Schroeder, from Gary, Ind., is filling the vacancy. Ben has worked in Minot before and the boys will be glad to have him on the job again.

W. C. Davis, of the Independent, has enlisted under the chief of engineers in the typographical department. The Independent has ordered a saw trimmer and router complete and several new faces and now has as up-to-date a shop as any town can boast of.

On the eve of his departure for the front, as captain of Company D, First North Dakota infantry, Otto Gross was presented with a handsome emblem ring by the members of No. 376 and the boss printers, at a special meeting of the local held at the Independent office. Mr. Humphreys made the presentation speech and Captain Gross in response thanked the boys, and said that as long as he was able to see the ring on his finger he would think of Minot Union and the boys with whom he has worked for so many years.

Ray Jones, of the News, has joined the ranks of the benedicts. Roy Rogers has returned from his Montana homestead several months ahead of schedule and is again holding down the night make-up at the News.

S. E. George, while out duck hunting, caught the trigger of his gun in his vest and shot away a couple of toes. After a few days in the hospital he was able to be around on crutches and is now on the job, little the worse for his experience. R. H. Boyd, is improving slowly, and is at work at the Periodical, but will not have the use of his hand yet for some time to come. Ernest Solberg, of the News, is doing about as well as could be expected with a broken leg.

State of trade at this writing is normal, and on account of the poor crops in this section not much is looked for this winter. All members are working full time, however. E. D. HICKS.

HAMILTON, ONT.

If the members of the International Typographical Union executive council did not notice a tingling sensation in their off-side hearing organs on the night of October 1 it was not because they were not being talked about. Oh, my, no! Metaphorically speaking, they were impaled on the fork of discontent and toasted or roasted a Honolulu brown. The oratorical fireworks started when the reply to a query was read from Secretary-Treasurer Hays. Referring to the referendum propositions, the secretary was asked:

If plan B should be put into effect, would a refund be granted to the Canadian unions which have been keeping their soldier members in good standing for the last three years?

The reply of the International Typographical Union secretary-treasurer follows:

My answer is: No. They will not be reimbursed for any dues paid for members in war service in the past. If the assessment plan is adopted Canadian unions will be reimbursed for money expended by them to keep their members in war service in good standing with the International union beginning with January, 1918, the month with which the assessment becomes operative. None of them, as I understand the proposition, will be entitled to reimbursement for money expended for this purpose prior to the first of the year.

Charges were freely made that there is too much discrimination shown in the administration of affairs at Indianapolis, and that in this instance Canadians were made to suffer a gross imposition. It was pointed out that small Canadian unions have been almost tottering to a fall under the heavy load of keeping their members at the front in good standing, and notwithstanding appeals on their behalf from the Ontario and Western Canada conferences of typographical unions, no succor was forthcoming from the International Typographical Union.

While the speakers considered the monetary sacrifices made in the interest of fellow-craftsmen at the front of paltry significance (although Hamilton Union has spent nearly $1,000 in their behalf), it was urged that there was an important principle involved. It was conceded that it would be much more profitable for Hamilton Union to support the assessment plan, allowing the International to shoulder the responsibilities, but it was contended that should United States craftsmen respond in like proportion to the Canadian printers, the 10 cents per month assessment will be totally inadequate to meet the obligation.

The utmost respect was expressed for the old age pension fund, but it was considered an injustice to propose to pass even to this fund any surplus from collections by assessment, and ignore the plight of Canadian unions, especially in the western provinces, which have totally depleted their resources in an endeavor to keep up payments for members fighting in France. It was thought that any surplus should rightly go to Canadian unions which have found it difficult to withstand the financial strain during the last two or three years. Attention was also drawn to the fact that at the beginning of this year, when Hamilton Typographical Union suggested to headquarters that it should be permitted to invoke the priority law on behalf of men who had returned from active war service, the reply received was: "The council can not make decisions upon hypothetical cases." The United States was not many hours in the war before the council saw and advocated the wisdom of this suggestion.

It was argued that Canada should have and is entitled to direct representation on the executive council of the International Typographical Union, and that the Canadian unions should take concerted action with this object in view.

After a warm and lengthy discussion the entire matter was referred to the officers of the union to take whatever action they deemed advisable.

R. J. Robb.

Notwithstanding the fact that the members of the executive council have been impaled on the fork of discontent and toasted or roasted a Honolulu brown by members of Hamilton (Ont.) Typographical Union No. 129, section 4 of article xvii of the constitution of the International Union will continue to fix definitely the date on which propositions adopted by the membership become effective. This section reads as follows:

Sec. 4. All new laws and resolutions adopted by the membership of the International Typographical Union, unless otherwise provided, shall be in force and effect sixty days after the canvass of the vote on the same.

Proposition No. 4 was adopted by a unanimous vote of the delegates in the Colorado Springs convention. It made no provision which would have authorized the executive council to have made plan B effective, had it been adopted, on any date other than that indicated in the section of the constitution above quoted. Of course, no provision contained in the constitution of the International Union was intended to prevent the setting off of oratorical fireworks in any jurisdiction, or to forbid the toasting or roasting of the members of the executive council.—Editor Journal.

EVERETT, WASH.

"War is hell," it has been said, and so is scab tobacco. Why don't some of the numerous tobacco companies give the union man the privilege of sending our friends in the war some union-made goods? The soldiers need quality in everything to help down the "beast man of Europe." No. 410 has yet to suffer the loss of a member from its ranks on account of the war, however.

Ernest P. Marsh, president of the Washington State Federation of Labor, a member of Everett Typographical Union, was appointed by President Wilson as one of his representatives to help settle labor difficulties, and has been called to Washington, D. C. Those who know Marsh can commend the appointment, for he has never been found lacking.

Through strikes and other causes, printing has been poor in Everett. The daily papers have felt the slump, which amounts to many inches of ads per day, compared to a year ago. Job printing, too, is slow, but we still hope tomorrow will be better.

Probably to some oldtimers it would be news to hear of "Billy" McIntyre, who was, some years ago, president of the Tacoma News. He lives at Pinehurst with his family, but will still talk shop. A noble old man with many friends. Patsy Blair, one of the molders of our union, lives here, but has not been actively engaged for some time.

Leonard taking the position vacated. Elias Marcuson, our former secretary, sold his interest in the Everett Typesetting Company, drew his card, and left for a scouting trip, via Spokane. Samuel Tilden Allen ("Texas Sam") says he is going to stay in Everett a hundred years. He knows where God's country lies.

The northwest, from reports obtained, apparently has a glowing promise to members who are not familiar with conditions in the printing industry. Speaking of the Sound country, there seems to be plenty of men in all departments. However, you may find a haven for a week, but it will keep one on parade to secure a livelihood. In almost every town of importance you will find "pioneers" still subbing, and competent men, too.

Phil Bowen, formerly an operator on the Herald, purchased the interest of E. Marcuson in the Everett Typesetting Company, a trade plant. The company reports business fair.

Bryant James, formerly an operator on the Herald, is now somewhere in Montana.

The local scale, after many months of work, and with the valuable assistance of an International representative, has been signed up, No. 410 receiving an increase of 25 cents per day.

B. L. McCormick, for more than twenty years with the Seattle Star, has accepted the foremanship of the Herald, and is a valuable asset to No. 410.

The idea prevails with many that it would be advisable for different unions to have the officers of affiliated locals as delegates to the trades council. The suggestion is one of merit, we think. Such representatives should be the best men of each union, and they should attend regularly. Trades councils without good attendance results in poor work.

FRED K. OVERMAN.

CHICAGO, ILL.

And the mountain labored—and brought forth a scale which is a cross between a mouse and a monstrosity. After nearly three years of negotiation, stalling, sidestepping, backing and filling, the Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association has at last consented to allow the newspaper printers of Chicago an increase of 4 cents an hour—truly a munificent donation! The scale as signed went into effect October 11, 1917, without any retroactive clause, so the net result of the effort to secure an increase which might offset in some degree the 100 per cent advance in the cost of living is an agreement calling for a raise of less than 6 per cent, and in some cases it actually spells a reduction. The representatives of the union upon the board of arbitration were unanimous in declaring that the increase was inadequate, and so far as I have been able to ascertain, that opinion is shared by every newspaper printer in Chicago.

At the last regular meeting of the union Joseph H. McKee was suspended from membership until he shall have paid back No. 16 the money embezzled by him while an employe in the office of the secretary-treasurer. This amount is variously estimated at from $6,000 to $12,000. This McKee matter has taken up a large share of the time at various union meetings for about eighteen months, and has resulted in many charges and countercharges. McKee was indicted upon a complaint charging the embezzlement of some $2,000, but before the case came to trial the indictment was so changed as to charge the abstraction of but $200. To this McKee pleaded guilty, and was promptly paroled by the court. Right here the storm began. The officers of the union who were in charge of the prosecution of McKee declared that the parole was granted without their knowledge or consent, and a committee was appointed to investigate the matter. This committee avers that it has up to date been unable to get together all the persons who are, by reason of their positions, presumed to have knowledge of the events and causes which led up to the parole. A recommendation that the action of the attorney for the union be laid before the bar association for investigation was adopted. The committee was also charged with the task of ascertaining, if possible, what became of the money taken by McKee, and whether any other members of the union were in any way implicated in the affair, but this line of investigation has so far been without results.

A scale for the Jewish section of the union was submitted at the adjourned meeting of the union held October 14, but as it seemed unsatisfactory to the men concerned it was rejected and a substitute was adopted, which will be laid before the employers. One of the main points of the contention of the Jewish printers is their desire to have incorporated in the scale a provision for payment for the thirteen holidays occurring each year, the present scale allowing for but eight of these days.

On September 8, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gus Bilger, their daughter, Miss Gertrude V. Bilger, was united in marriage to Walter B. Sadler. The bride is well known to the fans who follow the fortunes of the Union Printers' Baseball League, as she has been a constant attendant at the tournaments held by that body, and all will unite in wishing her the utmost happiness.

Peter P. Zander, in his uniform as a jackie of the Great Lakes naval training station, was initiated as a member of No. 16 at the last regular meeting, the first man in uniform to take the obligation. He is a brother of Ernie J. Zander, one of the delegates to Colorado Springs.

The following, from the Chicago Herald of October 16, will be of interest to the many friends of Mr. Walker, who is one of the best-known and most highly-respected members of No. 16, now retired, and whose last active work in the craft was done in the proofroom of the Tribune:

Mr. and Mrs. Gerry R. Walker, 6637 Normal Park boulevard, yesterday celebrated their golden wedding, receiving 1,000 friends at two receptions held in the Eastern Star clubrooms of the Masonic Temple. One gathering was held in the afternoon and the other in the evening. Three children and four grandchildren assisted them. Mr. Walker, a veteran of the civil war and prominent in Masonic circles, was for a long period proofreader on the Herald. He served in the same capacity on several other Chicago newspapers, having been a printer since before the Chicago fire. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have two grandsons now in the army, one in the aviation corps and the other with the First Illinois infantry at Camp Logan.

Letters from Charles M. Fox, lately machinist on the Daily News and now a member of Company M, 344th infantry, at Camp Grant, near Rockford, indicate that the soldier's lot is not altogether a happy one, but he feels that there will be compensations if the boys are given a chance to get at the "Fritzies."

Chamberlain, of the Tribune, well known to all oldtimers.

Benjamin R. Gibson and Axel Carlson, who have been residents of the Union Printers Home for some time, have vacated and returned to Chicago. Arthur W. Crane is also reported as having left the Home, able to work.

The Union Printers' Bowling League, which holds its weekly contests at the Palace alleys, is enjoying a most successful season and attracting a large attendance of bowling fans. The boys are beginning to hit their stride, and already some high scores have been registered. Ready, of Gunthorp-Warren, has high average so far—185 for six games—though Joe Becker, of the Daily News, really tops the list with a total of 2,153 and an average of 179 5/12 for twelve games. The league has a prize list of $600, besides cups for the team champions and individual champion. On November 7 the Western Newspaper Union and A. N. Kellogg teams will compete, and this will be a ladies' night. An orchestra has been engaged and other attractions have been provided. Following is the standing of the teams up to October 10:

Richard Ruth, linotype operator on the Maywood Herald-Recorder, was one of the "bugs" who sacrificed sleep to stand in line waiting for the gates to open for the first game between the White Sox and the Giants. He waited patiently for hours, and at last got within sight of the entrance. A belated fan who saw no chance of reaching the gate offered the patient key-pounder $3 for his place in the line, but his proffer was scornfully declined. Five minutes later a cop strolled along and said: "Youse fellers might as well get out. The gates is closed." And that was about all.

During the discussion of the Jewish scale at the union meeting some aspersions were cast upon the truthfulness of the members of the Yiddish contingent. Mark Mitchell, who is probably better acquainted with the idiosyncrasies of our Hebrew brethren than any other printer in Chicago, was on his feet at once to defend them. "Mr. President," he said, "these boys are not untruthful. They tell the truth—but they tell it in their own way."

Among the sons of printers who are doing their duty in the service of the United States is Arthur E. Moody, who is in Houston, Texas, a member of Company M, First Illinois infantry. He is a son of Herbert P. Moody, of the Daily News, and is well known to many printers in the northwest.

BRYANT L. BEECHER.

On Friday, October 5, William Zalabok, the oldest apprentice at the office of the M. V. Klich Printing Company, and on October 7 Emil Pristowpinsky, the monotype caster of the same firm, left for Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., the drilling place of Illinois and other states for recruits. On Saturday evening, September 29, both of the young men were surprised by their families and many friends at their respective homes, and an enjoyable time was had till broad daylight, with a good spread of edibles, refreshments and dancing. Both received valuable wrist watches and smokers' outfits, besides other useful presents. The large new dwelling of Pristowpinsky's was elaborately decorated in the inside with American flags, bunting and green sprays. He was rushed home after quitting time Saturday noon by the foreman, Emil Korenek, and both worked with others to finish the decoration before his sister should arrive, because he was kept under the impression that the surprise was intended for her. But how his eyes opened when he arrived about 9 o'clock with his "best" girl and found some of his fellow-workmen and many others to greet him. He is an accomplished musician on the cornet and piccolo, and played with his band, which presented him with the wrist watch. He took a six-months' course on the monotype at Philadelphia, and therefore understands the work. William Zalabok is also an expert in music on the concertina, and if allowed to have the instrument in camp, would surely serve the boys with much enjoyment. He is the only son of the twelve children at home to support his aged parents. Both of the men are highly esteemed by their employer and the craft, and for that reason the proprietor's daughter and the bindery forewoman collected funds and bought each recruit a fine shaving outfit. HERMAN TAMMEN.

HALIFAX, N. S.

The October meeting of No. 130 was a record-breaker in attendance, operators as well as handmen turning out in force. This justifies the action of the scale committee in making a flat scale for machine and hand men, thus stimulating the interest of every member, with the result that cooperation and unity of effort will mark the negotiation of the new scale. The employers have received the required three-months' notice, and when this letter is published they will be digesting the terms of the proposed scale of 1918. The new scale calls for a substantial increase, made necessary by the increased cost of living, and is considered a just and equitable demand by every member of No. 130.

Business in the various offices is reported good. All members are working, with the exception of Steve Kennedy, who is still very sick in hospital. Two apprentice members—Mariner Ripley, Herald, and William Crooks, Echo—were received into full membership. Charges against a label shop for violation of agreement will be submitted to arbitration.

Cornelius O'Keefe, pensioner, is on a visit to Boston and New York. He will look up the secretaries of Nos. 13 and 6 and let them know No. 130 is still on the map. John Skerry, Imperial, is back from a visit to the "Hub." He saw some former Halifax boys, including Bert Mullaney, of the Globe. M. Alexandre Martineau, Quebec, has deposited his card. Bert Boutilier, No. 5 operator on the Herald, who spent a week at Ship Harbor moose hunting, is back, bringing along a large moose.

It is not known yet how many Halifax printers will be affected by the military service act. Those who have been already examined are rated in classes C and E. It is not thought that many members of No. 130 will come under the first call. The proprietor of a label shop has passed for class A and will be eligible for overseas. Two ex-presidents of No. 130 have been appointed to the military exemptions board—A. J. Smith, Recorder, and Percy Clancy, Imperial.

The following-named compose the Nova Scotia executive committee of the trades and labor congress: Ralph Eisnor and Michael Murphy, Halifax; D. D. McDonald, Sydney Mines; James Steele, Sydney. The Halifax Trades and Labor Council has endorsed the proposal of the congress to establish an independent labor party in Canada along the lines of the British labor party, and will send delegates to a convention called by the Dominion Trades Congress.

An endeavor will be made at the next session of the Nova Scotia legislature to secure the addition of a first medical aid provision to the workmen's compensation act. The cheap tickets for working people on tram cars have not yet been introduced. The supreme court will decide on this subject in November. The electrical workers' strike is still unsettled, but there are hopes of an early settlement; a committee from the trades and labor congress has been appointed with this end in view.

TOPEKA, KAN.

It was rather hard for even the "faithful few" to attend the October meeting, the cause being the second game of the world's series, which was played for the benefit of Topeka's fans on the excellent score board erected by the Daily Capital. They were there, however, and routine work was accomplished speedily, followed by several important new measures which needed attention. The very important proposition of organizing a sick and accident benefit society was pretty thoroughly thrashed out, and from several very good plans submitted a workable one will be adopted.

Topeka has always been a 100 per cent union town, and President McConn is holding all in line—also strengthening the union's standing wherever there is any laxity of the laws known to exist.

Secretary Amos reports work good, being unable to supply operators especially.

Bob Sorby, from Kansas City, who has been with us for a long time, has drawn and passed for Los Angeles. J. E. Brinkworth and A. E. Blakely, formerly with the State Journal, have accepted "sits" in Kansas City.

A. L. Rogers, an apprentice member, has returned from Philadelphia, where he took a ten-weeks' course at the Lanston monotype school. He is employed at the Hall Litho Company.

Arthur Brown was admitted to full membership at the last meeting and is employed on the Journal.

Any member knowing the whereabouts of A. C. Reese (4567) should notify Secretary-Treasurer Hays at once. Reese has worked his way from the Pacific coast on permits and working cards issued by locals in the west and southwest.

Owing to the fact that there were more volunteers than the allotment required to fill Topeka's quota for the draft, no members of No. 121 were called. There are several who will be called in the next quota. but their names are not available as yet. Apprentice Omar Ketcham enlisted in the engineers' corps and is at Camp Funston, Fort Riley.

The union men of Topeka met the coal situation by forming a buying association of their own, and despite the coal dealers' assertion that coal will be higher and mighty scarce, too, are buying their winter's supply 75 cents to $1.25 per ton cheaper than the dealers' price. The industrial council has charge of the work.

The wage-earners of San Francisco are fortunate in having so excellent a gentleman at the head of their city government as James Rolph, jr., has proved himself to be by his most excellent answer to the accusation of laxity in the conduct of the police in the San Francisco street car strike, made by the president of the chamber of commerce of that city. It can be seen by his letter that the wage-earner of San Francisco can go about his lawful business of disposing of his labor in a peaceful manner, as he always does, without getting his head knocked off. The wage-earner is instructed that he must respect the law also. There have been instances, unfortunately, when a few in the labor movement have committed the fault of rioting, but it has always been aroused by the first principle—self-preservation—and caused by the dastardly tricks of such organizations as the "law and order committee" of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. After reading the letter from Spokane one can easily see that our friends of the northwest could use a man of Mr. Rolph's type in their present trouble. Here's hoping the laboring men of Spokane come out on top.

Cards deposited: Ed James, John T. Wallace, P. H. Fowler. Cards withdrawn: J. E. Brinkworth, A. E. Blakely, R. C. Sorby, E. M. Whalen, A. V. Smith, D. H. Duffy, H. E. Statzell.

"Queenie" Connors.

Not for many years has the loss of a member of Topeka Typographical Union No. 121 been so keenly regretted as the death of Thomas B. Brown, on the morning of October 3, 1917. It was the passing of one of the conspicuous members of our organization, and one of the ablest and best of them.

T. B. Brown was born in La Salle county, Illinois, in 1854, and therefore was 63 years old at the time of his death. He came to Kansas when quite young and worked at the printing trade in Ottawa for several years before coming to Topeka. He was also in the railway mail service for some time. He was initiated as a member of No. 121 in 1885 and maintained a continuous active membership until the time of his death. During practically all of his residence in Topeka, until four years ago, Mr. Brown was connected with the state printing plant, and was its foreman for twenty-two years. In the fall of 1913 he resigned this position to become secretary of the Shawnee Building and Loan Association, in which business he had been interested for many years and had come to be considered an authority.

In all these years his interest in the typographical union never slackened and he gave its laws, benefit features and general welfare much of his time and attention.

Mr. Brown served two terms as president of Topeka Typographical Union, and was delegate to International conventions four times, in 1889, 1891, 1904 and 1905. At one of these conventions he was a member of the laws committee, and at another was made a member of the Amos Cummings memorial committee, which was charged with the task of raising funds for that enterprise.

When the first central labor body was organized in Topeka, in 1889, under the name of the trades assembly, Mr. Brown was a member. He also assisted in the organization of the Kansas State Federation of Labor, and was its first president.

Only once was he known to aspire to political office. In 1910 he was a candidate in the republican primaries for state printer and lost by so close a margin that it required the official count to decide it.

He was quite prominent in fraternal circles. He was a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of the Ancient Order United Workmen, the Moose and Elks.

Even those who disagreed with Mr. Brown in opinions and policies were forced to recognize his ability and his sense of fairness and impartiality. During his career as a unionist he took part in many heated controversies, but he was never known to descend to personalities nor to take an unfair advantage of an opponent. He was a man of well-defined convictions; but whether his attitude was one of opposition or advocacy it was entirely impersonal and related only to principles and measures. He always took pains to inform himself on all matters with which he had to deal, and he made thoroughness and accuracy a part of his daily life. He was a careful adviser, and therefore a valuable friend and a useful citizen.

At the October meeting of Topeka Typographical Union No. 121 a committee was appointed to prepare a suitable memorial to the life and services of our departed brother. W. T. Luce.

KEENE, N. H.

No. 771 held its regular monthly meeting Friday evening, October 5, in Grand Army hall, with every member present. It was unanimously voted that the dues of our late secretary-treasurer, John H. Hudson, now with the 103d regiment, somewhere in France, be contributed from the local treasury until the expiration of his enlistment in the army. Upon his departure he was made the recipient of a handsome wrist watch and safety razor, by his friends in the Martell plant, as an emblem of good fellowship and a tribute to a worthy brother on a mission for a worthy cause.

As the result of small attendance, it was deemed advisable to hold future meetings at the various members' homes, whereupon social gatherings of that nature will tend to interest delinquent members as well as aid to swell the local funds.

John J. McGuire, one of Martell's comps, has returned from a visit to his home in South Boston.

E. C. Osborn, who for the last eight years has been employed by the Sentinel Publishing Company of this city, has weighed anchor to seek better shelter in another port. His absence will be keenly felt by his numerous friends.

Representative Dallas paid the boys a flying visit on the evening of September 13, and by his ever-welcome presence in our midst encouraged us to oil up the rusty wheels of progress and force down the many imposing obstacles that tend to mar the future of infant organizations.

Imit Johnson has returned after a well-earned vacation "down home."

Generosity does prevail in one of our New Hampshire mills. One morning while going to work I was overtaken by an old employe of one of our fifty-nine-hour mills, and in a gleeful tone he broke the silence with, "Durned if life ain't worth livin'," and in conclusion proudly told how the firm had so generously reduced their hours of toil to only fifty-four hours.

With "Old Glory" proudly tossing the mountain breezes, the opening of Camp Mor-Wor-Mac, the hunting abode of Aubrey MacWha, was in evidence. After several hours of rambling over the mountain sides in quest of game, the weary hunters repaired to camp, where they soothed their sharpened appetites with a bounteous "sit down" of sirloin and the fixin's, prepared for the occasion by the chef. Space will not permit the list of game bagged. Aubrey E. MacWha.

SHARON, PA.

Sharon, the convention city, January 13, 1918.

The Western Pennsylvania Typographical Union Conference will meet in Sharon on the above date, and the committee is working hard to make it the banner meeting of the conference. There are twenty-eight unions eligible to the conference, with but seventeen affiliated. It is most important that the nine remaining affiliate before the meeting here in January. "We Need You, You Need Us," is truly an appropriate slogan, as it is only through the co-operation of all unions that the greatest success of the conference can be attained. There is no acceptable excuse for these unions not belonging to the conference. No union is so strong in itself that it is beyond the help of others. The benefits, it is true, may not be noticeable all at once—things that are good never are—but every union will and must receive the benefits for betterment. Strength in meeting all opposition, the help it brings to each individual member in many ways, the sociability it creates among the members, and the employment department of the conference are a few of the things that unions hesitating should consider.

Joe Steines shined his new Dodge up and took a trip to Youngstown. Coming home, he says every road out of the Ohio city was marked with a sign "detour," and he kept "detouring" until he landed in Warren, Ohio, instead of Sharon. Now every time Joe sees a sign he starts to "detour."

Harry Burkhart, of the Farrell News, has gone to Lancaster, Pa. F. Ashby, who has been machinist-operator at the Herald, left for parts unknown.

Joe Franek is quite a politician. He ran pretty well in the race for school director.

The boys here are all pulling for "Ted" Eichhorn, secretary of Erie Union, who ran second out of twenty-eight candidates for the nomination of city commissioner. There are four to elect and we think "Ted" is a sure winner.

Harry Cross, of the Farrell News, and Emmett Whitehead, of the Eagle Printing Company, draft members, have been called and will leave in the next contingent, probably for Camp Lee, Va.

At the last meeting of our union a committee was appointed to secure a suitable room for meeting purposes. Heretofore No. 351 has been holding its meetings in the Telegraph composing room. It is the sense of the members to make the meetings attractive with social "after affairs," and in this manner secure a full attendance at the meetings.

O. C. Aubut, proprietor of the Hudson Printing Company, opened a branch office in Akron, Ohio, recently, and in order to take care of both ends has bought an Overland car.

There is a lot of work for the apprentice committee at the present time, and would suggest that the matter be taken up as soon as possible.

The Herald has moved its job department from its present cramped quarters on the second floor of its building to a large and well-lighted room on the first floor, and is adding new machinery and type faces to its already well-equipped plant.

No. 351 is taking care of all members, in the way of dues and assessments, of those who join the army or are drafted, by assessing each member 5 cents a month for each one leaving for camp.

The Telegraph and Herald world series extras were handled by the two chapels in record-breaking time this year, appearing on the streets a few minutes after the last wire was in.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The Ohio State Federation of Labor held its convention in this city, starting on October 8 and closing on the 12th. It was the largest convention in the history of the federation, for some 466 delegates were present, while almost every city sending a delegate had a visitor or two to accompany the delegate. As usual, a large number of printers were among the delegates, and they took a conspicuous part in the proceedings of the federation. Thomas J. Donnelly, of this city, was reelected secretary-treasurer. Mr. Donnelly was president of No. 3 for a number of years and was also delegate several times. Frank L. Rist, also a local typo, was chairman of the entertainment committee, and after the social affairs were all concluded Rist was voted the best entertaining committeeman in the history of the federation.

Frank Steffen, secretary-treasurer of Cleveland Typographical Union No. 53, and Freddy Boehler, also of Cleveland, were among the delegates to the Ohio Federation of Labor convention. Their constant companion was Jim Anderson, a Toledo printer. They all visited the Typo club. Steffen's friends will hear a good story by asking him to relate his experience in "hunting" for the Typo club.

Notwithstanding the large number of boys who have gone to the front from this city, there appears to be an oversupply of men for the work here. All of those who usually are away for the entire summer are now back on their situations, and this, of course, places several men back on the floor. Little encouragement appears to be held for a heavy run of fall advertising.

President Morford and Secretary Sauer, of the bowling league, are fast getting the boys in shape for the big tournament at Indianapolis next spring. They bowl every Tuesday at Central alleys, Seventh street, west of Central avenue. All members of the printing trades are welcome.

Members of No. 3 have subscribed liberally to the Liberty loan. The International Typographical Union officials and No. 3 are behind President Wilson and are not responsible for a few rattle-brained members of the organization who may oppose President Wilson and the country in this fight for humanity. There is no middle-of-the-road game in this war; a man is either an American or against his country. A man who will "rat" his country will "rat" his union.

The members of the city charter commission were given a vote of thanks at the October meeting. Frank L. Rist, a member of No. 3, is a member of the commission, and used his influence to have the printing placed in a union office.

Walter ("Turkey") Burke, of the Enquirer chapel, is now a corporal at Camp Sherman. Stanley Mathews, of the Commercial Tribune chapel, is a corporal in the Rainbow division. Our other members are in line for promotion.

JAMES W. DOUGHERTY, SR.

PITTSBURG, KAN.

B. R. ("Paddy") Crain was recently elected secretary-treasurer in place of the undersigned. Ex-President Camp Jones is busily engaged "shoving on the reins" of a Grant roadster while not otherwise engaged in operating a machine, foremanizing the Morning Sun, and between whiles acting as machinist. Sam Gilmore has departed for Emporia, where he will assist his father in running a paper, "Stubby" Harvey falling heir to his "sit." Ned Bobo lit, subbed three weeks and caught a regular situation on the Appeal to Reason at Girard. August Simion had to leave our community on account of his health, and is working in Billings, Mont.

Work is beginning to look up a bit and prospects are fairly bright. F. H. SWINNEY.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The October meeting of No. 15 was the most enthusiastic and fiery session held since your humble scribe has tarried in this city. Under the "dominating" power of President Burns Rochester printers are awakening to the realization that they must co-operate and work as they never have before to make Rochester, N. Y., a city worthy of its "fair" name. Great progress has been made in organization work here in the last two years, new members being initiated at every meeting.

Vice-President Allen resigned his position at the Herald jobroom and has accepted a position at Geneva, N. Y. Mr. Allen was in line for the presidency of No. 15 and has proved himself an efficient officer. A. M. Good, of the Evening Times, was the unanimous choice for the unexpired term of vice-president. Mr. Good is one of the younger members of the organization, but has taken hold of the work with a determination to make "good."

Dr. Herman F. Titus, of Seattle, Wash., was granted the privilege of the floor at the October meeting and addressed the members on the universal shorter workday. He advocated four hours for all laboring classes and claimed that when the war was over that it was almost a sure fact that such hours would prevail. The unfair conditions at the Todd Protectograph Company was taken up for consideration and the delegates in the central trades were instructed to bring it before that body. A resolution was adopted endorsing the bakers' union in its fight against the General Baking Company and requesting members of No. 15 to buy only union-made bread. The union also went on record in favor of equal pay for men and women workers in all branches of industry as well as in the printing trades.

The printers and pressmen of the Democrat and Chronicle have received an increase of $2 per week, which is $1.50 over the union scale. It is now up to the two union offices to "come across."

Tuesday, September 25, the Herald chapel held its annual clambake. The gathering also served as a farewell to Theodore Mackowski, who was drafted for service in the army. Mr. Mackowski was presented a wrist watch by the members of the Herald chapel. The chapel also issues "Our Morning Blabber," which is mailed to every member of the Herald force who is serving in the army and navy of the United States. Mr. Mackowski was in training camp only a week when volunteers were called for immediate service in France, and, as usual, "Mac" was there. He was assigned to the engineering corps, and by the time this is read will be making history on the other side.

The following cards were received during September: Thomas E. White, Hugh McKee, Leo Werstine, William E. Lucks, Earl G. Foster, Elmer R. Holt. The following were issued: Thomas E. White, Orlin K. Briggs, Hugh McKee, Thomas E. McCauley, Joseph A. Cassard, R. L. Jones, Leo Werstine, John E. Stock. Messrs. Jones and Stock have accepted positions in Geneva and will be good additions to that local.

On Saturday, October 13, members of the Times chapel held their grand fall "wind-up" at the cottage of William Woods at Grand View beach on Ontario lake. The session lasted from the time the paper went to press in the afternoon to the following Sunday afternoon. All report a good time; also that Chef Reynolds, the "quack doctor," can prepare a palatable meal just as well as a fancy patent medicine advertisement.

Blaine L. Butterfield has resigned his position on the Evening Times and has accepted a position as general manager of the Charlotte News. Fred LaRock is also connected with the News.

JOHN O. RUPPERSBERGER.

OAKLAND, CAL.

Things are quiet in Oakland—exceptionally so.

The executive committee recommended to the union the investment of $1,000 in Liberty bonds, which will come up for concurrence by the local union at its coming meeting, and it's a foregone conclusion that the recommendation will be concurred in.

Quite a number of individual members purchased bonds of the first Liberty loan, and from what is heard they will take another fly at the second issue. When it comes to patriotism, either in devoting oneself to the country or investing one's hard-earned money, the members of Oakland Typographical Union are no pikers.

Alex Doig, foreman of the Oakland Tribune, was on the sick list for several weeks, but has since returned to his desk. During his enforced absence the Tribune composing room was in charge of Ed Hamilton.

Al Bowen is still confined to his home, as is Mr. Heathcote, both having had a serious spell; but it is hoped they will be at work ere this is published.

"Biff" Billington, an apprentice of the Enquirer, who enlisted in the army, has gone, and has the best wishes of the chapel which made a present to him as a memento of his leaving.

Arthur Tormey, who held the business managership of the Oakland Enquirer, has been drafted and has departed for somewhere in America.

Thomas O'Rourke, the original "Casey's" younger brother, is another member of Oakland Typographical Union who has been drafted.

Ira Lubb has gone on his regular quarterly vacation. This is an affair that takes place four times a year, and is mentioned to show his regular habits.

Quite a number of Oakland printers possess automobiles, Theo Lotter being the latest to purchase one. It is noticeable, though, that the majority of these prosperous ones are not blessed with any offspring—like the writer, who has three, and rides in a street car—when he has the fare.

JOE A. MULHALL.

LONDON, ONT.

The regular meeting for October was not a record for attendance by any means, but nevertheless was quite enthusiastic. The principal topic was the question of keeping our members in good standing who are and may be drafted for overseas service. The executive committee, to which the matter had been previously referred, submitted its report, recommending that all resident members while overseas be kept in good standing as long as the International Typographical Union shall continue to pay mortuary benefits; provided, however, that the proposition might be canceled if it became evident that danger of disruption threatened. However, the result of the referendum on October 17 may place an entirely new phase upon the matter, and the question may again be subject to adjustment. One candidate was admitted to membership and one withdrawal card issued.

The booklets, "The Printers' Fight for Life and Victory," are being sent out from the local headquarters to the business and professional men of the city, accompanied by a circular letter, as the advance guard of a systematic campaign that is to be waged against the unfair plants of the city, of which there are but four without the fold. Already the little booklet is bearing fruit, one gentleman, in acknowledging receipt of same, asserting: "I feel so stirred by the splendid story of self-help that I want to get out and agitate for "shorter hours and longer wages." We believe that this story of the wonderful achievement of the International Typographical Union is going to prove a silent organizer that will outrank the human agent 100 per cent in permanent results. We are of the opinion that every subordinate union on the continent should have this booklet for distribution. It catches and holds the interest of the most bitter opponents of organized labor to the end, and, best of all, it convinces and converts.

The fight put up by the retail coal dealers' association and the hundreds of dollars spent in the press to prevent the establishment of a municipal coal yard, were to no avail. The trades and labor council, with Charlie Ferguson, of No. 133, wielding the big club, snowed them under in the recent election here, and now the people of this city will be no longer at the mercy of the coal barons.

Ed Stein, of the Free Press chapel, has purchased a handsome new Overland car, much to the envy of the rest of the gang, who have been casting wistful glances at the little Ford.

A communication received from Major Kinskey states that he is in fine fettle for the fray in France. Should the major realize his ambition in reaching the firing line, his career will be watched with much interest by No. 133, whose associations have been so pleasant and profitable for quite a number of years.

We note in the Philadelphia correspondence that Bill Hanifan, of Baltimore, is sojourning in that city. We always were a great admirer of Bill from the moment we met him at the Baltimore convention. Besides, wasn't it Bill who found our New Testament and collection money, which we had dropped in our mad haste to church on Sunday morning, and who hunted far and wide to deliver it into our possession? Why, sure it was!

The Advertiser has installed an up-to-date ventilation system and now has one of the finest newspaper plants in the country.

Business conditions never better, but the high cost of living is in a very flighty mood, with some changes for the better. A. H. WHEATLEY.

NOTES FROM UNION PRINTERS HOME.

Mrs. W. R. Evans, of Seattle, whose husband is a member of the Coast Printing Company, of that city, visited the Home one day during the latter part of September. The lady is making an extensive tour of the middle west, visiting old friends and relatives, and incidentally taking in the various natural scenes and attractions of the Rocky mountain region. Mr. Evans is one of the managers of a prosperous and growing business, a loyal member of Seattle Typographical Union and a man who thoroughly believes in the "closed-shop" principle.

Resident O. W. Humphrey received a letter recently from Miss Julia M. Burke, member of Columbia Union No. 101 and compiler of "My Scrap Book" (mention of which was made in a previous letter), expressing her gratification for the kind reception her unique donation to our library elicited from everybody at the Home.

Robert J. Hetrick, Denver Union No. 49, and Charles F. Nissen, of Oklahoma City No. 283, were visitors at the Home during the past month.

According to a late bulletin on hygiene in the printing trades, issued by the federal bureau of labor statistics, the International Typographical Union is cited as reducing the death rate due to tuberculosis from 31.2 per cent in 1900 to 19.1 per cent in 1915. And yet there are some people still living on the earth who claim that printers work only for their own pecuniary advantage, paying no attention to the health and welfare of the rest of humanity.

Len G. Shaw, connected with the Detroit Free Press, was a visitor at the Home September 18, accompanied by his wife. They stopped in the Springs for a few days to take in the sights of the Rocky mountain region, and then continued their journey to the Pacific coast. Mr. Shaw is a former member of Pittsburgh Union No. 7, and talked over "auld lang syne" with his old friend, Resident T. E. Sherrat, for a short time while here at the big institution.

In order to make them more sanitary and comfortable the twenty tents used exclusively for tubercular patients have been raised eighteen inches above the ground and concrete foundations put under them. These tents are octagonal in shape, with substantial framework securely anchored to withstand the most severe winds. They are steam-heated, lighted by electricity, and supplied with electric call bells by which the occupants can at once summon a nurse in case of need. Free circulation of air is secured by ventilators on the floor and in the apex of the tents, which may be closed in extreme cold weather.

Letters were received here during the past month from former Mrs. Minnie M. Carter, announcing her marriage August 14 to James D. Roberts, a member of Detroit (Mich.) Typographical Union No. 18. The bride is the widow of Charles M. Carter, deceased, who six years ago was a resident of the Union Printers Home, coming here from New York Union No. 6. She was well known here, having been a frequent visitor during her former husband's last illness. The Robertses will make their future home at 350 Ferdinand avenue, Detroit.

Twenty acres of oats, eight acres of beans and two acres of field corn were harvested this season from the Home farm. The yield was an average one for this locality and will add its "bit" toward reducing the high cost of living. Our vegetable garden was also a feature in the reduction process.

J. H. Miller, San Francisco Union No. 21, was a visitor at the Home September 23. H. N. Johnson, of Spokane Union 193, also visited us one day last month.

Resident Richard Daenell, of Fort Wayne Typographical Union No. 78, enjoyed a three-days' visit in Denver the latter part of September.

Mrs. Sallie Phillips, a highly-popular employe of the Home, was the recipient a few weeks ago of a large box of delicious fruit from Riverside, N. M. The donor was an old friend of hers, A. E. Pieper, owner of a valuable fruit ranch near Riverside. Like the Good Samaritan that she is, Mrs. Phillips at once proceeded to share her gift with her friends.

October 7, 1917, was the date on which Robert G. Thompson, resident member of the Home from Denver Union No. 49, commenced his ninety-first year of existence on this mundane sphere. He is still hale and well preserved, and bids fair to round out the century figure before he "pulls his slip" and starts out to join his old companions and friends, many of whom have long since gone on before. Mr. Thompson was born in New Jersey, October 7, 1827, of revolutionary stock; served his apprenticeship at the printing trade in New York city, and in 1852 came to the state of Indiana. He was one of the charter members of Lafayette (Ind.) Typographical Union No. 64. He came to Colorado twenty-eight years ago and for twenty years has been a resident of the Union Printers Home; and during that whole long period no violation of any rule of the institution has ever been recorded against him. May the "old man" live to enjoy many more additional birthdays.

Mrs. J. C. Daley, matron of the Home, returned from her month's vacation in the east October 4.

The following item, contributed to the Colorado Springs Labor News of October 5 by a resident, is here reproduced for the benefit of JOURNAL readers: Residents John J. Graham (Wilkes-Barre No. 187), Jerome W. Myers (San Francisco No. 25) and R. L. Barnes (Meriden, Conn., No. 314) made the ascent and descent of Pikes Peak afoot on Thursday, September 13. Mr. Graham, upon his arrival at the Home last May, was hardly able to walk, while Mr. Barnes is in his sixtieth year. Mr. Myers, being the most agile, sped away from the others and reached the summit in six and three-fourths hours, but on the return he got lost in the shuffle and came in four or more hours late. None of them felt any serious ill effects from the trip. Mr. Graham later left for his home in Pennsylvania.

J. W. Hays, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union, after a sojourn of six weeks in the Springs, went back to Indianapolis September 24 greatly improved in health.

The following persons were admitted, discharged and died at the Home during the month ending October 14, 1917:

DIED.

A. D. Westwood, Saskatoon No. 663; age 37 years; died October 13.

Edward J. Webb, of Irvington, N. J., and member of Newark Typographical Union No. 69, visited the Home September 29. He was accompanied by his wife and brother, Albert E. Webb.

Paul M. Coss, a former resident from Waukegan (Ill.) Typographical Union No. 294, who recently vacated the Home, has assumed the management of the Colorado Springs Argus, a weekly paper published in the west end of this city, his father and himself having purchased the plant.

The Sunday evening concerts and moving picture entertainments at the Home were resumed October 7, and will continue during the next six months.

H. A. Murray, Cheyenne Union No. 184, whose mother and sister reside in this city, was here during the last week in September. He left here for Pueblo to respond to the draft army call for assemblage at Camp Funston for military training.

Carl Hed, of Pueblo Union No. 175; Frank Kiernan, of Boston Union No. 13; M. Swein and wife, of Denver Union No. 49, and G. W. Huffman, president of El Paso (Texas) Union No. 370, were among the visitors at the Home during the last week in September. J. A. Robertson, of No. 49, and Fred Lewis, of No. 16, each accompanied by his wife, were also late visitors.

Mrs. L. A. Wenzel, wife of Resident Wenzel, from Denver Union, came over to visit her husband the fore part of October.

At present the Pikes Peak region is enjoying its usual incomparable fall weather. There is perhaps no other region on the face of the earth that can boast of such long and uninterrupted spells of warm, delightful autumn weather. Here it is the middle of October and still the balmy days of late August and September are with us, and to continue for another month. Jack Frost has withheld his icy fingers from touching the home of late flowers, and old Mr. Pluvius has never once opened the valves of his cold shower baths to put a chill upon the face of all nature. The joys of Indian summer still linger with us, and the two-mile-high ozone that we breathe out here puts new life and vigor into every living creature.

B. F. Smythe.

LEXINGTON, KY.

With an interesting narrative of rides in flivvers, of trains running behind schedule and of having to gently brush aside the gateman in order to make connections, Major Frank C. Leaming, the venerable foreman of a local paper, is back from a trip to Columbus, Ohio, where he had gone to inspect the monotype caster and the working of the non-distribution system. Mr. Leaming, after a thorough inspection, is well pleased with the system, and the Herald will give this latest improvement to the printing industry at least a trial. While away Mr. Leaming met a few of his boyhood friends and a general good time was had.

On Saturday morning, October 13, James S. Ewalt, while in the faithful performance of his duty, met a sudden and tragic end. Hardly did Jimmie realize the truth of the words when he remarked, "I am tired of the job," and was going to quit, and this day was to have been his last. Owing to a change in the railroad schedule one of the local papers sent the mails each morning to a neighboring town, a distance of eighteen miles, for the accommodation of their country subscribers, and it was while making this run that the automobile turned over, throwing Mr. Ewalt to the ground, breaking his neck. The typographical union loses a loyal and sincere member; the Herald a valuable employe, and his death is keenly felt by all. To Mrs. Ewalt, and the two little twin daughters, the Herald force and the typographical union extend their warm and heartfelt sympathy.

Fred White spent a few days in town recently visiting old friends. He did not tarry long and left for Louisville.

Much discussion of late has been the yields of the various war gardens, and the conversations are varied and interesting. Our esteemed secretary, Mr. Leaming, planted several dozen tomato plants, all of which yielded him "a tomato." Some tomato, Major! Others, with dreams of world monopoly of the potato market, and of later retiring to bluegrass estates, tell of paying fancy prices for seed potatoes only to quit in disgust at the onslaught of the potato bug.

There seems to be a general unrest among the printers owing to old H. C. of L. and to the fact of higher wages elsewhere. G. F. Wright and William McFarland, both considered home guards, have drawn their travelers and departed for other localities. T. T. Evans, who has been with the Lexington Leader for over ten years, is now working for the Citizens Printing Company.

Norman King, who quit the ranks of the printers to embark in the automobile business, has left for Hattiesburg, Miss., where he will operate a bus line for the accommodation of the soldiers.

Morris Shankland has left the Leader and accepted a situation on the Herald.

Work in Lexington is fair, with plenty on hand to handle the situation, the draft catching only one of our members, Harry C. Smith.

Everybody is working as many days a week as the law allows, in order to make ends meet. The writer often wonders if it really pays to be a printer; to serve four years as an apprentice, working seven days a week at a very minimum wage, only to learn of so-called common laborers now earning as much as skilled craftsmen.

C. B. CHARLESWORTH.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.

No. 84 made its first contribution to the Liberty army when, on October 3, Joseph Martin Delaney departed with a large contingent from this county for American Lake to enter training with the thousands already gone. Joe was given a hearty send-off by the members of No. 84, who supplied him with a quantity of his favorite cigars, and the Sun office, where he has long been an operator, presented him with an illuminated wrist watch. Manager Harbison made the presentation speech, expressing the appreciation of the force of Joe's qualities. No one will miss him more than the subs.

Work has been good enough here to keep us eating with a degree of regularity in the past, but with the boosting of the price of everything the printer finds it necessary to buy, as well as those not essential, we feel not so sure of the future unless a raise in the scale is effected, which we are hoping for.

Several cards have been deposited the past month—rather more than the state of trade would seem to warrant. The hottest summer recorded has been enjoyed and now the mellow autumn is welcoming frequent tourists. PHIL DEWEY.

MADISON, WIS.

A new progressive afternoon daily will make its appearance in Madison in about four or five weeks. The policy of the new paper will be that of absolute fairness to all parties, and will give its readers a chance to be heard. There are two papers already in this city, the morning sheet (not deserving the name of newspaper) is non-union, and the afternoon employs union men. The new daily, it is certain, will employ union men exclusively. Readers of Madison are anxiously awaiting the newcomer.

Typographical Union No. 106 is looking forward to a large membership this year. Two men, formerly employed in a non-union office, have joined the union and are now with the Mayer Printing Company.

Edward Delabarre has returned from Terre Haute, and is back on the job—make-up man on the Daily Cardinal, a daily owned and controlled by the students of the University of Wisconsin.

Louis Schillinger, operator of the only model 9 Mergenthaler in the city, was elected chairman of the State Journal chapel. DAVID WEISS.

LINCOLN, NEB.

The entire jurisdiction ought to congratulate THE JOURNAL for publishing the picture of the delegation at the Home day celebration at Colorado Springs. It made a fine supplement and will be preserved and no doubt framed by many for preservation. I wish I could get a picture like that of the laying of the corner stone twenty-five years ago. The Home does not look much like it did then, for there was not much there to see, except the natural beauty and the scenery surrounding same. I was out there at that time, and it was with the deepest regret that I could not attend this last meeting. There is no place like the Union Printers Home for the worn-out printers, and the union is to be commended for the good work it is doing in the preservation of printers' lives. Lincoln Typographical Union has sent several out there and they are all robust and in almost perfect health. The only thing we regret is that they have concluded to remain, and we will not be privileged to see their faces again, except perhaps for a few moments when they visit us.

H. C. Peate is quite a figure in labor federation circles in this community. He rode at the head of the great procession that marched through our streets recently, when the state federation of labor convention was the guest of this city, and he presided over a part of the deliberations. He is president of the central labor union of Lincoln, and sets up the want ads on that great paper, the Lincoln Daily Star.

Cards deposited: C. D. Hanson, James Wilson, James D. Hayden, Victor D. Wisda, George Markel. Withdrawn: Charles S. Boag.

M. L. Adams, delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, gave a good report at the September meeting and made an eloquent appeal for the Home, classifying it as "your Home," and describing the excellent management, surroundings and beauties connected with it. W. H. Creal gave a report of the state meeting of the federation of labor, which recently met in this city. Resolutions were read and adopted recommending F. M. Coffey, secretary of the federation of labor, for the office of compensation commissioner, the office soon to be appointed by the governor. A municipal coal plant was discussed and a committee appointed to present the proposition to the mayor and council. A great deal of business relating to the local government of the union was discussed and the following change in the by-laws presented for adoption.

Section 29½. Foremen of printing offices have the right to employ help, and may discharge (1) for incompetency, (2) for neglect of duty, (3) for violation of office rules (which shall be conspicuously posted), or of the laws of the chapel or union, and (4) to decrease the force, such decrease to be accomplished by discharging first the person or persons last employed, either as regular employes or as extra employes, as the exigencies of the matter may require. Should there be an increase in the force the persons displaced through such cause shall be reinstated in reverse order in which they were discharged before other help may be employed. Upon demand, the foreman shall give the reason for discharge in writing. Persons considered capable as substitutes by foremen shall be deemed competent to fill regular situations, and the substitute oldest in continuous service shall have prior right in the filling of the first vacancy. This section shall apply to incoming as well as outgoing foremen. Provided, further, that the priority rights established herein shall apply to substitutes when employed by offices or members.

The president stated that the printers of the country had contributed about a million and a half dollars in the purchase of the Liberty bonds, and as far as I can learn Lincoln Union has placed about $6,000 in this enterprise. (It might be called an enterprise, for it is for the benefit and maintenance of this country and the whole world.)

HENRY ALLEN BRAINERD.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

Work was good the past summer, especially on the Morning Press, but is normal now, with plenty of men, except Saturday night. The Press chapel is made up of the following material: George Weber, foreman; J. M. Hammond, ads.; "Jerry" Sullivan (late of Riverside), E. D. Donaldson and L. J. Shanks, the latter three on the machines. Manuel ("Kid") Carrillo is working on the day shift.

No. 394 has three members serving their flag. They are Edward Espinoza, enlisted in the navy; Walter Stronich and A. F. Neil, in the California field artillery (the "Grizzlies"); Charley Cole in the ambulance corps. Carl Jensen went with the first draft to American Lake; also Marshall Selover, of the editorial staff, enlisted in the navy and is now a yeoman.

A. H. Holland, who for the past six months has been president of No. 394, has taken out his card and left for Los Angeles. Leo J. Shanks is now holding down the job, being elected at the last meeting. Frank Morley, our secretary, recently spent a week at Bakersfield. Dave Hammond is adding a new machine to his plant. Clinton J. Smith is now running the Carpenteria News, and we are glad to say it looks like a regular newspaper.

H. L. Erwin, who for twenty years has been connected with the Morning Press, has left us, and members of the union speak with a smile when they say that Frank M. Selover is now manager. He has nothing but friends in the composing room and every man is trying to do his best to help him in his present undertaking, which we know will be a success. He has been editor of the paper for a number of years and has always shown cool judgment, and is familiar with each department.

F. C. Huebner and W. G. Brown passed through Santa Barbara en route to Los Angeles, having been on a tour of California in Huebner's "tinlizzie."

J. M. HAMMOND.

PASSAIC, N. J.

"Nap" Bourgeois has been elected recording secretary to succeed J. Nealy Ernest, who is now holding down a Merg. in Paterson.

Messrs. Jenkins, Gott and Cheethan were elected delegates to represent Passaic at the quarterly convention of the New Jersey State Printers' League, held at Newark, N. J., on October 28.

At the last meeting Passaic Union voted to subscribe for its second Liberty bond, and its members individually subscribed for over $3,000 worth.

Harold B. Lord, of the Herald, has taken out a traveler and gone to New York. John Pedrick, of New York, deposited his traveler and is working at the Polish Sokal office. GEORGE W. RASP.

ALLENTOWN, PA.

This local, with a membership of fifty, has lain dormant for some time, but it seems to be waking up somewhat and the future looks rosy and promising. All members are working steadily and quite a bit of overtime is being put in.

Lewis Abel, of Harrisburg, has deposited his card and intends to remain here.

Local shops are reaping a harvest from the presence in this city of the concentration camp of the United States army ambulance service. Between five and six thousand men are quartered here, the majority of them college men. Besides a weekly paper with a circulation of 2,500, carrying the label, all sorts of job work, such as theatrical and glee club programs, etc., are at all times being ordered, the bulk of which goes to the label shops.

Miss Fincher was here for a few days last month. She is touring the country and working her way by operating linotypes in each town. From here she was headed for Harrisburg. A traveling woman printer is a novelty in these parts.

The draft has not hit No. 534 very hard, but one member, Frank Haas, having been drawn up to this time, but quite a few are on the list for future examination.

ROY D. SHERRY.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Following up the victory of the newspaper workers in securing a handsome increase, the jobmen have concluded negotiations for a new scale of wages by adding $2 a week to the sum paid floormen and $1 a week to the earnings of machine men. George F. Middendorf, vice-president of No. 10, and Julius Sagalowsky, foreman at Jobson's, represented the union, and C. C. Ousley and Edward Gottschalk represented the employers in the arbitration proceedings, which were terminated by the four original arbitrators, much to the satisfaction of both sides.

Charles Borntraeger, who assisted Fred Roth as machinist at the Evening Post, is now at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis. He enlisted in June and was called in September. Charles is the second to join the colors from the Post chapel. The first was Harry Hopkins, who enlisted in the navy.

Fred A. White has returned to Louisville from an extended trip to Cuba, New England and Canada. He speaks glowingly of printers he met during his trip and says he was especially delighted with the treatment he received from the boys in the city of Boston, Mass., where he states he was treated in royal style. Fred says he was extremely lucky in obtaining work and did not have to pass his card during his long trip.

Louis Heitz, son of Fred Heitz, oldtimer on the Evening Post, is among those present at Camp Zachary Taylor in the service of Uncle Sam.

Mrs. Alma Cone and Miss Margaret Haney, both excellent operators of the monotype, have joined the Herald's efficient force.

By the authority of the war department, the Courier-Journal is now issuing a Camp Zachary Taylor edition for the soldiers, the first number of which made its appearance at the cantonment Sunday, October 7.

Frank Fahey was called into service, but after a short stay at the camp was exempted.

The Courier-Journal and Times companies have offered prizes of $10 and $5 to employes for the best advertising slogan. Considerable competition has been aroused.

The Times want ads bowling team has tied for first place in the Commercial League.

John N. Rees, foreman of the Evening Post, recently made a trip to Washington and Annapolis, where he has two sons in the naval academy. He was accompanied by Mrs. Rees.

Leon Schmelzer, who is a very popular member of No. 10, is suffering with pulmonary trouble. His case has been brought to the attention of the union.

Ed Dean, well known to many oldtimers in Indianapolis, Chicago, and elsewhere, who recently gave up his situation as proofreader on the Courier-Journal, writes to friends in Louisville from Portland, Ore., describing his trip through the west, where he is seeing all the points of interest.

Joe Barrett, of the Herald, writes from Greensboro, N. C., where he is visiting, that the Boches have captured an outpost of his lungs and that his physician declares him a candidate for the Home. True to his generous nature he belittles his affliction in a light and cheery vein of comment.

CLELL G. FOWLER.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Work is fairly good at this writing, with plenty of subs, although for the past two months there has been a great demand for operators.

Louie Michaels, formerly a member of the Fruit Grower chapel, has gone to Kansas City.

J. E. Murphy, one of our old members, had the misfortune to lose one of his sons by death on October 4.

Charlie Deacon came to town and sold a No. 9 and 18 linotype to the News-Press and also one to the Gazette several weeks ago, and from all indications there are several more holes that he will fall into ere long.

The following members have been appointed to constitute a committee to negotiate a new job scale: Ed Taylor, M. L. Brown and A. E. Orton.

There is a movement on foot to hold a ball this year, the proceeds to be used to send delegates to Oklahoma City to the conference meeting in January.

If all the members of Oklahoma City Union are of the same caliber that the writer has met, the members who attend as delegates will be well taken care of in the way of entertainment

M. WALTER HABERT.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Miss Clara Sauerwein, formerly proofreader of the News chapel, has accepted a position as copyholder in the state printing department. George Hoole, of the Register job chapel, returned from Oshkosh, Wis., where he and his new bride spent a week visiting relatives. H. C. Maddox, of Alton, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois Typographical Union, spent several days in Springfield on business in connection with the state organization. George P. Lischer and R. E. Woodmansee represented No. 177 at the state typographical meeting in Joliet.

In the rearrangement of the housing of the departments of the statehouse, the superintendent of printing and its various departments have been moved to the fifth floor of the capitol building, where the boys have an opportunity of getting plenty of fresh air. Superintendent Williamson's office is now No. 30, and it is quite a joke among the employes that the superintendent, who is a member of Typographical Union No. 177, should be given "30." However, those on the outside will find that Superintendent Williamson is the livest corpse in the big building.

Ralph Guymon, of the Guymon Printing Company, has moved his printing office from South Sixth street to 727 East Adams street, where he had larger and more commodious quarters for his plant, and is giving employment to more men.

Rose & Weis Printing Company is the name of a new job office, which opened for business recently on South Fourth street, in the DeWitt Smith building. Mr. Rose was formerly connected with the state printing department.

R. E. WOODMANSEE.

LA CROSSE, WIS.

The attendance at the October meeting improved by a few more members than the previous meeting. A great many more would do no harm, but at the same time it would do good to some of the members. Come up and get acquainted.

Work in the different shops has improved somewhat, but is far from needing to employ any extra help.

The Labor day picnics which have been given by the La Crosse Trades and Labor Council have been so conducted as to raise the ire of La Crosse printers. Suggestions and a resolution were presented at the last two meetings requesting the printers not to participate in the Labor day festivities unless a picnic is held in a different manner, but after discussion the matter was laid over to a future date.

John Eddy, of the Serres & Eddy Typesetting Company, has again left town. This time he joined the engineers' corps of the United States army and at present is stationed at St. Louis.

Charlie Thompson, who has been in Duluth, Minn., for some time, called on old-time friends here during the month. He says this is the first visit in eleven years that he has been in La Crosse. He has taken a leave of absence from work but says he will not return to Duluth. He wants to be one of those printers who are to go to France and has made application for a place.

Gustave Nolzahn has accepted a position as operator at the Tribune and Leader-Press office. He was formerly employed at the Nordstern office.

Active steps were taken at the last meeting to start an allied trades council in this city. The council will be composed of the pressmen and printers, and President Hoelzer, of the printers, has appointed John Janskey, William Kiefer and the chair as delegates to the council to draw up the by-laws and constitution and do all other work in connection with the organization.

Carl Prinz has taken out a traveling card from this local and reports say he has accepted a position as operator with a Racine (Wis.) newspaper.

HENRY J. HOELZER.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of No. 305 was held Tuesday evening, October 9. Two new members were elected, one being an apprentice, and one apprentice application received. Three former members of No. 305 deposited travelers—Fred Hilliker and Charles W. Wiltsie, who are now employed at the American office, and William Fulton. It was voted to hold a smoker and "Dutch" supper at the November meeting. The committee in charge is composed of Fred W. Borath and Fred Wehrle. Every member is urged to be at the next meeting and answer present at roll call.

The Herald, of Beacon, N. Y., now carries the "little joker." Beacon is under the jurisdiction of No. 305. During the past month a committee, composed of Vice-President J. H. McCausland and Thomas Carrigan, interviewed the owner, Mrs. K. H. Donaghue, in regard to unionizing the shop, and was successful in having the contract signed. The scale of No. 305 will expire October 1, 1919, being a five-year contract, which became effective October 1, 1914. The scale is a graduating one. Machine operators receive an increase of $2 in two years, making the scale $21; hand compositors an increase of $3 for three years, making the scale $20; machinist-operators receive $24 per week.

Two men were brought into the union from the Herald office. Both daily papers of Beacon are now run under union conditions, the other being the Journal. A weekly paper, the Standard, is non-union. Mrs. Donaghue has charge of the Herald since the death of Mr. Donaghue.

MILTON K. BARRUS.

ITHACA, N. Y.

Thanks to a live president and scale committee, the printers of Ithaca are now working under a new wage agreement, of which we are not ashamed. At the last meeting of No. 379 the union approved of a new scale contract calling for $4 a week increase for the handmen and $3 for the operators, making a flat scale all around, with another dollar increase next year. This contract was signed up without any great difficulty, and already the employers are paying over the scale to a majority of the men in the city.

Ithaca has been doing some missionary work in this district recently. We are so filled with enthusiasm that we have to spread some of it around to the neighboring unions. Through the efforts of No. 379 a union has been formed in Geneva and a delegation was sent from this city to visit them in their first meeting. President McCray, George Rundle and C. C. Testerman made the trip, and from reports received here they helped the new union in getting off on the right foot. A couple of weeks later a delegation visited Auburn and reported a pleasant meeting with the members in that city.

The problem of attendance at union meetings seems to have been solved in Ithaca. With an average of 75 per cent attendance, the meetings are growing in interest each month. The real reason of this good attendance is "Pop" Nevins' social club, started over a year ago. After the regular meeting the social club meets and refreshments, liquid and otherwise, are served by a committee appointed each month. The 25-cent rebate for attendance at union meeting is turned over to the social club and every one has a good time. At these social sessions any topic may be discussed except the war and the world's series.

Never has there been such a scarcity of printers in this section as in the past few weeks. At one time three or four situations were open and employers were scouring the country for help. At present all places are filled, but there are no subs in town.

We are all glad to have the convention come to Scranton next year and we will be there in force. Begin now to make plans to visit Ithaca on your way to or from the convention in 1918.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The printing industry in this city has experienced a wonderful "revival of form," and it reminds one to some extent of the good old days when an employe, dissatisfied with conditions in one office, could walk across the street or around the corner and secure another situation or all the work he wanted.

Recently the Associated Press operator on the Gazette got a call from Galveston, Texas, to send them some operators. Shreveport, Dallas, Beaumont, San Antonio, Oklahoma City and Fort Smith all "butted in" on the wire, saying send operators their way also. However, there was no one to send, there being plenty of work for those here.

The new afternoon daily, the Little Rock News, made its appearance a few weeks ago, and is a very creditable-looking sheet. It gives employment to four of our members, two machine situations and two on the floor. T. J. Webster, for several years of the Gazette ad force, is foreman.

The Democrat Printing and Lithographing Company has installed a model 14 and a model 18 linotype to replace two older models, and will shortly add another machine to its equipment.

A model 14 and a model K linotype have just been installed in the plant of the Little Rock Democrat (newspaper), replacing older models. One of the machines displaced by the new models is model 1, No. 206, which was installed in the Democrat plant in 1892—twenty-five years ago. M. H. Guthrie, formerly machinist on the Gazette and now one of the Mergenthaler service men, erected the machines.

John Pruniski and Mike Siepela, both members of No. 92, have launched the North Little Rock Times, a small daily, and are meeting with much success. Ray Kesterson is doing the keyboard stunt.

At the October meeting a proposition was adopted to levy an assessment of $1 per month against each member for three months to assist the striking waiters and waitresses and the telephone operators, who have been locked out by the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company. The telephone girls will receive 90 per cent of the amount realized and the waiters and waitresses 10 per cent.

and one of our most popular members, has been admitted to the Union Printers Home.

The officers of No. 92 have recently signed arbitration agreements with both the Gazette and Democrat.

The 1918 meeting of the National Editorial Association will be held in Arkansas June 3-8, the sessions to be divided between the cities of Little Rock and Hot Springs.

T. A. Wilson, L. S. French and G. S. Lucas have been appointed a committee to draft a letter to the other typographical unions in Arkansas with a view of forming a state conference.

Arrivals: S. A. McIntosh, Thomas Deaton, A. C. Quarles, W. M. Johnson, Florence Brook, H. B. Hendrick, John Bennett, R. J. Milligan, P. W. Redding, M. H. Melanar. Departures: S. A. McIntosh, John Bennett, Tom Hartley, P. J. Redding. G. S. Lucas.

MEDICINE HAT, ALBERTA.

James Thomson, formerly of the Hat, drew a traveler from Winnipeg Union, and is now holding down a keyboard on the Swift Current Sun. George Riley, who for some time was a member of No. 451, has been located at last. He is over in the trenches. George Bisson, president of Medicine Hat Union, has been spending a few weeks' vacation on the other side of the line. He took in some of the Chicago-New York world's series games. Billy Burgess' prize-winning poodle was run over by an automobile and killed on Thanksgiving day. It sort of took the spirit of thanksgiving away from William. Secretary Bellamy represented Medicine Hat Trades and Labor Council at the trades and labor congress convention at Ottawa. Medicine Hat district has been experiencing the most beautiful fall weather in years.

No. 451 is negotiating a new scale, and the members are asking for a minimum of $27 flat for day work. The old scale expired on October 31. B. W. Bellamy.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Business fair, with about enough men to take care of it comfortably.

Since our last letter two members of the Toof & Co. chapel, Messrs. Gerard and Arnold, have each had a sad bereavement in the loss of a son. Both deaths were from diphtheria.

Guy B. Dawes, who went to Denver about a year ago for his health, having contracted tuberculosis, is again in a serious condition. This is a shock to his many friends here, as his health had improved very much during the first few months of his stay there.

Eugene Smith, who enlisted in Battery A here, which unit has since become a part of the 115th battalion of artillery, has been promoted to corporal. This was not altogether unexpected to those who knew him, as 'Gene is a boy with "get there" in him.

October 1 marked the end of the second year of the operation of our sick relief fund. During that time $1,000 has been paid in benefits. The cost of administrating the fund has been almost nothing, the assessments required have been practically no burden to the membership, and it has been the means of doing great good. We would not think of going back to the old "pass-the-hat" days.

LEWISTON, ME.

The October meeting of No. 532 was well attended. Members are taking more interest. Many local matters were freely discussed by all. Resolutions of condolence on the death of our late member, Emanuel Vachon, were passed and an engrossed copy ordered sent to the parents of the deceased. Two new candidates were initiated. By request of Representative Dallas the organization campaign was extended to December 31, 1917, and a circular to that effect was sent to all non-union printers in the jurisdiction of No. 532, also a copy of the new law relating to age and initiation fees passed at the Colorado Springs convention. A beautiful picture of the Home, received a short time ago, was ordered framed and hung in the meeting hall. The charter was ordered draped for one month in memory of Emanuel Vachon. We expect Representative Dallas to be with us at our next meeting. The women members are contemplating providing refreshments and entertainment next meeting night as an inducement to bring the members out. J. T. Morrissey.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.

The imp of restlessness seems to have stirred up this peaceful nest of No. 449 lately. One of those to catch the infection was "Dave" Smith (and he is no fledgling, either), who is now making up the Morning Albertan instead of the Herald; then Fred Vettleson, in charge of the News-Telegram's ad alley, flitted to the Albertan; H. P. Smith, after a long spell at the Western Standard, trekked to McAra's, where, by the way, we hear a three-decker linotype is going in as well; W. Banks felt a tug back to his old stand, the Avenue Press; Sergt. Joe Atherton, who has been reading on the News-Telegram, has received an appointment in connection with the military tribunals.

Oldtimers joyfully welcomed the evergreen veteran, "Dad" Stevens, D. C. M., who paid Calgary a visit recently. He is on furlough from the battle front and is looking better than ever. He enlisted in the Fifty-first at Edmonton, being afterward transferred to the Fifteenth "Kilties," and he makes a braw Scottie, his D. C. M. being conclusive evidence of the fact. The boys are proud of him.

The calling up of the first class under the military service act has affected our ranks but little. We made a good showing under the voluntary system, keeping thirty members in good standing. Five have been killed in action, and the number of wounded grows. These come drifting back at intervals, one of the last to arrive being I. W. Rogers, who has started in at the Quick Print.

Secretary White has returned from his vacation and has had to run the gantlet of pointed reference to his somewhat less "attenuated" appearance and endure expressions of sympathy with the dining-car staff of the train. Freddie attended the Ottawa labor conference, and he reports some very useful work accomplished. There was a consensus of opinion that the formation of an independent labor party is essential—something on the lines of a soldiers and workmen's council—to deal with conditions which would arise after the war, when the professional politicians would likely endeavor to drive a wedge between labor and returned soldiers.

F. H. Newnham, who was appointed our correspondent, and whose departure from town caused yours truly to be enmeshed in the toils of "literary" effort, has returned. Another arrival is E. G. Quick, who has left his farm, which has suffered from a dry spell.

Cards received: A. C. Doyle, P. T. Redsdale, J. L. Pepper, W. J. Whitehouse, J. S. Harnett, E. G. Quick, I. W. Rogers, F. H. Newnham. Departures: C. E. Jeffries, A. C. Doyle, G. J. Marshall, W. J. Whitehouse, L. T. Olson, A. J. Bessette, H. Harker, A. R. Shields, D. Fairfull.

Typographical Union No. 770 held a special meeting Sunday, September 30, for the purpose of bidding farewell to the members of this organization who are to serve their country.

G. T. Winberg, president of the Minnesota State Federation of Typographical Unions, and also G. W. Deacon, secretary and treasurer of the federation and member of the executive board of the Labor Loyal Union, were present and took part in the exercises. W. M. Merchant presided at the meeting and made an address marked with fervid patriotism. The members of No. 770 who left October 5 with the local companies were: Herbert Liljequist, Henry Oberlander, Basil Bierce and Orin Hovig. Steve Burzinski, secretary and treasurer, will soon become a member of the national army.

STEVE BURZINSKI.

DANBURY, CONN.

The principal industry of Danbury is the making of fur-felt hats, and up to last spring the hat factories of this city, with one or two exceptions, employed only members of the United Hatters of North America. At that time the hatters struck in one of the largest factories, employing 1,000, to enforce a new wage scale. Three others of the largest shops later shut down, practically locking out the members of the hatters' unions. These factories have opened recently as "open" shops, and have the backing of the Manufacturers' Association of Connecticut. It is now openly declared to be the intention of the manufacturers, bankers and merchants to make Danbury an "open-shop" town. Such a condition would seriously affect the local typographical union—even threaten its existence. The 70,000 members of the International Typographical Union can materially assist No. 143 and organized labor in general by purchasing hats that bear the union label.

F. G. Capron, a charter member of No. 143, and for twenty-eight years employed on the Danbury News, took a traveling card recently and went to Newport News, Va. The News chapel presented a traveling bag to Mr. Capron, and the members expressed their regret on his departure. At the same time William Stark, who had been employed on the News for several years, and who was lately drafted, was presented a wrist watch.

WILLIAM J. CURRAN.

MOOSE JAW, SASK.

The bumper attendance at our October meeting was reminiscent of the boom days. It was a real eye-opener—in fine, a sight for the gods. There were young new faces intermingled with old familiar ones. Our worthy president smiled his satisfaction, everybody was in the best of spirits and the meeting went as merrily as the proverbial marriage bell. Mentioning "bell" reminds me that A. Bell Bennett's motion making the dues $1.25, with a rebate of 75 cents, just lost out on the three-fourths vote. Another of the brethren is trying his luck along practically the same line, his motion reading $1 with a rebate of 50 cents. Anyway, another colossal crowd is expected on the Elk campus on November 3.

The latest member of the Times mechanical staff is M. Morrissey, from Saskatoon, from which city H. Crooks also hails. The latter is on the River West news sheet.

No. 627 has accepted an invitation from the ladies to attend their inaugural social, to be held at Mr. Brown's residence on the south side. An enjoyable evening is anticipated. By the way, the ladies, with kindly thought, are sending little Christmas parcels to our gallant members in khaki now overseas. Willie Adair is now operating back of the lines as a full-fledged groom, including spurs and breeches. Said Willie is now enjoying comparative peace, being just out of reach of Krupp's kolossal krumps. He reports being in the "pink of condish."

Work is good.

HERBERT GRAY.

TULSA, OKLA.

One by one the employing printers are voluntarily raising the scale here. On October 1 the Democrat and Times and the Tulsa World began paying $2 per week above the scale. Most of the job shops are paying from $2 to $3 above.

There has not been an available machine sub in Tulsa for many days. Work for the floormen has not been quite so plentiful, but there is always a shortage of men the last of the week and there has been quite a bit of overtime marked up as a result.

Perhaps one reason that Tulsa does not keep some of the good men looking for a new location is the lack of comfortable, reasonably-priced living apartments. For instance: One of the Democrat and Times chapel members went house-hunting a short time ago. He found four rooms in an apartment house which suited his fancy. "The rooms suit me very well," he said. "How about the rent?" "We make that just as reasonable as possible," said the landlady, smiling. "Those rooms are only $90 per month." Of course, there are cheaper places and there are some that are higher. But this is Tulsa and these are war times; so remember that when you come to the "wonder city"—do not bring the whole family with you unless you bring your tent also. Several late comers here, not being able to find suitable places in which to live, have located their families in nearby towns, even as far as Muskogee (fifty miles distant) until arrangements can be made to secure homes here.

No. 403 has a few members who have been a little more venturesome than the rest, and have been rubbing up against the oil game. Rumor has it that John Hildebrandt, foreman of the Saturday Spectator, and O. B. Jones, of the Tulsa World chapel, have been fortunate enough to get in on some paying stuff. It is also stated that Orel Harper, of the Democrat and Times chapel, stands a fighting chance to get out of the printing business through the oil channel.

In the role of a lightning-change artist No. 403 is hard to beat. At the October meeting we had three presidents in less than ten minutes. Also three vice-presidents. Can you beat it? Here is the way it was done. President Hall resigned; Vice-President Hayes became president; H. W. Conway was elected vice-president; Hayes resigned as president; Conway became president, then Hayes was nominated for the office of vice-president, the office he had been forced from by Hall's resignation. Then L. R. Marston (better known as Louis) was nominated for the same office and when the smoke cleared away Louis had beaten all former records and was elected vice-president, which carries with it the chairmanship of the executive committee. And everybody is happy—that is, 'most everybody.

It's a fact that some people in Tulsa are preparing to get right on parliamentary proceedings if the booksellers of this city are to be believed. According to them, there is not a copy of Roberts' "Rules of Order" to be had. More than fifty copies have been sold in the last few weeks, and it is said most of that number was purchased by members of a certain craft which is a member of the allied printing trades council. We know it to be a fact that one printer could not buy, borrow, beg or steal one of the much-coveted books.

U. G. TUTTLE.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

The October meeting called out a very small house, so small that Fred Schmidt smothered his report on the success of the outing until he could get a bigger gallery. Probably most of the members thought they had done a big enough bit by attending the meetings while the scale question was up, and have gone back of the firing line to recuperate until financial affairs need their attention again. President Kinskey was absent, there being some rough spots to iron out in connection with the new union in Geneva and some likely prospects in Ithaca and Hornell. Vice-President Harty is still on the sick list, so Harry Herbert was the man at the wheel. Secretary McLaughlin's report from the allied trades council showed that there was a possibility of friction with three label houses over a new contract. A lawyer has acquired an interest in one of the firms and he is so alarmed over what "might" happen that he wants a contract that would give him an open shop. Well, he won't get it. Four new members were initiated and Henry Wulff, a member of Typographia No. 4, was endorsed for councilman at the coming election. Chairmen reported business as being good, and the chairman of the Courier reported that the chapel would buy a book for the union library, selection to be made by the chairman and librarian.

Speaking of the library, Bud Fisher has a book of photos of printers in divers parts of the country that he will contribute, and that should be of interest.

W. J. Conners, editor of the Courier, is spoken of as the man Uncle Sam wants to handle the transport end of his business in France. Uncle Sam can't get a better man, although the red tape department of the government is due for the jolt of its life. Mr. Conners has a lingua franca vocabulary that will be understood the world over.

There has been so much camouflage in the war news that the question of who's who in military matters is a hard one. Captain McMichael is away with the old Seventy-fourths, Lieutenant Kinskey has a depot assignment at the Sixty-fifth armory and is waiting for his commission, and Frank Parmlay is with the naval militia. Among those registered with the secretary are, either as volunteers or selects, Messrs. Barber, Blair, Kendall, Luksch and Lendrim. There are others who have been chosen but not called.

Deputy Public Printer Daniel V. Chisholm, accompanied by Congressman Van Dyke, Attorney Rausch, Miss Virginia Ford, daughter of the public printer, all of Washington, and Miss Rae Leventhal, of San Francisco, were callers on Charles S. Beilman, of the News chapel, recently, en route to their homes from the United Spanish War Veterans' encampment at Cleveland.

P. F. Nugent has put himself in the Billy Sunday class by brightening up the corner where the flat linotype galleys are. He has put on a slug-tripper that really trips the slug and aids in the conservation of non-sectarian language.

The back pay received by newspaper men as a result of the delay in getting action on the scale amounted to about $10,000. It was nice to get the money, of course, but the precedent established has the future value of a Liberty bond.

W. P. Kilcawley has resigned as business manager of the Union and Times and is now publishing a labor paper called the Square Deal.

The state convention of the Universalist church and the world series coming in the same week in New York, made it handy for Charley Mix, who goes Billy Sunday one better, and believes in both forms of sport.

The "Proceedings of the First Industrial Safety Congress of New York State," held in Syracuse last December, is as interesting as a "best seller."

Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, was in Buffalo last month making arrangements for the coming convention.

John Schweigert has been dangerously ill at the Columbus hospital. An operation for appendicitis had been deferred too long, with serious results.

The absorption of the American Press Association by the Western Newspaper Union will make no change in the local plant of the American Press Association.

Daniel P. Horan, who has made his home in Buffalo the last few years, drew his card in October, with the intention of going to New York.

HUGH WALLACE.

BOISE, IDAHO.

In a measure of pleasure mixed with regret we make known the name of Elijah F. Caton as a member of the new Idaho Industrial Accident Board, which appointment was announced by the governor on October 4. Boise Typographical Union and the Idaho State Federation of Labor are losers, because when Mr. Caton assumes his new state duties on January 1, 1918, he will have left a gap in the ranks of organized labor that many a man may fail to fill. For six years continuously "Lige" Caton has efficiently filled the office of secretary-treasurer for No. 271, and just as efficiently has he piloted the Idaho State Federation of Labor, in the capacity of president, since its birth in Boise nearly two years ago. However, the whole people of the Gem state will profit by our immediate loss, and Governor Moses Alexander is to be congratulated upon his wise selection. We believe he has used good judgment in choosing the entire personnel of the Industrial Accident Board, but indeed wisely did he act in the selection of "Lige" Caton, who worked long and diligently to have a workmen's compensation law placed upon our statute books, and whose efforts were finally crowned with success during the last session of the legislature, and who is the first and major choice of organized labor for the position. "Lige" Caton is honest, and we bespeak for him—and for the industrial accident board with "Lige" as a member thereof—nothing less than complete success.

During the October meeting of No. 271, Mr. Caton resigned the secretary-treasurership which he has held so long, and Charles S. Bickley was unanimously elected to and installed in that office. A more worthy and efficient successor to Mr. Caton could not have been named. Mr. Bickley entered upon his new duties pronto.

Delegate R. H. Park, who rendered a comprehensive and interesting report of the Colorado Springs convention, has incorporated the same in an eight-page printed pamphlet, from which we clip the following bit of news: "At the Home I met Fred M. Judson, Fred Zeidler and Charles Maskrey, all former members of Boise Union, now residents of the Home. Maskrey is one of the few known surviving charter members of No. 271 and was sent to the Home from North Yakima."

Fred L. Allen, of the Statesman chapel, while imbibing freely of fresh air (nothing more) from the vantage point of his moving motorcycle on September 9, came out loser in a violent encounter with an also-moving flivver, since which time (a matter of four weeks) Mr. Allen has been "laying off" from his accustomed duties and "lying in" a plaster cast, for he sustained a double fracture of a collar bone and a badly bruised face and body.

George Brewster, one of the active members of No. 271, who for a number of years was connected with the Capital News chapel, departed September 10 for Portland, Ore., where he expects to make his future home. Pickin's must be rather slim in Portland, for the information comes to us that George is now employed on an Astoria sheet.

"An' it fell when sirris-shaws were sere,
An' the nichts were lang an' mirk,
In braw new breeks, wi' a gowden ring,
Oor Jockie gaed to the kirk."—Kipling.

But we did na ken that our own John T. Hawkes, morning Statesman machinist, was "fallin', fallin' fra' the band o' cantie single men"—we knew it not until he returned the first of October from a two-weeks' sojourn and honeymoon in Vancouver and Victoria, B. C. The fortunate lady is a Vancouver girl. She acquired the name of Mrs. John T. Hawkes on September 19. And, by the way, John T. himself says it costs $5 for a license to bequeath one's name in British Columbia.

Boise Typographical Union is well represented in Uncle Sam's army. Dan Banks, Hoyt I. Compton, Albert Jefferson and Otto Zimmer are now in training at Charlotte, N. C., with traveling cards in their possession which will be kept paid up by No. 271 during the war.

Jim Lewis has gone to Pendleton. A. W. Merrick and Roy Smith are recent arrivals from that place, and they both fell into situations on the Capital News. Harry Ball is an arrival from Seattle. Ralph York has returned to school at Moscow, and his position has been taken by Charles S. Bickley.

W. A. Korts, foreman of the Statesman job-rooms, has returned from an extended "camping-out" trip in Montana, "brown as a berry and fit as a fiddle."

Opr. O'Hare—"I'll get insured when I get a wife; not before."

Insurance Agent—"But listen, O'Hare, you may die of something else before you do."

LAWRENCE O. NICHOLS.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

The October meeting of the local union proved one of the liveliest for several months. Two applications for membership were received. It was voted to purchase one of the new issue of the Liberty bonds. It was reported that about $1,000 was subscribed by the members of No. 152 to the first issue of the Liberty bonds. Representative Dart, of the pressmen's union, was given the privilege of the floor and made a very earnest plea in behalf of the allied label. It was voted to appoint a committee to confer with a committee from the pressmen in the matter.

There is quite a little interest manifested in the letter from headquarters in regard to positions in the army open to printers.

Leon Sargent, who has been idle for several months, has so far recovered his health as to be able to return to work again, and is now employed at the Rapid Mailing Bureau.

P. Francis Storm, one of our fourth-year apprentices, is about to take up the I. T. U. correspondence course.

Secretary-Treasurer Senter and wife have returned from their annual vacation. T. J. Fellows, assistant night foreman of the Union-Leader, is on his vacation, and among other pleasures is enjoying a trip down on "Quaint Cape Cod," in Massachusetts.

FRED T. IRWIN.

BANGOR, ME.

North Adams and the Mohawk trail—1918.

Organized labor in Maine has never been very strong, and Bangor has had few and weak organizations. Within the past couple of years there has been an awakening and results have been gratifying. The central labor union is more active and influential than ever before, the local cigar makers' union having contributed most toward this desirable improvement. The printers are now showing some of the energy and ability which have brought success in other cities, and their example will encourage others.

The organization campaign recently started here has shown results which were surprising. Despite the pessimism exhibited by members, we now have more members in the Commercial office than ever before, and several others are about ready to join. A rumor that the management would discharge any employe who joined was emphatically disproved when one who became a member immediately notified the management, stating why he believed such a move was to his advantage. This member is still employed and the relations with the management are unchanged. The campaign committee has fully realized the size of its job and is pleased at results, as it did not expect to make much impression at first. It will continue to illustrate the truth of the saying that "the typographical union never lets go."

Two former members of Bangor Typographical Union have entered the army service at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. Herbert S. Rand entered from the government printing office in Washington, and Joseph W. Sickles from the Daily Mercury, New Bedford, Mass. Both learned the trade in the office of the Bangor Daily News.

Business here is fairly good on both ends of the business, and all members of the union are employed.

Vocational training in the public schools of Maine is receiving attention in the press. The trade unions will watch developments with a view to protecting their interests.

The old school of journalism, to which the state of Maine has contributed many illustrious newspapermen, is well represented here by Lawrence T. Smyth, editor of the Daily News. His newspaper experience has been long and varied, and he is an encyclopedia on most subjects. His similes are famous. He says capital is a man on horseback; labor, men on foot. The horseman can easily ride down individuals on foot, but when they mass together the horseman can not force his way through. Many prominent newspaper men owe their success to training under the eye of Mr. Smyth.

Liberty bonds to the amount of $1,100 have been purchased by members of this union at the time of this writing.

The organization committee is composed of Secretary Elmer E. Roberts, Charles G. Johnson, Frank E. Connor, Martin J. Burke and John F. O'Leary. The work is under the direction of Representative Dallas.

As there are but five typographical unions in Maine, we are naturally very much interested in each other's progress. Portland always has letters in THE JOURNAL, and Lewiston has been doing well lately. We want to hear from Waterville and Augusta. Surely they can send in a few lines each month. JOHN F. O'LEARY.

DULUTH, MINN.

Two new members and one apprentice member were obligated at the October meeting of No. 136.

Delegate Reeves reported his experiences and impressions of the convention at the "Home city" to a good-sized audience of members.

The proposed changes in the laws as submitted to the referendum of the membership by the convention came in for much discussion and was finally settled by the union going on record as being opposed to passage of three of the propositions, viz.: increase in the officers' salaries, increase of 10 cents in the International dues, and to the requirement of 150 petitioning unions to invoke a referendum of the membership on a proposition. The fact that two changes in one section of the law were embodied in one question was pointed out, and that a member who might favor one change and be opposed to the other, would if he voted be forced to vote against his convictions in one respect.

George W. Glenn, delegate to the allied printing trades council from No. 136, was elected secretary-treasurer of that body and William E. Towne was elected president. Much interest is being evidenced in the meetings of the council, full delegations being present at the sessions and the work of promoting label propaganda being placed well under way.

Bennett Brothers Typesetting Company sold out its interests to the Duluth News-Tribune, and the machine was installed in the composing room of that paper.

Articles of incorporation of the Wendtlandt Printing Company appeared in the daily publications recently. Large printing interests in the Twin Cities are backing the new company. The officers of No. 136 are using every effort to secure signed agreements and make another label shop here.

Both newspapers are installing new machines and placing electric pots upon some of the old ones. These appliances are very much welcomed by the operators.

Work in both branches of the trade continues good and steady, with all members working forty-eight hours and better. WILLIAM E. TOWNE.

WESTERN CANADA CONFERENCE.

Saskatoon Union lost one of its most energetic workers when Michael Morrissey left for Moose Jaw to accept a situation on the Times.

Moose Jaw reports trade as good. The membership has increased to thirty-nine. No subs are reported.

The women at Medicine Hat held a concert on Sunday evening, October 14, to raise funds to purchase comforts for members of No. 451 at the front. Doctor Boyd presided, and addresses, orchestral, vocal and other music, rounded out a splendid program.

The prevailing opinion in Western Canada seems to be that, while plan B (referendum proposition relating to protection of members enlisted) is a commendable policy to pursue, that provision should have been included to reimburse Canadian unions to at least some extent for the large financial burden carried by them for the past three years in keeping their members in good standing. A feature that may affect the vote in Canada is that some unions have previously used the general funds of the union for this work, while in other unions special levies were made, in some cases running well onto the dollar mark per head monthly.

The conference secretary was a delegate to the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress convention in Ottawa, and three resolutions which he presented were adopted: Instructing the congress executive to take up with the National Council of Women the matter of the union label and the position of organized labor in its relationship with the council. This resolution was presented as a result of the recent convention of women in Winnipeg, which has been commented upon in THE JOURNAL's editorial columns, and at which convention, upon efforts being made to have the union label placed on printed matter, misleading statements were responsible for the shelving of the proposition.

Another resolution calls upon the congress executive to collect data from all centers in Canada where union-made wearing apparel is manufactured and to at least once a year issue and forward to all affiliated bodies lists containing the names and addresses of manufacturers of said union-made goods.

The third resolution is in line with one adopted by the conference at the Regina convention, criticizing the methods adopted through patriotic funds of providing for the sustenance of soldiers' dependents, and demanding that sufficient allowance be made by the government to soldiers' families to eliminate the necessity of such a fund. In the meantime, however, the congress pledged itself to support the fund until such time as the government assumed the financial obligations.

total representation of fifteen members of the International Typographical Union, which included four from Ottawa besides the International delegate, the west had five delegates on hand: F. J. White (Calgary), W. R. Trotter (Vancouver), B. W. Bellamy (Medicine Hat), H. W. Falconer (Moose Jaw), William McCormick (Winnipeg), and T. M. Molloy, of Regina, was also present.

Vice-Presidents White and Falconer and the secretary, while in Ottawa, conferred with President Doughty (Guelph), president of the Ontario Conference of Typographical Unions, G. Francq (Montreal Union), Aicheson (Hamilton Union), Hadden (Toronto Union) and others. The conference secretary spoke at a smoker given by Ottawa Union, spent a couple of days on a trip to Peterboro, where he took up conference matters with George H. Myland, secretary of the Ontario conference; conferred with the officers of Fort William and Port Arthur Unions en route to the west, and addressed Winnipeg Union.

Fort William has affiliated with the Western Canada Conference and the secretary has been assured that Port Arthur will immediately affiliate. This gives the conference a total affiliation of thirteen locals, an addition of four during the past year.

Saskatoon, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Fort William and Port Arthur Unions are in the throes of scale negotiations, and Swift Current's scale expires in a few weeks.

Edmonton local has increased local dues from 2½ to 3 per cent, wtih a rebate of 75 cents for attendance at meetings.

D. K. Knott, president of both the Western Canada Conference and Edmonton Union, is being urged to become a candidate for the city council, but feels he has too many irons in the fire.

Edmonton reports 107 members, with seven subs, averaging forty hours.

Bow to the Drovers' Telegram chapel. After running for twenty-five years as non-union it was signed up last month, a contract secured and the entire force of nine men made members of this union. The members of this chapel could have been taken into the union many months ago, but the officers preferred to wait till the opportune time when a contract could be signed. The printers were given the obligation gradually, and when all were in, President Traylor and Secretary Duke called on the owner. They were told nothing doing and the publisher said he would continue employing a non-union force. A few days later a hurry call for the officers was sent in, and this time they were given the glad hand and the publisher signed the contract. The force at the Drover have been union men at heart for several years and only circumstances kept them out. They were introduced at the last meeting and received quite an ovation. An average of $4.50 per week raise was given the force.

The job scale committee reported at the last meeting and the report was adopted. Nearly all jobmen are now receiving more than the scale and an increase is expected.

Working conditions are better in Kansas City than for many years, both jobmen and newspaper printers getting good time.

Carl Reed Taylor, who was a delegate to Colorado Springs this year, has gone to St. Louis, where he will engage in welfare work. Mr. Taylor was rector of St. John's church here and did not work at the trade, but always took an active interest in this union. He was on several committees and rendered valuable service to No. 80. A purse of $50, given by members and the union, was given him before he left.

Frank Klunk, who was struck by a motor car several months ago, is now out of the hospital, but unable to work. F. L. Starks.

READING, PA.

This town of pretzels and beer, and other things too numerous to mention, is beginning to realize that eastern Pennsylvania will be on the map next August, when our coal-region neighbor, Scranton, entertains the 1918 convention. The ex-delegates of No. 86 have organized, with M. Luther Mason ("ex," Cleveland, 1912) at the helm. They expect to take good care of everybody who drifts through this way on the pilgrimage to Scranton. Now, let the band play, "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

Fire prevention day was observed on October 9. There were fire drills, lectures, etc., and an inspection of the city's fire-fighting apparatus on Penn square. Deputy Marshal M. Luther Mason was the prime mover in the affair. He had as his guests Chief Marshal G. Chal Port and other high officials of the department. He was highly commended for his endeavors. This is another instance where No. 86 can point with pride to the progressiveness of one of its members in another calling.

Miss C. P. Fincher deposited her card and worked in several of the offices. Miss Fincher attended the October meeting and expressed her appreciation of being among the "Pennsylvania Dutch." She is making a tour of the eastern part of the state. Although she is handicapped by being of the gentler sex, the boys all acknowledged that "mere man" has nothing to brag about when it comes to holding his own when she is about.

William Elbert, assistant make-up on the News-Times, resigned and left for Scranton. He is a partner in the Machine Composition Company, of that place.

Paul Petree and Floyd Fett received notice to hold themselves in readiness to depart for Camp Meade, Maryland. These are the first members of No. 86 to be drafted. Both are employed on the Telegram.

Harry Bright, Eagle jobroom, and John Laufersweiler are both incapacitated by grippe.

President High was absent at our last meeting. This was the first time since the Nashville convention. Vice-President Mason ably filled the bill.

The boys on the Eagle feel highly flattered. They have been asked for individual photographs to be used in the fiftieth anniversary edition next January.

There are five candidates for delegate to the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union, namely, Mason, Diehl, Marcks, Wright and Sherman. Three to be elected at the next meeting. Oh, you politicians!

Bowling enthusiasts are limbering up with the advent of cool weather. Quite a few of our members are some "pippins" in this indoor sport.

The election results in this town were rather disappointing on the second proposition. I would like to know the idea of a man with stanch union principles voting to deny an increase to our International officers, handling the business of over 750 locals, having a membership of almost 70,000 members, handling funds totaling over a million dollars in a year, and then expecting them to serve at a salary less than what the superintendents of some composing rooms are getting today. Furthermore, when these same men are expecting a raise in scale, they are the biggest kickers when the increase is not up to their expectation. Maybe these members took President Scott's letter in the October JOURNAL as their basis for voting. President Scott deserves credit for the brief manner in which he passed over that second proposition, but printers might have given the proposition a little thought, notwithstanding his views.

Scranton, 1918; Albany, 1919; somewhere in Texas, 1920; Roanoke, 1939; the visiting convention, forever and a day.

Roanoke Typographical Union No. 60 held its annual election of officers at the regular October meeting. All were re-elected, except A. Ross Taylor, who succeeds C. S. Gookin as vice-president, and C. J. Bennett, who succeeds R. J. Britt, who has joined Uncle Sam's army.

No. 60 has three members in the American army —R. J. Britt, C. S. Carlton and W. C. Anderson. Our oldest member, W. E. Nichols, is a member of the state district exemption board. No. 60 has also subscribed to the Liberty loan to the extent of $50.

No. 60 is adding new members to the roster at almost every meeting; some of these being members who "went out" in the unpleasantness of 1905.

N. N. Lazenby, who had been foreman on the Roanoke Times for more than two years, resigned the position last month to accept a position on one of the big dailies in Washington, D. C.

The Roanoke Times now has a battery of seven machines and is installing a new press. The plant will hereafter have two presses and will thus be prepared for any emergency.

Recent arrivals: R. W. Kendall, H. S. Speidel, J. D. Foote. Departures: N. N. Lazenby, Frank Sherman, F. C. Hubbard, W. R. Crockett.

BALTIMORE, MD.

According to the article in the Trades-Unionist of Saturday, October 13, President Thomas P. O'Rourke and the building trades council were "fighting mad" at the meeting of the council on Monday evening, October 8. If what President O'Rourke said is the fact, he has a just right to be mad. The attention of the council was called to this matter by a letter received from the allied printing trades council stating that the absence of the label on their Labor day program should not have occurred. President O'Rourke is taking the right step in trying to have the parties who sprung this "fake" program rounded up. If President O'Rourke will take a trip to Towson and make a few inquiries among the newspaper offices in that vicinity he might find out that the parties who had the program printed didn't even have the decency to have the linotype matter set up or the presswork done in Baltimore, where there is an abundance of union offices which could have done the work much better than it appears in the program. The composition and the presswork both seem to have been done in non-union offices. President O'Rourke seems to be quite right when he calls these parties who "faked" this program renegades, because it appears that there is a combination of men who try and secure the contract for every affair that comes off in the city by securing the rights for the program. This combination should be broken up and the sooner the better, not only for the allied printing trades council, which should co-operate in this matter, but for every convention and gathering that gets out a program. President O'Rourke should have the hearty co-operation of every union man in this city in his effort to round these fakers up. To show how sore President O'Rourke is he states that "he will take this matter up with the police, with the state's attorney and with the postal authorities, for I understand that some of their dishonest operations were carried on by mail, and they used the United States mail to defraud." He also proposes that the building trades council will not stand to be bilked in any way or allow its many friends to be victimized.

Lucas Brothers have printed a little booklet, which contains the words of all the latest "war songs," and 2,000 of these booklets have been sent Colonel Sweezey at Camp Meade. Colonel Sweezey has also been notified that there were more of the books in Baltimore and if he desired any more they were his. The boys at the camp appreciated this little gift on the part of the Lucas Brothers Company.

The following is the Evening Sun bowling league standing to October 11, 1917:

	Won.	Lost.	Pct.
Picas	5	1	.833
Minions	4	2	.667
Breviers	3	3	.500
Nonpareils	0	6	.000

High score, one game, Pattison, 115; high score, three games, Fries, 302; high team score, one game, Picas, 379; high team score, three games, Picas, 1,106.

P. Warren ("Pete") Rinker has been appointed assistant foreman of the adroom of the Morning Sun. A better selection could not have been made. Mr. Rinker is one of the best ad hands in the city, is liked by all who know him, and under these conditions Mr. Rinker's appointment should prove a big help to Joe Wildner, who has charge of that department.

The Evening News has purchased four more linotype machines—two new ones and two machines that have recently been rebuilt.

King Brothers, whose property on East Lexington street has been acquired by the city for the new civic center, have purchased the property at 208 North Calvert street, formerly occupied by the Evening World, and will move into their new quarters in a short while.

J. M. Matthews, formerly of the Evening Sun adroom, has been appointed sergeant of Company K, Fourth Maryland infantry, Anniston, Ala.

George R. Tydings, an old-time printer of Annapolis, who learned his trade in the office of the Maryland Republican when George Colton owned that paper, has just died at the age of 64 years.

Stuart Olivier, general manager of the News Publishing Company, met with a slight accident by the discharge of a pistol he was carrying in a holster, the bullet taking a downward course, going in above the right knee and coming out six or eight inches lower. He was removed to the Union Protestant infirmary. The most serious injury was to the controlling nerve governing the muscles and tendons, which nerve was shattered by the bullet.

Owing to the ill health of his wife, Edward G. Kamp, of the American chapel, has been compelled to resign his position as linotype operator. Mr. Kamp wishes to thank his many friends in Baltimore Typographical Union for their efforts in his behalf. In the hurry to get his wife away, he was unable to say farewell to his many friends, and takes this means of doing so. Mr. and Mrs. Kamp will reside in Asheville, N. C.

Vice-President Greenfield has given a decision that Baltimore is still working under the "sixty-day priority law." The vice-president gave his decision on the letter of President Scott, which appears in the January issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

The Monumental Printing Company, which has been located for some time in the Equitable building, has taken larger quarters in East Baltimore.

The Maryland Board of Public Works has held up the bid for state printing. Governor Harrington, when the bids were opened, showed he was very much dissatisfied with the working of the present system of giving out the big contract. He intimated that he would try and work out some other plan than the lump-sum bid. The original appropriation is $22,000. One of the bids opened called for the full sum appropriated. King Brothers, who have had the contract for the past two years, were the lowest bidders at $21,000. This year the firm bid $3,000 more than they did two years ago, which was $18,000. With the high cost of every article used by the printer this advance is very modest on the part of the printer, when you figure the high price of paper and printing materials. The governor, while admitting that he is not an expert, estimates that the items eliminated this year should total $5,000. The items eliminated are copies of the executive message and 9,000 copies of board reports. The governor believes that the price per page bid should prevail as the most satisfactory to all concerned.

Columbus Norman Steigelman, widely known in fraternal circles in Baltimore, dropped dead from heart failure on October 9. Mr. Steigelman was a printer, lawyer, fraternalist and philanthropist. In printing circles he was best known. He was a delegate to the Nashville convention of the International Typographical Union, secretary-treasurer under President William H. Stubbs (now with the Mergenthaler Linotype Company), a delegate to the local federation of labor, of which he drew the present constitution, and a member of the Evening Star chapel; in law he was a graduate of the University of Maryland; in fraternal circles he was a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, recorder of the state judiciary of that order, and was marshal of the order in the parade held during home-coming week some years ago; he was a director in the Skin and Cancer hospital of this city. Mr. Steigelman was a man who always fought for his convictions, whether it was for or against his friends, and his loss will be greatly felt in all the circles in which he mingled.

Lemuel C. Baldwin, of the Evening News chapel, died September 30, of paralysis, at his home, 2619 Guilford avenue. Interment was at Woodlawn cemetery, the Masonic rites being performed by Doric Lodge No. 124, A. F. and A. M. Mr. Baldwin was in the fifty-third year of his age. He was a member of Typographical Union No. 12 and a district superintendent of the federated charities.

Fred Thomas, chairman of the Evening Sun chapel, was elected president of the Public Athletic League walking club on October 3.

The Morning Sun and the Evening Sun both have duckpin leagues at the present time. The prizes offered in the Morning Sun league are as follows: First prize, $45; second, $40; third, $35; fourth, $30. The season will wind up on March 27. George Taylor is high man with 134. High team scores, Agates, 496.

The condition of Arthur L. Jackson, president of No. 12, is improving each day. Mr. Jackson is now able to sit up, and visitors are allowed to see and talk with him. WALTER H. MULES.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

In furnishing the readers of THE JOURNAL with a few items from Evansville it will probably be in order for me to start by saying it has been many years since this city has been represented in the columns of our official paper. Just why this should be has always been more or less a mystery. We have plenty of talent in No. 35, and quite a few of our members seem to enjoy breaking into print in the local press. In fact, so pronounced is this desire to stand in the limelight of public print recognition that in one of the news chapels in this city there is published occasionally a paper called "The Bull," which offers as the main excuse for its existence the desire on the part of its editors and contributors to furnish a medium for the expression of thoughts and opinions which otherwise might be forever lost to posterity. It also serves as the "tie that binds" this particular chapel together in a spirit of friendliness and good fellowship.

As to general printing conditions in the Pocket city, we have made great strides in the last decade. Ten years ago, when anti-unionism was on the rampage, not only here but all over the country, the typographical union suffered in the general condemnation by unthinking and unreasoning men. But today an entirely different atmosphere prevails. Through conservative leadership and the adoption of a liberal, broad-minded, progressive policy, many of those who in former times bitterly opposed our every effort, have been brought to realize that there is some good in a trade union properly conducted. Our union owns a membership in the chamber of commerce in this city, and regards it as one of our most valuable assets. This is largely the result of the very able representation given the union in that body by our delegate, W. J. Rogers. Mr. Rogers has the confidence of every member of No. 35, and is also fortunate in standing close to the men who do things in the chamber of commerce, which makes a combination that is bound to get results.

Harking back to the days of '91-'94, and on down the line, a few words at this time from an old Evansville printer may be appreciated by some of the veterans. A letter from George Naeter, now in Cape Girardeau, Mo., to a friend here says he is now, with his two brothers, owner of a nice newspaper plant in that city, still a bachelor, bald-headed and greatly interested in church work. Those of us who remember George during his stay in this city are quite ready to believe the bald-headed part of his story, but find it difficult to accept that church stuff. George has many warm friends here who will rejoice that he has been successful in his business ventures.

A recent visitor in the city was Ed Bessette, of

Chicago, he of the strenuous days of the 1906 eight-hour struggle. Fortune seems to have smiled on our old comrade of those trying times. Bessette was in "E-town" in the interest of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, and left here saying he was going to Richmond, Ind., to sell Karl Wolfe a Ludlow outfit.

There may have been some who were surprised when they read in the report of the recent convention at Colorado Springs that Delegate Mayer had placed Evansville in the running for the 1920 convention. If so, they are due for another shock. Evansville is going after the 1919 convention. At the October meeting of the local union, which was largely attended, a committee was appointed to organize a campaign to secure the convention for this city the year named. The personnel of this committee follows: W. J. Rogers, W. H. Byington, Henry Mayer, Charles Fitch, jr., Everett E. Moseley, George E. Ruddell and Charles F. Froelich. Excepting the writer, this committee is a bunch of live wires, and will "stay on the job" until the glad words of that joyous old refrain, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here!" shall ring through the corridors of the new coliseum in this the second city of our good old Hoosier state. More of this later.

In conclusion, as president of the Indiana State Conference of Typographical Unions, permit me to call the attention of Indiana printers to the fact that the next conference will be held in Columbus, Ind., Sunday, January 20, 1918. Matters of vital interest to the Indiana printing fraternity will be discussed, and our friends Creech and Aldredge have promised a royal good time. A representation from every union in the state would be a record, but we are hopeful that the importance of the business to be transacted will show a 100 per cent delegation. W. H. Byington.

LAWRENCE, MASS.

The label committee of No. 51 is getting ready for a steady drive this winter in favor of the little emblem, and will collect all matter not bearing the label, and, after putting a sticker on it, return it to the person having the printing done. Of course, the co-operation of the members of the union will be necessary, for they can help or hurt the project. Many are the instances where a customer is approached who has had printing done without a label, and the customer says he brought it to a union shop. The proprietor of the shop is approached, and he will inform the committee that the labels are there and the men should use them. So in some cases the member is to blame. Therefore, let the members do their part and it will make the work of the label committee much easier.

President Fred Medcalf, of No. 51, has resigned his job—in fact, surrendered his card, and taken a job on the Christian Science Monitor in Boston. The matter is being looked into by Lawrence and Boston Union authorities.

The new president, F. C. Hinckley, has made good as vice-president on several occasions and will undoubtedly make a good presiding officer. After installation a short program was given and refreshments served.

No. 51 has a new bowling team which is ready to grapple with any five in town. Its members are old stagers and can render a good account of themselves in any company.

Charlie Spear, for many years an employe of the Sun-American, has severed his connection with that firm to accept a position with the Telegram. The boys wished him success in his new position. He was very popular with the employers of the Sun-American, and while the boys were sorry to lose him, they were glad to know he was bettering himself. B. J. Keaveny.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

Knox Magee, the founder of the Winnipeg Saturday Post, has taken over the editorial chair of the Telegram. The Telegram is now sure to become more popular than ever.

With its issue of October 13, the Winnipeg Saturday Post ceased publication.

B. W. Bellamy, secretary of the Western Canada Conference of Typographical Unions, passed through Winnipeg during the month on his way from the convention of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress, and addressed the members of No. 191 at the monthly meeting. He was able to report the affiliation of Fort William and Port Arthur Unions with the Western Canada Conference. This gives the conference a total of thirteen affiliations—an addition of four during the past year. As thirteen is generally credited with being an unlucky number, it is up to the conference now to rope in another union.

William McCormick has arrived back safely from the convention of the Trades and Labor Congress at Ottawa and will report at the next monthly meeting. If B. W. Bellamy is to be taken seriously, it was owing to his loving care that Mac got back at all. Next year's congress goes to Quebec, Winnipeg being beaten out by a narrow margin. According to one of the returned delegates, Winnipeg's being a "dry" town was partly responsible for the victory of Quebec. If this was so, then the delegates have fooled themselves, because Quebec has since voted dry. Anyhow, Winnipeg is not quite so dry as some people seem to think.

The second annual edition of the Telegram Chapel News Christmas effusion will make its appearance early in December.

The Stovel Company is publishing an oveaseas edition of the Stovel House Journal, monthly, which is being mailed to the fifty members of the company now on active service. It is an interesting and chatty little journal, containing information about the boys at the front, and also of the boys and girls they left behind them, and must prove a veritable blessing to the boys in the trenches.

Two hundred dollars was subscribed by the Stovel Company management and employes toward a fund to set up in business in Moncton, N. B., his home town, A. P. Gaudette, a member of the Stovel chapel who was stricken with blindness. Subscription sheets were sent around by the union, and at time of writing were meeting with a generous response. The women staged a concert and dance in Travelers hall October 20, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the same purpose. Among the array of talent who were down to contribute to the evening's entertainment were: Ben Gilpin, J. K. Grant, Richard Pollock, R. J. Patterson, R. L. Smith, Walter Scott, George Leveque, W. C. Archer, B. Martin, Mrs. J. Richards, Mrs. G. Pingle, Mrs. A. Buchan, Mrs. C. Pratt, A. J. Williams, accompanist.

Arthur Moss has arrived back in the "Peg" after three years' strenuous life in the trenches in France. He enlisted in the 100th Grenadiers on the second day of the war, and left with the first Canadian contingent for England. His stay in England was short and he was soon in France, where for two years he was actively engaged until he was seriously wounded in the shoulder, the bullet tearing away part of the muscle of his left arm. However, Art is a hard man to kill, and he was soon back on duty. Shell shock put him back again in hospital. He was shipped back to England, where he received electric treatment, and was finally returned to Canada. His homecoming was celebrated at the home of Dave Hutchison, which was suitably decorated with the flags of the allies. Moss held machine situations at the Telegram, Free Press and De Montfort Press.

The ladies held a very successful whist drive and dance on September 22, the proceeds of which were donated toward helping to provide comforts for the members of the union on active service.

Bill Stevens, from Grand Forks, an old-time member of the Telegraph chapel, paid a flying visit to Winnipeg during the month. Bill will don the uniform shortly to fight for Uncle Sam.

Bert Martin, Public Press chapel, was presented with a handsome case of fish-knives and forks by the members of the chapel on the occasion of his being joined in the bonds of wedlock. Bert Quinton, the foreman of the composing room, made the presentation in a happy little speech.

Alex Argo, late of the Saturday Post, is now with the T. Eaton Company. J. Graw, also of the Post, is now with the Public Press. Frank E. Griffin, who was for eight years superintendent of the Winnipeg Telegram, has left for Bloomington, Ill. Lindsay Park has once more pulled his slip in the Free Press, and left for Vancouver, B. C. Bun Foley is now managing the Stag poolrooms.

TACOMA, WASH.

"Tacoma—the home of Uncle Sam's newest and largest cantonment—Camp Lewis, 70,000 acres."

It was reported at the last regular meeting that the contract for the printing of the Tahoma, the Stadium high school publication, has been placed in a union shop. The publication to be issued by the Lincoln high school students will also be printed in the same shop. The Tahoma has been the product of a non-union shop for several years, and the change is a direct result of work carried on by this union for several months and is very gratifying to the membership.

Following work done by officials of the union and after proceeding through the proper channels the jurisdiction of Tacoma Typographical Union No. 170 has been extended to the city of Kent, Wash., adding two more members to our list. In the acquisition of Kent and its membership this local has acquired two members, B. E. West and R. R. Rotter, the latter depositing an honorable withdrawal card, who realize full well the advantage of craft organization. These men, members of the Journal chapel, are not only interested in organization work along their own lines of endeavor, but also in that of other workers. Some time ago when the employes of the Carnation condensory at Kent were on strike these printers, with the assistance of the editor, gave a dance, clearing $300, which was turned over to the employes. It might be well for members to bear in mind, when buying products of this kind, that the Carnation company is still fighting organized labor.

No. 170 has endorsed the retail clerks' demand for an eight-hour day and 6 o'clock closing every day of the week. This is one of Tacoma's new organizations and various other locals are endorsing the stand taken by the retail clerks.

Delegate Haines and Charles Perry Taylor made lengthy reports on the sixty-third convention at the last regular meeting, which ran well into "overtime" before adjournment was secured.

A. Leduc has secured a brand new Oldsmobile eight in exchange for his Maxwell, which he has on the Tacoma-Camp Lewis run. Arthur Reid has placed a Paige on the same run, which is now covered by many of the best makes of cars in the city. H. C. Haines is now the possessor of an Overland touring car, and Secretary-Treasurer Goodrich and O. C. Davis of Ford touring cars.

T. L. Jacobs, of the Tacoma Printing Company, has installed a new press.

Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Morris celebrated their twenty-eighth wedding anniversary on October 2. James Haines has returned from a month's sojourn at various points in California. President Jennings' son, residing in Montana, received a broken ankle while riding an unruly horse. He was brought to Tacoma, and after spending a few days in the hospital is now able to get around on crutches. Leslie E. Aller was elected to membership of No. 170 at the last regular meeting.

Cards received: C. C. Fiske, R. R. Rotter, C. M. Anderson, R. M. Nisbett, L. A. Haskins, D. D. Ray, Sherwood Blackburn, C. C. Crain, A. Worthing, D. H. McHugh. Cards drawn: A. F. Wilson, C. M. Anderson, J. L. McKean, Sherwood Blackburn, F. L. Miller, B. Fortier.

S. A. Beadle, delegate to the central labor council from No. 170 and a member of the labor temple committee, has been elected president of Tacoma Central Labor Council. Mr. Beadle has been active in union matters in this city for many years and has held numerous offices in Tacoma Typographical Union since his membership here, and there is no doubt but that he is the right man for the present office. H. Roy Harrison, former president, has resigned and is expecting to enter the restaurant business.

L. G. WHEELER.

MIAMI, FLA.

Business is rapidly picking up here now and work is plentiful in all the shops. In fact, at this writing two or three good, steady linotype operators, a make-up man and a floorman or two could be used to advantage, for there is much overtime to give out and help is needed as well for extra work. This is the time of year when extra men are badly needed for the usual winter rush of work, and the early bird lands the job, providing the early bird is capable and no four-flusher. The scale is $24 for day work and $27 for night work.

Paul Albury, who was drafted last month, was rejected when he took his final examination. He returned to Miami and again is holding down a job on a machine on the Metropolis.

Quite a change took place in the mechanical department of the Metropolis last month, when Will Glenn, who had been foreman for the past two years, resigned his position and resumed his old job as make-up, while A. R. Wood, who had been in the ad department for several months, assumed the position of foreman. The change seems to have been one of purely mutual agreement, for the parties concerned appear to be satisfied.

BEAVER VALLEY, PA.

One of the most interesting meetings of Beaver Valley Union No. 250 in years was held Tuesday evening, October 9, interest being centered in the adoption of a scale for 1918, the election of officers and first reading of the new constitution and by-laws. The new scale carries an increase of $4 per week for floormen, $2 per week for foremen and operators. If approved by the International officers and signed by the proprietors this will give us a flat scale of $24 per week for job and ad men and operators and $25 per week for foremen. The scale is to run for a period of three years.

J. Lester North has deposited a Youngstown card and has been working at the C. W. Retzer Company job plant, Rochester. T. C. Wilkinson has deposited a Warren card and has secured a machine job at the Tribune, Beaver Falls.

The Beaver Valley Labor News, published at Beaver, has a contest on for 500 new subscribers by December 10, and it looks as though they would make it, having the hearty support of all unions affiliated with the central labor union.

Officers elected at the meeting October 9 will be installed at the November meeting and another large turnout is expected.

Joseph L. Irwin, floorman at the Daily News, New Brighton, was called in the selective draft and is now in training at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. A. T. Shafer, another local member who enlisted some time ago, is at Camp Robinson, Sparta, Wis. JOHN CLARK.

JACKSON, MISS.

Notwithstanding the weather was cool and exhilarating, we had only half of our members present at our October meeting; but much enthusiasm was manifested by those who did attend. Only the routine business was transacted.

The lockout is still on in our city. However, we have only a few locked-out members left, all having gone elsewhere and obtained employment with the exception of three.

Guy P. Clark, president of the Mississippi Press Association, having received a tip that the home printing law would be repealed during the sitting of the special session of the legislature which has just adjourned, wrote a letter to every member asking them not to permit the law to be repealed. There was no endeavor made to repeal the law. In his letter to the members Mr. Clark says: "During the past few years many printing plants in this state have put in machinery for doing difficult and first-class work, which will compare favorably with work done anywhere."

L. J. Clontz, our former locked-out president, was with us at the monthly meeting, having come up from Hattiesburg to see his family, still living here.

Leon Orman is now working at Cleveland, Miss., along with James H. Walker, one of our old members.

The central labor council has submitted a proposition to move the meeting place to West Jackson, and our union has acquiesced in the proposal.

Oscar F. Brown, who accepted work at Opelika, Ala., after the lockout, has removed to Meridian, the old home of himself and wife, and where they "spent their childhood hours running wild among the flowers." He has a machine on the Dispatch. Guy J. Moore, who went home to Chillicothe, Ohio, at the time of the lockout, has assumed the work of running the machine at Opelika. Mr. Brown was secretary of the union here and Mr. Moore was secretary of the Elks.

Hederman Brothers have purchased a second-hand machine at Vicksburg and are having it put in fine condition for their job shop. Mr. Hederman had a transfer company take the contract of hauling the machine over here on a large truck. When nearing Vicksburg the truck became unmanageable and toppled over a high embankment near National park, crushing a negro, who when extricated was hurried to the Vicksburg sanatorium in a government ambulance by some soldiers at a mile-a-minute race with Death; and Death won, for when they arrived the negro was dead.

It does seem strange that, year after year, the state fair association should have its printing done 'way off yonder at Brockton, Mass., by the Talman Printing Company, and without the label. Almost any country printer could do the work, which is a large card with the word "fair" left white. Still, the association would be shocked if a union man would decline to buy a ticket.

In the October JOURNAL we noticed the death of two men who formerly worked here, but many years ago—C. B. Cox, who died at Memphis, his home, and Charley Hilbert, who died at New Castle, Pa. Mr. Cox was foreman of our morning paper here about nine years ago, and stayed several months. Mr. Hilbert worked here about thirteen years ago. He was one of the original "Missouri river pirates," and when he first went west worked at the Western Newspaper Union in Omaha. He had quite a large family. We also noticed the death, several months ago, of Mr. Garrett, who died in Monroe, La. I think Mr. Garrett was the only printer in Monroe holding a card three years ago. Think of that! The only one in eight! In the same JOURNAL was chronicled the death of Pete Travers, in New Orleans. Mr. Travers was the most jovial man we ever met. Many a Mardi Gras visiting printer of years ago will be sorry to learn of his death.

Almost every one is working.

FRANKLIN HEIMBACH.

TORONTO, ONT.

The feature of the last meeting of No. 91 was the report of the delegates to the International Typographical Union convention, and also the report of delegates to the Dominion Trades Congress. President Elliott dealt at length with some of the important business of the convention, especially the questions which were to be submitted to the referendum, which the union went on record as unanimously endorsing. Criticism of the expense account of some members of the recent scale committees was also another feature of the business, and in the discussion which followed the president (who was chairman of both the newspaper and job committee) pointed out that as far as results were concerned, Toronto Typographical Union was enjoying one of the best agreements and one of the highest scales ever negotiated by any scale committee in the history of the organization.

D. S. Johnston, in his remarks, claimed he was criticizing the method by which bills were received and passed, and suggested that any member incurring expense for work done on any committee, same should be endorsed and ratified by said committee before submitting to union for payment.

A communication from Walter Hammond, resident at the Union Printers Home, was read, in which he stated he wished to make the union a beneficiary of his mortuary benefit in consideration for a loan of $150. Mr. Hammond's physical condition is such that he never expects to get well, and pointed out in his letter that he would like to see his family once again, but has not the necessary funds to do so. The writer thought that this would be establishing an unwise precedent, as it would tend toward making the mortuary fund something for which it never was intended, and moved that the matter be left in the hands of the relief committee to investigate whether Mr. Hammond would be physically fit to make the trip, and if not, to arrange with his wife to pay him a visit, expense to be borne by voluntary subscriptions to be collected by said committee. The motion was carried. Mr. Hammond has since notified the writer that he does not think he could stand the trip, as he is confined to his bed most of the time, and wishes to thank his friends and the membership generally for any support they may give toward enabling his wife to pay him a visit.

The Ontario government employment bureau had an interesting request on October 16 from a large printing house in town for experienced women compositors. "They have never employed women in that capacity before," said Miss Weaver, the lady in charge of the bureau, "but there are a number of old country girls here who have learned the trade and who would be very useful in that capacity." Acting Secretary George Murray was notified of the action of that firm and the union's interest will be closely watched.

"Jimmy" Simpson left for England about October 20 to take part in the big national educational prohibition campaign which is now being conducted throughout the United Kingdom. The entire temperance forces, including the National Temperance Federation, United Kingdom Alliance and National British Women's Temperance Association, have united with representatives of Iceland, Finland, Russia, France, United States and Canada to take part in this campaign. "Jimmy," who was born in Lancashire, England, has been specially invited to address meetings in the large industrial centers of Great Britain. The invitation was extended to him as the result of an address he delivered before the Temperance Federation of the British Trades Congress last year, when he was the fraternal delegate from the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. Mr. Simpson's chief address before that body also received many complimentary references from the British press, and in the report of Fraternal Delegate David Rees, who went from Canada to the British congress this year, is contained the following reference to that address: "I would be remiss in my duty were I not to mention the numerous unsolicited testimonials that I heard for our 'Jimmy' Simpson, it being claimed by all who spoke to me that his fraternal address last year was the feature of the Birmingham congress." In the itinerary prepared for Mr. Simpson he will be privileged to speak in some of the towns and cities near his birthplace.

We congratulate Charlie Honeyman, of the Monetary Times chapel, on his great success in gardening work this year. He gained first prize for the best backyard garden, and also won the silver cup (value $30) for the best collection of vegetables (twelve square feet) open to the backyard gardeners of Toronto. Mayor Church, accompanied by members of the city council, paid a surprise visit to his home and expressed their delight at the beautiful garden. This year he earned twelve first prizes, four seconds, two thirds and one fourth. Charlie earned the $100 prize two years ago.

George Myland, secretary of the Provincial Conference of Typographical Unions, has left Peterboro and is now located in this city, subbing on the Daily Star.

An unprecedented slackness exists in the printing department of Warwick Bros. & Rutter.

At present writing Secretary Sam Hadden is enjoying his customary two-weeks' annual vacation, the secretarial duties being performed by George Murray.

The Methodist Book Room reports business quiet, and this condition is quite general all over the city in the book and job trade.

With the municipal elections and prospective federal elections in sight, the probabilities are that the "one-horse" printshops that boast having the label will have a busy season. The allied printing trades label is really a joke in this city. A case in point was brought to the attention of the writer recently of a one-man office with the union label, said man being a suspended member of No. 91.

William J. Wilson, late foreman of the Daily News, and now on the pension roll, has been appointed by the dominion government to the tribunal that will examine those applying for exemption under the military service act.

Seventy-six is Brother Bill,
You bet your life, he's working still;
Quick of wit and light of step,
This good old sport is full of "pep."

Congratulations, Brother Bill. November the first has perpetuated itself in the memory of the writer and associates with it the name of William Joyce.

JACK WELSH.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

In these troublous days the thoughts of the printer are almost exclusively turned to whether he shall continue work amid the gases and noxious smells of the average composing room or don the king's khaki and go forth to combat the gases and other death-dealing devices of the Germans on the battlefields of Europe. In answer to the call of country, and even before the proclamation calling out the first class under the selective draft, the boys of the stick and rule have been presenting themselves before the military medical examiners to ascertain their status. Some have been found O. K. and placed in class A, which calls for enlistment for overseas duty; others were relegated to the subordinate classes, while some again have been declared unfit for military service and placed in class E, which means that they are exempt, and may continue to aid in the dissemination of the news of the day.

Percy Long, of the ad department of the Times, was found fit and enrolled with the ninth siege battery. This left an opening which has been promptly filled by Frank Galvin.

It does not follow that all who are placed in the first class will go to the front, for there is a low rumble that the managers of some of the shops, fearing a serious handicap in getting out their papers and producing the mercantile work that the approaching season is sure to require, will make strenuous endeavors and use their "pull" with the powers that be to have at least some of the eligible fellows exempted from the call.

There has been a persistent murmur that girls were to be placed on the street cars as conductors if the military draft threatens to interfere seriously with the service. How the street railway men's union will regard this innovation is a matter that has not been made known. The service is now 100 per cent union; but the men for the most part are a husky lot drawn from the country districts round about, and it is just possible that the military draft will interfere to some extent with the labor problem in that line.

J. C. Merrill, foreman of McMillan's, has again been on the sick list for about a week. His is not a robust nature and he has been obliged to "stand over" quite frequently for short periods.

The Fredericton Gleaner recently sent an emergency call to St. John for an adman to take a permanent "sit," but the order couldn't be filled, as all the boys capable were at work and the inducements were not sufficient to warrant making any changes.

Business in both newspaper and job branches is about normal, with all hands on the job.

Before this reaches the eyes of the readers of THE JOURNAL the Saturday half-holiday, enjoyed from May till November, will have closed for the season, and there will be no more getting to business forty minutes earlier in the mornings to make up for Saturday's pleasures.

Frank Stanton, of the Times chapel, has received word that Gordon Smith, who is doing his "bit" for his country, is doing well and sends his regards to his fellow-printers in old St. Jack.

Many of the older printers of the city were grieved to hear of the death in Boston, September 13, of John Smith Mitchell, who was for many years connected with the News and Sun of this city, both of which are now only a memory. He was a member of Boston Union and highly respected both as a workman and a man. He is survived by one daughter and two sons.

E. L. Sage, of the Telegraph, has been compelled to give the keyboard a rest for a time on account of a painful malady, which, while not serious, acts as a strong deterrent to work done in a sitting posture.

The marriage of Miss Ada Morgan, one of the monotype keyboard operators at Barnes & Co., removes one of the obstacles to making that office 100 per cent union. A. D. COLWELL.

PATERSON, N. J.

It was decided at the October meeting to buy $100 worth of Liberty bonds.

Franklin A. Doss, one of our members, is seeking the position of dance-hall inspector. It carries a salary of $600 per year and will not interfere with one's employment at day work.

Congratulations to my old friend Al Trumble, of Binghamton, and here's hoping he lands the political job he is seeking.

George Graebner, one of our jobmen, is running for collector of West Paterson borough on the republican ticket. He has no opposition.

Charles Atta, assistant ad foreman on the Press-Guardian, has been drafted and is now at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J.

The undersigned has created the position of business agent and organizer for Paterson Typographical Union No. 195. The object is to try and make the town 100 per cent union, or as near as it can be reached to that point; also to get a line on all workmen who are not members. My first two weeks have given me enough encouragement to keep on with renewed efforts.

Delos Davis has left the Press-Guardian and is now on the Evening News. Henry Van Houten has left the day side of the Morning Call and is now on the Press-Guardian. William Marshall has forsaken the Commercial Printing Company at Hackensack and is working on the day side of the Morning Call. Neal Ernest resigned from the Passaic News and came to the Press-Guardian. James Lister has left the Evening News jobroom and is now in New York city. Gustave Nuen, after a two-years' tour through the west, is back at the Evening News jobroom.

Morris S. Grossman, one of our members, and proprietor of the Quick Printer job shop, is running on the democratic ticket for alderman of the Sixth ward. H. L. VANDERVELD.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

The October meeting of No. 20 was held on the afternoon of the 7th, with President A. E. Hill in the chair. Rev. Rufus W. Weaver, our chaplain, was present and opened the meeting with prayer. He also later made an interesting talk along the line of food conservation, which was appreciated by the membership. On account of his duties in connection with the Baptist State Education Board, this was the first opportunity Doctor Weaver had found of being with us for several months, and all were glad to see him again. Messrs. Lytton Alley and H. P. Newton, who represented No. 20 at the Colorado Springs convention, brought up the matter of the organization of a conference of the local unions for the southern and southeastern states. This had been made a special order of business at the preceding meeting. As no one seemed to be familiar with the plans or proposed operations of such a conference, a committee was appointed to gather information on the subject and report at the November meeting. Such a movement may be all right, but the writer's opinion at present is that there is no necessity for such an organization, if that it may be called, and that we had best go a little slow in such matters.

Chris Kittell, of the Brandon chapel, wife and baby, are visiting relatives in Lafayette, Ind. They will be absent several weeks and will visit Chicago and other cities before returning.

Mrs. Sarah Eckelkamp, wife of George Eckelkamp, of the Banner linotype force, died during the past month, and her remains were interred at Mount Calvary cemetery. Mrs. Eckelkamp had been in failing health for a year or more. She was a young woman possessing many lovable traits, and besides her husband leaves many friends to mourn her loss. The sympathy of the entire membership of No. 20 is extended to the bereaved ones.

Charles Slater, of the Brandon chapel, at this time is on a visit to his family in Louisville.

Van Ratteree, who has been a sufferer from locomotor ataxia for nearly two years, has so far recovered as to be able to do a little work. For some time his condition was serious, but his many friends now hope he may be entirely and permanently restored to health.

J. Carlton Loser, a young and popular member of No. 20, has received appointment as secretary to Mayor William Gupton, who was successful in the recent election over his opponent, former Mayor H. E. Howse. Mr. Loser is a linotype operator, but has until recently been traveling in southern states for the Mergenthaler company. During the race for mayor he had charge of Mayor Gupton's campaign headquarters and will no doubt fit into his new position with the ease and grace that has characterized all his former endeavors. He is a son of Financial Secretary H. J. Loser, and a son-in-law of Mayor Gupton.

A serious accident happened recently to Leonard White, a son of J. J. White, of the Banner chapel. The young man is attending St. Bernard college at Cullman, Ala., and while playing baseball was struck on the head by the ball from the pitcher's hand. For several days his condition was critical, and Mr. and Mrs. White were called to his bedside. At this time he is reported out of danger and recovering rapidly.

The writer's little son, whose illness with typhoid fever was mentioned in the October JOURNAL, has so far recovered as to be able to sit up after almost two months.

F. L. Waggoner, assistant foreman of the Ambrose Printing Company, is fortified in one way at least against the high cost of living. He got busy during the summer, and now has harvested fourteen barrels of fine sweet potatoes. It would be well for all our members who have the ground to next year follow Mr. Waggoner's example.

The writer heartily accords with the article by Stuart Shaw, of Temple, Texas, in the October JOURNAL. There are several good and sufficient reasons why the president and secretary of our International organization should be paid higher salaries. If there are any who did not read Mr. Shaw's article, dig up your last month's JOURNAL and peruse it.

Work in book and job shops continued dull. Newspapers are getting busy, with enough men to handle the work. E. ROY MOORE.

SASKATOON, SASK.

The composing room of the Phœnix was visited by fire early on a Sunday morning recently, the fire starting from an unknown cause. Damage to the amount of about $1,000 resulted, the mailing list forms being entirely destroyed, also a proof press. Water and steam played havoc with some of the machines and other equipment of the office. The entire staff was called out, and after strenuous work all day Sunday managed to lick things into shape and issue a paper on Monday morning as usual. Since then the staff has been busy resetting the mailing lists. The loss was covered by insurance.

Although this is always considered to be a dull season, business in the several shops has kept up to above the average season, and all members are working.

Mike Morrissey drew his traveler recently and is now located on the Times at Moose Jaw. Richard Clarke, of Montreal, is a recent arrival and is holding down a machine on the day side at the Phœnix.

The proposed new agreement is in the hands of the employers for their consideration, and it is expected the scale committee will have its first meeting with the employers early next week. An effort is being made to have the new agreement signed before the date of the expiration of the present one at the end of the present month.

A letter to the secretary from Von Rekofski gives the information that he is now a full-blown pilot attached to the coast defense squadron somewhere in England. Von seems to be enjoying the life.

The sympathy of our membership is being extended at time of writing to Alex Cruickshank, of the Star staff, whose young daughter died October 16 of pneumonia, after a short illness, age eleven and a half months.

Conscription will not affect the members here to any great extent, although some of the boys come within the regulation age of the first draft. Some have already been before the board, although as yet the writer has not learned with what result, except in the case of Joe Flynn, make-up on the Phœnix, who says he was placed in class E, as his "heart leaks and his right foot is flat."

R. J. MOORE.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

North Adams, 1918!

Walter Bard, operator on the Herald, has accepted a like position on the Shelburne Falls Weekly. W. H. Sullivan, secretary of the Worcester local, was a caller at the offices here in town recently. Frank Murphy, apprentice on the Transcript, has resigned from that occupation to take up music. George Dempsey, adman on the Herald, has accepted a position with the Gorman Print, of Pittsfield.

"Bill" Haswell, over 88 years of age, is recovering slowly from his recent illness and will again be back on the "proofs" at the Transcript.

Edward Ryan, formerly of this local, but now holding down a machine "sit" at the J. B. Lyon Company, Albany, N. Y., is to be married shortly and will make his future home in that city.

Warren Osborn, another member of No. 316, was united in marriage in this city Thursday, October 11. "Ossy" was well remembered with a lot of nice things by his shopmates at the Excelsior Print, where he is employed.

William Marr, who holds down the positions of captain and shortstop of the Marshall A. C. baseball team of this city, has closed a successful year with his team and was given a house warming recently by his teammates. "Bill" is known to his teammates as the "crab," for the resemblance he displays of Johnnie Evers.

WILLIAM H. CONNORS.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

W. M. McNair passed away on September 27, after an illness of several months. He was afflicted with tuberculosis, and his application for admission to the Home had been approved, but he was not able to undertake the journey. He was buried in the union lot at Woodland cemetery on September 29. He had been a member of this union four years. He was 46 years of age, and is survived by his widow and four children.

Walter M. Evans, who had been a member of the News chapel for several years, has drawn his card and contemplates locating in Montana. O. W. Miller attended the opening games of the world's series in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Phillips made a visit to the home of the parents of the former at Albia in October. Miss Irene Griffin, a member of Madison Union, recently visited here with Mrs. Luella Stevens and daughter Elizabeth. F. W. Humphrey and R. H. Parish last month made a trip by auto to St. Louis, returning by way of Peoria and Davenport. A. S. Condon, who returned a month ago from Grand Forks, N. D., has accepted a position with the Telegraph-Herald at Dubuque. The American Lithographing and Printing Company has installed a casting machine, and the force no longer complains about the lack of sorts. W. G. WATERS.

SANTA FE, N. M.

Max Berueffy, of Fort Worth, Texas, has accepted the foremanship of the New Mexican jobrooms.

William D. Starkweather, for many years machinist-operator on the New Mexican, has resigned his situation and is at present on an extended deer hunt in the mountains near here, after which he expects to go to California to engage in fruit-raising. Marvin Yates succeeds to the place of machinist-operator. E. C. Brame, of Trinidad, is filling the vacancy caused by Mr. Starkweather's resignation.

Jack DeMotte, who has been on the night side for the past several months, picked up a situation at Tucson recently and has shaken the dust of old Santa Fe from his shoes. He has been succeeded by J. W. Stevens, of Kansas City.

Marvin Yates visited his old home in Missouri a couple of weeks last month.

Felipe Ortiz, of the New Mexican jobrooms, spent a two-weeks' vacation by taking an auto trip to El Paso last month.

Stephen Dominguez, who had been a member of Santa Fe Typographical Union for fifteen years, died last month from a complication of diseases. He had been in ill health for the past two or three years.

W. H. MARTIN.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Much of the time of the September meeting of No. 33 was given to listening to reports of delegates to conventions. President Murphy, who was a delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, gave a detailed report of the proceedings of that body. With other business of interest transacted at the convention attention is called to the change in the law regarding the registration fee to be charged in the future to those desiring to affiliate with the union. This change calls for the payment by each initiate less than 25 years of age at next birthday of $3; more than 25 years and less than 35 at next birthday, $5; more than 35 years and less than 45 years at next birthday, $10; 45 years and over, $20. Through the influence of members working in offices with non-union men several applicants have been admitted to the union within the last few months. In pursuing this work in the future, while not intending to offer any bargains in membership, it would not be out of place to call the attention of any detached printer to the increased admission fee soon to be made.

After four years of "watchful waiting" No. 33 has reached its highest altitude in its present scale of prices, and on November 1 $1 per week was added to the weekly pay of its members. An increase in overtime rate and more money for piece operators is also received. Locally we were considered at one time to be the highest paid of any craft, with the added distinction of being the leading factor in organized labor in this community. The report of Delegate O'Connor, who with Samuel R. Macready represented No. 33 at the Newport convention of the state branch of the American Federation of Labor, revealed some figures regarding wages paid in other trades than the printing industry that were certainly most startling to most of us. The plumbers, who only a few years ago were without organization and whose wages were most meager, now receive $5 per day; the steamfitters, whose history of existence hardly equals that of the plumbers, at present get $5.20 per day. The wages of the electrical workers, who claim no antecedents whatever, receive $4.80 per day. The pattern makers, still less remote in existence than the electrical workers, have increased their pay (get this!) $2.25 per day in twenty months. Besides these almost unheard-of increases in wages within a few years, only forty-four hours is required for a week's work in some of the trades mentioned. We are all agreed that these stupendous changes have been brought about by unrelenting organization work by the local members themselves. Few of us have realized the coming into being of these and other trades, until now they dominate the central federated union, dictate the policies of the allied council and influence and control the state branch of the American Federation of Labor. They are organized for a purpose and one of these objects is to get and to keep wages at a dignified rate. Let us be as wise as they and when the scale of No. 33 expires in 1918 not be too lenient with ourselves.

James Moore, one of the oldest and best-known printers in Providence, died September 30 at his home in this city, at the age of 63 years, after a lengthy illness. He was born in Providence and lived here all his life. Mr. Moore commenced his apprenticeship at the printer's trade in the office of the Providence Journal in 1878. He joined Providence Typographical Union April 15, 1883, and at the time of his demise was on the old age pension roll. He worked for many years on the Journal and was also employed in various other newspaper offices in the city. His last place of employment was as proofreader on the Providence News. Some four years ago he was taken ill, but recovered and was able to work again. A year or more ago he was again taken sick and was never able again to resume work. He had many friends and acquaintances in Providence and throughout the state and was highly regarded by these and by his employers. He left a wife and a sister.

Miss Alice E. Meehan and Dennis A. Hurley, treasurer of Providence Union, were united in marriage October 10 at St. Joseph's church. The felicitations of No. 33 are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Hurley and all wish them unbounded happiness in their life together.

Edward Fitzpatrick has been elected a member of the executive committee of No. 33, taking the place of Alex Fraser, who has become a member of the national army. Both men are employed on the Bulletin.

The forty-first annual convention of the American Humane Association was held in this city in October. We wonder if this society ever heard of a double-header on a seven-day newspaper?

John J. Livingston, a brother of Frank Livingston, who is a member of No. 33 and now a resident of the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs, died in this city last month. Burial was at Worcester, Mass. Deceased was employed as a pressman and was well and favorably known among members of the typographical union, who extend sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

Frank H. Farley has returned to his work in the composing room of the Providence Tribune, after an absence of several weeks. Mr. Farley will be remembered as the official photographer of the 1915 convention held in this city. During the past summer Mr. Farley has "snapped" many fine pictures and had the rare distinction of making photographs of the naval apprentices at the government reservation at Newport. One of these shows a group of 5,000 naval apprentices and another 3,000, attending Sunday morning service. Mr. Farley was commended very highly by government officials at the training station for his excellent work.

Benjamin P. Moulton, president of the Remington Printing Company, of this city, has been elected president of the United Typothetæ of America. In honor of his election Mr. Moulton was a guest of the Master Printers' Association here at the Crown hotel. Albert W. Finley, of Boston, was one of the speakers.

What came near being a fatality occurred at the Home of Adam Callender, who is employed at the Livermore & Knight office, last month. In the absence of her parents, Anna, the four-year-old daughter, in some unexplained manner turned on the gas, and on her return the mother found the child unconscious. The child was taken to the Rhode Island hospital, where she was confined for some weeks, with many anxious days of uncertainty as to the final outcome.

Providence still shares in the ubiquitous patriotism now so manifest and the local union continues to be honored by enlistments in the national army. Besides those whose names have been given as having joined the colors, from the Tribune has gone John Sullivan and from the Standard Printing Company William Horn, who are now members of Uncle Sam's navy. Harry Norton, of the Standard office, has gone to Toronto, where he will join the Canadian forces. Mr. Norton was presented with a wrist watch and Mr. Horn with a purse of gold by their shopmates as parting remembrances. Howard D. McGuinness, who was employed at Westerly, is with the 102d field artillery, with the rank of corporal.

The Brown Herald, a publication formerly issued six days a week under the supervision of the students of Brown University, is now published but three days a week. The European war is given as the reason for the curtailment.

EDWARD N. GRIFFITHS.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

Publication of the Rundschau, local German newspaper, was suspended September 27, for the period of the war, by order of its owner, William F. Maag. The publisher's statement sets forth that he is a member of the Mahoning county draft board, and owing to the misunderstandings which frequently arise through German papers, he considered suspension of the Rundschau advisable. The paper, which was a weekly, had been issued regularly for forty-four years.

Charles F. Etter represented No. 200 at the October session of the Ohio State Typographical conference, held at Akron, October 13 and 14. The meeting was very successful from a business standpoint and likewise socially. The affair ended with a banquet at Young's hotel, on the lake, near the city, followed by an inspection of the famous O. C. Barber farm. Among the Youngstown visitors were Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Woodfield, Gus Kreuger and Harvey Green. Akron printers certainly went the limit in providing entertainment for the visitors, and we want to take occasion now to extend our thanks. The next meeting of the conference will take place in Dayton next April.

Joseph Fleming, one of the owners of the Standard Printing Company; Edward Weil, a Vindicator apprentice, and Earl Smith, a pressman and a son of L. T. Smith, an ex-president of No. 200, are now at Chillicothe, with Uncle Sam's honor men. Paul E. Nixon, who left for the same cantonment last month, was honored by being placed in charge of the men of his district en route to the training camp. Since his arrival, Nixon has been made a corporal, and is also captain of a basketball team, and a member of the camp's football team.

Ray T. Genuske has accepted a situation on the Telegram and William Edmunds is running a machine on the night side at the Vindicator. Both are former employes of the Youngstown Printing Company. Frank Sherman, of Roanoke, Va., is an addition to the Telegram force, as is L. C. Young, who deposited an Ashtabula card. W. F. White, who recently went to Canton, has returned and is employed on the Vindicator. S. P. James was in Chillicothe several days last month to see his son, Sergeant Fred James, who is in training at the cantonment. Henry W. Raisse represented No. 200 at the Ohio State Federation of Labor meeting at Cincinnati in October.

NEWARK, N. J.

The Newark Evening News chapel has formed a Liberty Loan club, and about fifty members of the composing room have enrolled. In the first loan the compositors very liberally subscribed—some through the office and some through other sources.

The Matthias Plum plant, which is over one hundred years old, has lately been sold to L. L. Slater, who came to the firm in the capacity of efficiency expert.

James Clarkson, an apprentice on the Sunday Call, who enlisted in the infantry several months ago, has been advised for appointment to a two-year course at West Point by the colonel of his regiment, owing to exceptional ability shown.

Roscoe Menagh, member of the News chapel for the past twenty years, was recently married to Miss Florence Hatfield. He was the recipient of a chest of silver from his fellow-employes.

The State Printers' League of New Jersey will hold its quarterly meeting in this city on Sunday, October 28. It is expected that the mayor and several prominent speakers will address the convention and attend the banquet which will follow the business session.

A member of the Evening News chapel, Thomas G. Bell, was the recipient of a comfort kit, regulation sweater and wrist watch on September 20. It was indicative of the personal esteem of his fellow-employes, following his demonstration of patriotism and enlistment in Company B, Second New Jersey artillery.

Members of the News chapel held an outing on Saturday, September 29, at Stoll's farm, Springfield, N. J. Several automobiles were used to convey the members to their destination, and when they arrived they found that everything had been arranged for their comfort. Sausage, clam chowder, chicken and beefsteak sandwiches were served on their arrival, and at 6 P. M. a course dinner was had.

Charles Shoenart is again foreman of the Morning Ledger. This is the second engagement of Mr. Shoenart, who succeeded Thomas J. McHugh. The latter also has held the position twice since the inception of this publication.

The Trades Union Anti-Tuberculosis Association will hold its annual ball in Krueger Auditorium on November 19. This organization, composed entirely of the labor unions, is doing a wonderful work among those who are suffering from the white plague. Recently they took up the matter of tuberculosis in the children, and during the summer sent to the country nine children who had shown traces of the disease. Most of these came back with a negative test after six weeks spent in the country. The revenue for conducting the work of this organization is mostly secured from the receipts of the ball, and this year, with the high cost of eggs and milk, it is necessary that a much larger sum be made. The only other source of revenue is a per capita tax of 35 cents levied upon each member of the different organizations affiliated.

The Baker Printing Company, which has consistently opposed the adoption of the eight-hour day, has adopted the union standard workday—eight hours—and it is understood that this is to be effective in all its departments. The fight has been a long one, and it is hoped that at a not very distant day the Baker company will be using the allied trades label. The firm has not recognized the unions, however.

Commission government has been adopted in Newark, and now the printers and allied crafts will have to start a new campaign to corral the work for union printshops.

For the first time in the history of the city and county the ballots for this year's election were printed on union-label paper—and, of course, in union-label shops. CHARLES J. SMITH.

DENVER, COLO.

Lawrence C. Matthews, a former member of No. 49, but who recently was employed in Pueblo, died very suddenly in that city the past month, of heart failure. He came to this city just a few days before his death, to visit his wife, who was in a local hospital. While here he greeted his many friends and seemed apparently in the best of health. Matthews served his apprenticeship in this city and was employed on the Denver Republican when that paper became defunct. He was a member of the Denver printers' baseball club and played in several tournaments of the Union Printers' National Baseball League. Funeral services were held at the family home in this city and interment was at Crown Hill cemetery.

M. J. Collins, an active member of No. 49, died at the county hospital in this city the past month, after an illness of only a short duration. He was confined to his bed about a week before his death with an attack of grippe, and was removed to the hospital, where he died a few hours later. Asthma and heart trouble is given as the cause of his death. Deceased was well known among the printing trades throughout the west. He returned to this city from Butte, Mont., some time ago and opened a cigar store, Mrs. Collins, who is a member of the cigar makers' union, assisting him. The remains were shipped to his former home in Wisconsin for interment, accompaned by Mrs. Collins and a sister.

William E. Tanner, of the Post chapel, has been touring the southern part of the state, doing organizing work among the farmers for the Non-Partisan League.

Sam Greene, who has been visiting his son in Winkleman, Ariz., has returned to Denver and is showing up on the ad side of the Post.

The newspaper scale committee reported its efforts at the October meeting. The scale was adopted by the union as presented, with a few minor changes. The new scale calls for $5.75 for day work and $6.25 for nights. On evening papers publishing Sunday morning editions the second shift of the double-header calls for the night scale, with six hours constituting the shift. The scale under which the union has worked the past three years made no special provision for the second shift, either in hours or pay. Prior to that time the second shift on Saturday was paid for at the overtime rate. Another section adopted provides that the publishers pay a weekly sum equal to one-half of 1 per cent of its total composing-room pay roll to the secretary-treasurer of No. 49, said sum to be transferred to the secretary-treasurer of the International and be converted into the old age pension fund. This measure would put into practice a theory that has long been prevalent in printing trade unions, that after an employe has worn himself out in the service of a publisher, the publisher should pay something toward keeping him off the scrap heap. The present scale has been very unsatisfactory in many ways, principal among which was the straight time for the double-header, the empowering the foreman to be the sole judge of a man's competency, the restraining of the union from disciplining a foreman for any and all acts he might commit against unionism or members by claiming he was carrying out the instructions of the publisher, etc.

At the last meeting of No. 49 an application for membership was denied. Such action by this union is seldom indulged in, and while the members' sympathies were inclined to sway their judgment, their convictions were too strong that a man who will ignore the union for twenty-five years should not be welcomed with open arms when he finally decides he would be benefited by joining the union—and with a steady union situation in his pocket when he fills out his application.

During a tense moment while the newspaper scale was being considered at the last meeting of this union, Merrill Fish, of the News, arose to a point of order and said: "I wish to announce that the score at the end of the seventh inning is Sox, 7; Giants, 2." The point was well taken, and the union proceeded with its business.

FRED L. ZIMMERMAN.

MONTREAL, P. Q.

The October meeting of the union passed off very quietly. The newspaper situation report showed no material progress. The executive report as presented by Chairman Tardif was one of the lightest on record for business. The remainder of the meeting was occupied in discussing the formation of a relief or sick fund, and eventually the following committee was formed to take the matter up and report: Messrs. Cloake, Drury, Tilley, Carter and Cantwell. (Should this notice catch the eye of a president or secretary of any local having a sick or relief fund in connection with his local, a copy of rules and regulations addressed to room 35, Herald building, Craig street, west, Montreal, would be appreciated.) An interesting report was submitted by President Black on his "tour round the small offices."

The Montreal Mail, which suspended publication last month, is to be purchased by a prominent ex-cabinet minister, according to a rumor current in Ottawa. Edward Beck, formerly editor of the Winnipeg Telegram, is understood to be identified with a project to start another newspaper in Montreal.

Patents have been applied for by Jim Pringle for an improved matrix block, claimed to be away ahead of anything produced, and can be used on linotype or intertype machines to cast up to forty-two-point. From all accounts the promoters reckon the invention will benefit the printer considerably.

"One of us" was the salutation to Stanley Cloake on the word being passed round that "Stan" had gone and got married. Congratulations.

Jack Pilatzke is reported very ill and now in the Royal Victoria hospital. We hope for a speedy recovery. Mr. Wheeler, of the S. B. Foote chapel, is now at home and expects to be back to work shortly. He thanks the many friends for their kindly assistance during his period of sickness. Jack Bradley and Davy Smith are still confined to the house.

We extend our sympathy to Messrs. Whitaker and Wooley on the recent accident to both of their sons. Sydney Whitaker is an apprentice member and had just recovered from a long sickness when he met with this accident on a motorcycle.

The members of the Mail staff are gradually leaving us for pastures new, the latest being Alex Hird, George Ebert and Charlie Hadwen. Word has arrived that I. Machanic has joined the American navy.

Arthur Read's son has arrived home from the front, shell shocked. Rene Proulx has been reported missing. He was a member of No. 145, but was well known in No. 176 circles. The following letter was received from Sergeant W. C. Morrison, of the Thirteenth battalion, after receiving the pamphlet "Somewhere in France":

It is with great pleasure that I received, and read, the most interesting little pamphlet showing the great work performed by the union. After reading it one could not but feel the need of giving to the union one's whole-hearted support and standing by it in all eventualities. You may be sure that I am looking forward to getting back to Montreal and to the old circles. Three years is a long time to be away from the good things of life.

On Thanksgiving day the employes of the Federated Press held a get-together which was a great success. Big strings were made. It is said some South Shore members took all day to make a strike. Ask their wives.

Vice-President Barrett at this writing is here to assist in the newspaper deadlock.

Traveling cards received: J. Clachrie, P. J. Fynan. Issued: Fred A. White, W. T. Tucker, J. Clachrie, W. Strowe, L. A. Durisseau, B. Brown, W. R. McDonald, J. Larose, P. Morgan, A. Jacques-Cartier No. 145.

Our last regular meeting was poorly attended. In this regard it reminds me of a resolution passed lately by Edmonton Union, which has raised its monthly dues to 75 cents, which is remitted to every member present at the monthly meeting. For a wise measure, it is hard to beat. It is impossible to make any progressive move with little attendance. I am sure that there is among our many young members good ideas that are asleep that would render our meetings more interesting and aid in the advancement of their local if they only attend once a month. It is very little to compare with their own betterment.

It has been decided to hold a euchre-dance next month, and it is hoped that every one will help to make a success of it.

The big anxiety is over, and a general disappointment seems to reign in most of the local unions. The vote regarding conscription, taken by the Canadian congress in Ottawa, is certainly not a clear pronouncement, and many delegates misunderstood the complicated resolutions presented to them to vote upon. Let us hope that the anxiety existing will not interfere with the progress of the labor movement and the welfare of the local unions. After all, the congress, no more than the delegates present at the convention, are responsible for the drastic measures that the parliament has carried through. ARTHUR LECLAIRE.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

At the October meeting of the union it was decided to purchase $200 worth of Liberty bonds. A donation of $25 was voted to the leather workers, who have been on a strike in this city for the past eight weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Nordhaus, of San Antonio, spent a week in this city during the month and took in the state fair. Mr. Nordhaus is a member of the legislature from Bexar county, and author of the bill to be voted on at the next election authorizing the state of Texas to have its textbooks printed in Texas.

It is with regret we chronicle the death of Walter E. ("Chuck") Mileham, who died October 17, 1917, at the home of his mother at Georgetown, Texas. Mr. Mileham was 42 years of age at death. He had been prominent in labor circles for years, and represented San Antonio Typographical Union at Cleveland.

Mr. and Mrs. E. White, who made San Antonio their home for several years, are now located in Dallas. Mr. White is showing up on the News, and seems to be getting in about all the time he cares to.

Jeff Gilbert, of Austin, took in the fair at this place last month.

The Dallas union printers' mutual aid society has been organized six months and not a dollar has been paid in benefits for sickness. The society has about fifty paid-up members and is now earning about $2. This is a remarkable showing, but we are sorry to say that more of the members should join the society and help it along. It pays to sick or injured members $1 per day while not able to work. The membership fee is only $3, with no dues thereafter.

C. A. Shutt, who for a number of years has held down a machine on the News-Journal, has withdrawn his card and expects to go into business for himself as soon as he can find a location.

The Times-Herald and the Morning News issued special automobile editions Sunday, October 14. These editions gave work to a good many men, and business for a week or two was on the boom.

Colonel Hughes, proofreader on the News, has been on a vacation for the past several weeks.

At the last meeting of the union a committee was appointed to open up the job scale in this city and regulate the working conditions in the job offices. For some time things have not been going along as smoothly as they might and considerable complaint has been made as to conditions among some of the offices. It is to be hoped the committee will have success in regulating these without opposition by the employing printers.

The new intertype machines (eight of them) have been installed in the News-Journal composing room and are being handled by the men with good satisfaction. These machines replace a number of the old ones which have seen service on the News for many years, but were still good for work where so much speed was not required. Messrs. Butters, Fairburn, Guard and Beewarder have charge of the battery and are well pleased with the change.

Local option went into effect in this city on October 20, and in consequence Dallas is bone dry.

Mr. and Mrs. Manard, who came here some time ago from Oklahoma, are well pleased with Dallas. Mr. Manard, who is an electrician, was compelled to undergo an operation at a sanatorium. While there, Mrs. Manard, who is a linotype operator, went to work on the News and had splendid success. Both are unstinted in their praise of the treatment they have received from their fellow-workmen.

During the state fair the Southern Methodist University issued a daily paper on the grounds. Ralph Fisher, a member of No. 173, operated the machine for those in charge of the publication.

NEW LONDON, CONN.

A surprising incident happened in this city recently that involves our apprentice problem, if I may call it such. The Evening Day, with a circulation of 10,000, advertised for a boy to learn the trade for three successive days without a single boy applying for the job. The next day the ad was changed to girl wanted, and the following morning four young ladies applied for the position. The foreman had no trouble in making a choice, as all four were capable of filling the opening. It has been said that some of the old boys in the composing room have spruced up to make a shine with the new devil girl. The young woman will not be alone in the room, as there are two other women running lino's there.

The Globe had a lot of trouble in trying to land an apprentice a few months back. After about a month one was finally secured from the vocational school and he has proved very capable in mastering the trade.

George Connor is now working nights on the Telegraph, James Flanagan is on the Globe, Mr. Morrell is now working in the Telegraph jobroom, and a new man, John Manson, is doubling up on a machine and ad alley on the Telegraph. Mr. Anderson, of the Telegraph jobroom, is taking a two-weeks' vacation, this being one of the most pleasant months of the year in this vicinity for fishing and hunting.

Ralph Burnett entertained a few of the printers on a fishing trip out in Long Island sound after mackerel. A pleasant sail was enjoyed, although no fish were disturbed from their slumbers. Harry Lezarde, James Flanagan, Mr. Morrell, Dan Daly, John Connell and Ralph Burnett made up the party.

Among the numerous sailors and soldiers at this port are many former printers. The writer had occasion to entertain a couple of the boys whom he chanced to meet and was pleased to show them a letter from headquarters in regard to printers wanted in the United States engineers' division in France. Both boys were anxious to confer with Washington so they could be transferred to France for that branch of the service.

A new organizing committee was launched at the October meeting, which looks as if that work has been placed in the right hands this time. The committee comprises Messrs. Ham, Donovan and Driscol and has been given full power by the union to carry on their work. There are many job shops here that are all non-union, and with the right kind of encouragement these offices could be brought into the fold and a brighter outlook would be in sight for the job business in the future. At present we have only one job shop signed up, and this one only employs two men. A little assistance from all the members in this line of work would help put New London Union where it belongs in regard to membership and help make it, as John Murphy, of Providence, says, "North Adams and 5,000 members," for the New England Typographical Union next summer.

William A. Donahue and wife, of Cokato, Minn., were here October 17, attending the wedding of the former's sister Margaret to Edward P. Gharrity, a ball player on the Washington American League team. Mr. Donahue was formerly employed here on the Evening Day.

In answer to a former New Londoner in regard to David Reese, we can say that he may be seen most any day on the streets of this city very well preserved for his age, but not working at the trade.

Thomas Morton took a withdrawal card at the October meeting. Mr. Morton is to manage an animal reserve and kennel in this vicinity. He was formerly a reporter and proofreader on the local papers.

Mr. Rosenberg, of Hartford, was a caller at the Globe recently. He installed the two new linotype machines there a few months ago and was interested in how they were acting. He left a card with Machinist Burnett which we were glad this time bore the union label.

Joseph J. Dallas paid us a visit recently. He was passing through here and dropped off to congratulate the scale committee on their success, and also gave a few suggestions for the organizing committee.

Our new officers seem to harmonize, and as the last few meetings ran along very smoothly things look good for a successful year.

Ralph Burnett says it is about time for a little cheer-up party to get out the chowder members and let them see what is in the works for the winter months. New London is growing, why not make the union grow with it? We want the forty printers of this town instead of twenty-five that we now hold. Let's go get them.

JOHN P. CONNELL.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of Typographical Union No. 399 was held on Monday evening, October 1. Reports from the different offices indicate that they are very busy, including Westfield and Crawford. The following scale committee was appointed: George H. Rockefeller, chairman; Edward Koechlein, Robert Kent. On Sunday, October 14, the committee held a meeting, which shows a very good sign for an increase in the scale.

"Cy" Seymour, known to all printers as "Washington on the Delaware," is engaged as operator on a No. 19 linotype at the Lenox Press, Inc., at Plainfield.

One of the busiest offices in Plainfield is the Courier-News, publishers and printers, which has seven linotypes, and a better equipped plant can not be found in the state of New Jersey. Charles H. Frost is at the head of the concern. He is a man of wide experience both in the publishing and the printing business.

PHŒNIX, ARIZ.

All Arizona mourns the loss of its greatest man in devotion to the cause of labor. John McBride was accidentally killed at Globe while associated with the federal commission in the investigation of labor conditions. His was a life of active work, beginning previous to 1883, when he was president of the Ohio miners' union during the noted Hocking Valley strike. When the coal miners organized in 1885 he was selected as national president, and, when, in 1888, an effort was made to combine the Federation of Miners with the International Trades Assembly, No. 135, of the Knights of Labor, that is, the coal miners' national district of the Knights of Labor, and what was known as the National Progressive Union, he was made head of that organization. As the president of the National Progressive Union he still continued negotiations with that portion of the Knights of Labor, National Trades Assembly, No. 135, of which refused to go into the combination creating the progressive union. These negotiations resulted in the convention of the two organizations in 1890, when they were amalgamated under the title of the United Mine Workers of America. He was second president of that organization, a position he held when he was elected president of the American Federation of Labor for the term beginning January 1, 1895, and ending December of that year. He is the only man who ever held the latter position except Samuel Gompers. Mr. McBride is the father of the closed shop, signed agreement and check-off system, now in vogue in the coal fields of America. Of him Secretary of Labor Wilson said: "His heart was big, his sympathies were wide; he had a broad experience, and because of these facts, when trouble arose in the state to which he had moved from Ohio, and when these troubles seemed to require the mediation of a big, broad, level-headed man, with a warm heart in his bosom, I selected Judge McBride for the work." Judge McBride was 62 years old and is survived by a widow and a son, Joseph K., secretary to Chief Justice Cunningham of the state supreme court. Both reside in Phœnix and the local trades council had charge of the funeral services which were held here. Flags were lowered throughout the state and organized labor marched in a body to pay respects to his memory. Floral tributes were received from all sections, together with those presented by the different locals, including the typographical. The remains were shipped to the old home in Ohio for burial.

The Phœnix printing industry is furnishing its quota of soldiers. So far four printers and one apprentice, three pressmen and two binderymen have been called, besides a number connected with the business in other departments. Walter Righetti and Dick Porter went with the last contingent and H. D. Triplett will leave with the next. All Arizona boys have been sent to Camp Funston, Kansas, but it is now probable they will be transferred to Linda Vista, Cal., on account of climatic conditions.

At the October meeting two candidates were obligated—Raymond Edwards and Mrs. Ruby L. Watson. J. H. Digges, R. N. Moorehead and W. N. Baus were elected delegates to the trades council. Ben F. Wood, field man for the campaign to keep printing at home, resigned to join the force of the Blade-Tribune at Florence. The Five Points Herald plant was shipped there, Editor Wren having lost his equipment by fire. Thomas H. Adams was re-elected a trustee of the state federation of labor at the recent annual election.

The Republican is making extensive improvements. A thirty-two-page perfecting press, monotype caster and modern fixtures are being installed and another linotype will be added. Another situation has been given out on the hand side, Clifford Hanlon being the man to whom it fell. The Gazette also recently furnished an additional berth by transferring C. G. McQuesten to the proof desk. Conditions generally are improving, and while there is no idleness, at present there is nothing to warrant additional permanent employment. At this season letters are received from all sections, necessitating considerable correspondence, if replies are made to all, and it seems only just to ask any who may read these lines and think of making further inquiry through the secretary, to enclose a stamp.

D. C. Stevens, father of Mrs. John F. Phy, passed away at Long Beach, Cal. Burial was given in the Masonic cemetery, the deceased having attained the thirty-second degree in that order. Mr. Phy is employed as stoneman at the McNeil Company.

Senator Davis of the State Press is home from a business trip to the coast. Mrs. C. C. Williams, wife of the foreman, and their little daughter also have returned from Denver, where they spent the summer. G. A. Corbus, who foremanized here in early days, has taken the place of Walter Righetti in that chapel. "Cowboy" Jones is here again separating the good from the bad in linotype metal. O. L. Hitchcock is back from Mesa and H. N. Harmon is home from a hunting and prospecting trip. W. M. Moore is now with the Cactus Blade at Winkelman. Late arrivals are R. L. Hiatt and George H. Golden. W. S. SWENSON.

WHEELING, W. VA.

Typographical Union No. 79 does not issue permits to any member of the International Typographical Union entering the jurisdiction without their traveling card, and the only way a permit can be obtained is by receiving an O. K. from the union holding their card. The secretary has had considerable trouble of late with members coming in without their traveling cards. The writer wishes to call attention to the following particular case: A man, giving his name as Colbern, applied for a permit, saying he had been a printer for eighteen years, had learned his trade in Pennsylvania, and had been working out west. He said he was penniless and wanted the secretary to issue him a permit to work pending his application; said he had worked in other towns on a permit issued by other unions, and had worked six weeks in Chicago on a permit without paying on his application. He became very indignant when informed he could not get a permit from this union until he had filled out an application blank and deposited a fee. Characters like this one should be made to stay out or get in and do the right thing.

Melvin J. Morgan, of the Register force, who was drafted for the national army, and who left for Camp Lee in Virginia on October 6, was tendered a farewell by his fellow employes at a chapel meeting held Friday, October 5. As a memento of appreciation and good will, Mr. Morgan was presented with a wrist watch beautifully engraved, and a box of Wheeling stogies. Robert B. McLeish made a very neat speech concerning the object of the meeting, and introduced the foreman, John H. Winder, to make the presentation, which he did in a very satisfactory way, informing the soldier that the management and the Register force wished him good luck and that No. 7 machine was there for him upon his return, which he hoped would be soon. Mr. Morgan responded feelingly of his appreciation and thanks for the honor shown him by the Register.

There has been a scarcity of machine operators in the Wheeling district for the past two months. The secretary has been requested to look up quite a few in that time, but has been unable to meet the requests.

Richard S. Meek, who has been foreman of the News composing room for the past eighteen years, has resigned on account of his health. Mr. Meek took a short vacation and is now subbing on the machine. Earl F. Bradbury, formerly with the Fisher Typesetting Company, is now operating the new model 17 linotype for the Owl printshop. George M. Rogers has again resumed his duties with the Owl printshop, after spending six weeks in the linotype school at Brooklyn, N. Y. Everett Cody, of the Register force, has enlisted in the aviation signal corps and left for Columbus, Ohio, October 23. Charles Laymon has returned to the city. He had been attending the monotype school in Philadelphia for the past three months. John Killeen has resigned as operator on the Intelligencer and is subbing on the News.

Arrivals: Felix McCarthy, Floyd P. Hastings, W. F. Osborne, C. F. Parker, T. J. Little. Departures: T. J. Little, Floyd P. Hastings, John D. Doyle, C. F. Parker, Felix McCarthy, Charles Layman.

RAHWAY, N. J.

Rahway Typographical Union No. 235 now meets the first Wednesday evening of each month. We now have twenty-three members "doing their bit" for the government at the front, and proudly the members are keeping them in good standing by paying their dues and assessments.

Rahway also has signed a new scale, which adds $1 per week to the pay of floor and job men, making it $23.

Several members have signified their intention of investing in the second Liberty loan.

R. D. Uhler.

CONCORD, N. H.

North Adams and 5,000 members.

James M. Cox and George W. Conway left for the Ayer (Mass.) camp on October 3. These are the first members of No. 297 serving the United States in the army. We are going to keep the dues of these two members paid up and also any others that may go.

President Bruser is in the hospital, where he is making a quick recovery from an operation.

The Rumford Press has lost seventeen men from its force by enlistment and the draft. The company is filling their positions as rapidly as possible, and at the same time making plans to give these men jobs upon their return.

We just barely had a quorum at our October meeting. Something has got to be done to make the members come to the meetings. It was told to me after the October meeting by one of our best members and one that is a regular attendant, that if the members did not come out to the meetings this winter, he was going to offer an amendment to our by-laws which will put the rebate system into effect again, and instead of a 50 cents rebate he was going to try and make it $1. I certainly hope he does, and I will do all I can to put it into effect. We need something like this to make the boys realize they need to come for their own good.

Business in all branches of the trade is exceptionally good.

Representative Joseph J. Dallas was in Concord one day recently laying plans to help us in our organization campaign. He promised us a more extended stay a little later.

The Rumford Press closed down from 1 until 3 o'clock Wednesday, October 5, to allow the help to see the parade in honor of the men leaving Concord for the camp at Ayer, Mass. Any fifty-five-hours-a-week shop can well afford to do these little things once in a while to keep the men satisfied, and then some.

There are five union men on the ticket for our primary election, which was held on October 9. The union men at Concord certainly can support a union man here all right.

Thomas J. Dyer is equipping his new press with an individual motor, and also replacing some of his old type with new and up-to-date faces.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

George Noonan, Eddie Smith and Jim Coddington, of the Republican-Herald, and the writer attended the recent world's series ball games in New York. All agree that the Zimmerman-Collins footrace was the funniest ever held. Zimmerman is blamed for several of the boys hereabouts being financially embarrassed just at present.

Charles H. Blossom, of the night force at the Vail-Ballou plant, was married at the Episcopal chapel in Delhi, N. Y., September 18, to Miss Margaret H. Franklin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Franklin, of that place. Charlie's many friends all wish them all the success and happiness in the world.

John Wyrough, of Vail-Ballou's, has left for Camp Dix in New Jersey to become one of Uncle Sam's best soldiers. Johnny was given a farewell send-off by many of his friends. He has the best wishes of all his friends for a successful career as a member of Uncle Sam's finest.

Joe Dowling, of the Press, recently suffered the loss of his father by death. Joe has the sympathies of his many friends in his sad bereavement.

Bill Dillon has been placed in charge of the new monotype caster recently installed on the Press. Bill says he intends to become the champion caster man in the country. He is being ably instructed by Mr. Massey of the monotype factory force.

Bryant Stohmann, one of our young members, has accepted a situation on the Elmira Herald.

Members of the Republican-Herald chapel gave Earl Simpson Miller a surprise campfire at the Carton Saturday night, September 22, in honor of his selection as a representative of the United States in the imbroglio which is to end when the world has been made safe for democracy. He was surprised for the moment when he was escorted into the presence of so many knights of the keyboard and "stick." Seated about the campfire were soldiers headed by General Baldwin of the editorial brigade, and Lieutenant-Colonel Corby of the typoistic caravan. Aide-de-Camp Marty Collins and Adjutant George C. Noonan were decorated with the Order of Double Cross for bringing Earl Simpson Miller into camp without resorting to "blinders." Lieutenant-Colonel Corby and Adjutant Alex Pye "jeffed" to determine who would make the presentation address and Corby won. He presented to Private Miller a safety razor with all necessary paraphernalia. There's nothing too good for Earl Miller. He has proven his worth to the Republican-Herald. It takes courage to dive headlong from a newspaper office into the world's conflict and say you're glad, but Earl Miller is glad—a typical soldier of the U. S. A. His old pals are "proud of him."

NEW ENGLAND TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

September was the busiest month the printers in New England have ever experienced. There were more positions open than could be filled. The employment bureau received calls from New Bedford, Woonsocket, Taunton, Providence, Fall River, Pittsfield, Meriden, Lawrence, Bridgeport, Waterbury, Danbury, Springfield and Attleboro, during the month, which kept the bureau busy endeavoring to find printers to fill the vacancies.

There are a large number of non-union printers in the district who are competent and should be brought into the union. There will be a far greater number of calls for union printers in the next two months than there was in September, and we should be prepared to fill them by adding non-members to our ranks. The district secretary is sending out a circular letter with the name and address of every non-union printer in each locality to the secretary and organization committee of each local union, urging them to endeavor to bring the competent non-union printers into the union.

The Springfield Homestead, a non-union office since the eight-hour day struggle, ceased publication during the week of September 28.

The union printers employed in the chapel of the American Graphophone Company, of Bridgeport, Conn., have been granted an increase of 5 cents per hour for day work, making the job scale for that chapel $24 and 75 cents per hour for overtime.

W. W. Farnsworth, financial secretary of Fitchburg Union, has been appointed instructor of printing in the local high school of Fitchburg, Mass. There is to be no attempt to teach the boys the trade, but rather to acquaint them with the proper division of words and punctuation, etc.

James Moore, a pensioner, and one of the oldest and best known printers in Providence, died on Sunday, September 30. Mr. Moore was initiated into Providence Union April 15, 1883.

Warner Brothers, manufacturers of corsets in Bridgeport, have decided to enlarge their printing plant so that in the future they will be able to produce all their own printing. This firm has always been friendly to the union and is one of the best shops in Bridgeport.

The Evening Standard of Bridgeport has changed its name to the Standard-American and is publishing three editions—noon, mailing and home. The paper is to move into new quarters on January 1 and it is expected to publish a morning edition.

Portsmouth Union has voted to affiliate with the New England Typographical Union. This leaves but one union outside the fold—Waltham. We can now boast of fifty-one of the fifty-two unions in the district being affiliated.

Waterbury Union was one of the first unions to purchase two of the second Liberty bonds.

Providence Union, at its September meeting, acted favorably upon eight applications, obligated six new members and received seven applications for membership. The union voted to pay a pension of 50 cents per week to its resident member at the Home, and adopted a resolution inviting Pawtucket Union to consolidate with No. 33.

At the October meeting of Pawtucket Union it was voted to take final action upon the proposition of consolidating with Providence Union at the November meeting.

On Saturday morning, October 6, announcement was made in the Boston papers of the purchase of the Journal by the Herald. At the time of the closing of the Journal plant there were thirty-two situations held by members of No. 13, with forty-four men and boys on the last week's pay roll. Work being exceptionally good in Boston at the present time makes it possible for those displaced to secure work in other offices.

Representative Dallas is making progress with organization work in Bangor. This is the hardest territory in the jurisdiction, but once those who try to block the progress of the typographical union learn that this organization has been organized to stay in Bangor the better it will be for all those engaged in the printing business of that city.

Several of our locals are engaged in the drawing up of new scales at present, and it behooves each and every member in these locals to attend all of the meetings of the union and to lend assistance to the scale committees in their efforts to draw up agreements that will be a credit to the craft.

By the terms of an agreement signed three years ago, the newspaper printers of Providence were given an increase of $1 per week on November 1. This brings the newspaper scale to $25 per week for day work and $27 per week for night work, with 75 cents per hour for overtime. An increase of one-half cent per thousand was also granted to piece workers, making the day piece rate 12 cents per thousand and the night rate 13 cents per thousand. The minimum number of hours under the piece system on day work is six and one-half hours and six hours for night work.

Hit the Mohawk Trail next June for North Adams.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Columbus Citizen chapel on Tuesday, October 16, dedicated a brand new American flag in the composing room, which had been newly decorated. Herman Maas, of the ad alley, conceived the idea and started a fund to purchase an American flag. The boys fell to with a mighty swing, like taking a poke at the kaiser. Charles Fisher, the business manager, was on hand and gave his hearty approval of the project in a few well-chosen remarks, and wound up by saying Bert Brown, of the composing-room force, was to be the principal speaker, and he would give way by selling all Liberty bonds who wanted them, while admiring "the prettiest composing room he ever saw." Mr. Brown began his remarks, thanking all who helped make this occasion possible by contribution or otherwise. Roy Kidwell, also on the ad side, dropped one corner of the flag and Sam Comfort, operator, turned the other loose when it was unfurled. The speech was as follows:

It is with a feeling of honor bestowed upon me that I speak to you on the occasion of the raising of the American flag in our composing room. In times such as these, one can not help but feel flattered to be chosen speaker on an occasion like this. The war has brought home to us its vivid realities; its sadness and its heartaches; and also it has brought to us the grand patriotism of the American men and women, who this very hour are making sacrifices to keep this emblem of our liberty floating over the grandest nation on the face of the earth. It is, therefore, fitting that you who have contributed to the purchase of this American flag should feel in a sense honored that you were given an opportunity to display some of the patriotism that burns within each one of your hearts.

The Citizen has no slackers in any of its departments. There have been men gone to the front from most every department except the newsboys, and they, too, would have enlisted had they been of legal age. The composing room has now purchased this flag and we are all happy to be in on the purchase, for our own use, of an American flag. But it is with a feeling of solemnity that we here reconsecrate ourselves to the principles which it stands for and look with pride upon the men who struggle in foreign lands to maintain its dignity—and reverence their blessed memory! When the flag of our government is before us and we think of what it means, it inspires us to renewed patriotism, thrills us with its crimson bars and snow white stars in their blue background and fills us with devotion when we think of what great price has been paid for it.

As the drum and fife inspired the soldier on the battlefield, so too, did this emblem of our liberty fill his soul with courage, and midst the roar of cannon he raises his wounded head to get one last look at the stars and stripes, e'en tho' torn by shot and shell.

Dear flag of our nation unfurl
  Thy folds before us again;
As into the battle they whirl
  We pray God to help our men.

Emblem of freedom's own claim
  We'll stand by thy colors true;
One country, one flag, one aim,
  We pledge the red, white and blue.

MISSOURI VALLEY CONFERENCE.

All over the conference district there has been an unusual demand upon local secretaries during the last two or three months for printers from the smaller unorganized towns. The army and navy have taken many printers from the larger cities, with the result that the small towns have been called upon to supply the shortage. The time, therefore, seems opportune for organization work in moderately sized towns that have enough printers to form local unions, since adequate scales and scale contracts will help toward a more equitable distribution of printers. With this idea in view, the conference secretary has asked the International officers for the services of Representative Gadd, of Oklahoma City, for organization work, with especial reference to Nebraska, which is the poorest organized state in the west. Aside from Omaha, Lincoln and Bridgeport, there are no locals in the cornhusker state. Fremont, Beatrice, York, Grand Island, Hastings, Nebraska City and other towns are large enough to support local unions. Representative Gadd has been instructed to give these towns his earliest attention, and results may be looked for in the near future.

The next annual meeting of the conference will be held in Oklahoma City, January 21-22. The local committee having in charge the arrangements for the meeting assure all prospective delegates and visitors a royal time, and those who are acquainted with the Oklahoma City brand of hospitality know these assurances will be carried out. It is said the badges will be similar to those of the Baltimore convention and will contain the portrait of T. W. McCullough, of Omaha, "Father of the Conference." President Scott has promised to be present, and very likely Secretary-Treasurer Hays will attend.

All local unions affiliated with the conference are entitled to three delegates at the Oklahoma City meeting, and it is hoped to break the attendance record next January.

Topeka Union is organizing a sick and accident relief association.

Twenty members of Omaha Union have entered the service of Uncle Sam and more are to go.

St. Joseph, Mo. CHARLES RHODE.

BOSTON, MASS.

On Saturday morning, October 6, the Boston Journal management announced that the Journal had been consolidated with the Boston Herald, and on Monday morning, October 8, the Boston Herald appeared, the heading reading, "The Boston Herald and Boston Journal." This amalgamation of the Herald and Journal was the cause of the men employed on the Boston Journal appealing to the executive committee for priority rights on the combined papers, and at a special meeting and a regular meeting of the executive committee, at which committees from both the Herald and Journal chapels appeared, arguments were presented from both chapels, after which the executive committee voted by a large majority that the Boston Journal chapel had priority rights with the Boston Herald force. The Boston Herald chapel took exceptions to this ruling and on Sunday, October 14, a special meeting of Boston Typographical Union was held at Ford Hall, at the request of the Boston Herald chapel, for the purpose of reversing the decision of the executive committee. Labored arguments were made by committees from the Herald and Journal chapels, and after considerable discussion and a masterful statement by President Edward M. Martin defining the position of the executive committee, a ball ballot was taken, and the decision of the executive committee was reversed by a very large majority. As was to be expected at such a meeting, statements were made which did not bear directly on the proposition before the meeting and it has been stated that many of them were ill-timed and unkind, but it must be conceded that on the whole the officers, committees, and all present were inspired to do the best they could for both sides in the controversy. As in the past, after meetings of this kind, the true spirit of unionism remained and flourished, and so will Boston Typographical Union and the International Typographical Union still live to advance the interests of all the members and continue to do good.

The September meeting of No. 13, after the most important business had been transacted, including the obligation of six new members, on account of a misunderstanding on the part of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the A. O. H., who expected the hall for that afternoon to hear addresses of visiting delegates from historical societies connected with Faneuil hall, also his honor, Mayor Curley, was by vote courteously adjourned at 3 p. m. and the executive committee was empowered to finish whatever business might be necessary.

Clarence DeMar, a book and job printer of No. 13, won the marathon race for the second time in six years during the week of the Brockton fair.

Digitized by Google

The start was made from the Boston Athletic Association headquarters. There were twenty entries from different parts of the country and Mr. DeMar's record for the course was 2 hours 24¼ minutes. In 1911 he won the marathon race conducted by the Boston Athletic Association in addition to the Brockton fair marathon of that year.

Jacob Glaser, secretary-treasurer of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, paid a brief visit to the union headquarters while visiting friends and historical points around Boston.

Joseph D. McKenna, who worked for a time on the Boston American and has been employed on the Advertiser-Record for quite a period, has succeeded George H. Fullerton as superintendent of that plant.

Finlay Bryce, job compositor, left his employ at the Christian Science Monitor jobroom and joined the Canadian regiment, Monday, September 24, and started for Toronto, October 1.

Victor C. Richardson of the Wright & Potter job room enlisted in the army September 24.

At the October meeting of the Boston Union Printers' Baseball Association, held on the 3rd, Andy Rogers was re-elected manager for the ensuing year without opposition.

John H. Cutting, formerly of the Boston Globe, a former member of the Washington and Boston baseball clubs, also night chairman of the Washington Star, has quit the printing business and is now located in New York city writing scenarios and short stories for the movies.

Carl Riley, apprentice member of the Globe, was presented with a wrist watch by the Globe chapel on the eve of his departure for the navy, Wednesday, October 10. Harold Hines, also of the Globe chapel, was presented with a wrist watch by the chapel and is now in training at the Harvard radio school.

Samuel Sherman, a pensioner, died September 27 at the age of 82 years. Many of the old-time book and job printers will remember him having worked in the large book and job offices. Mr. Sherman went to the Union Printers Home the first part of August to end his days, but his physical condition was such that the Home physicians returned him after he had been there about a week. He was then admitted to a state hospital, where he died.

The following letter of praise from A. A. Stewart, teacher of printing in the school of printing and graphic arts, Wentworth Institute of Boston, is self-explanatory, and it is with pleasure I reproduce it here:

Thomas C. Stephenson, Assistant Secretary Boston Typographical Union, 321 Old South building, Boston:

My Dear Mr. Stephenson—I am returning herewith the copy of the souvenir edition of the Printers Home anniversary book, with many thanks for the opportunity of looking it over. It surely is a fine piece of typography, excellent in every way and quite in keeping with the standards of quality and design that have been taught in the I. T. U. educational courses. It seems to me a good example of the practical results of systematic study of sound principles of type arrangement and careful craftsmanship—just the kind of thing that should be done by men who are competent and proud of their vocation.

The only defect, so far as I have noticed, is the absence in the historical record of reference to the late Mr. Prescott. Personally, I am of the opinion that Mr. Prescott has been one of the biggest men working for the interest of printers in this country. Both because of his activities in organization work, in the positions he occupied, in the sincerity and fairness of his expressed opinions, and in the good will which he drew from different interests in the craft, he is entitled to appreciative remembrances from every printing craftsman. Probably this record was made in last year's volume, or before, but I hope he will not be forgotten for many years to come.

Very truly yours,

A. A. Stewart.

The death of John T. Desmond occurred Monday, September 17, at the age of 31 years. He was a member of the Washington Press chapel, was a patient sufferer and a highly-respected citizen.

James L. Leahy has been transferred from the infantry at Ayer to the quartermaster's department in the printing office.

James H. Anderson, of the Transcript, entered eight Rhode Island Reds at the Brockton fair, of which seven were prize winners. A pen of five received first prize and a pullet, second prize. Good for Anderson!

President Freel, of the stereotypers' union, paid his respects to International Representative Bert G. Brady, President Martin, and other officials at the secretary's office, September 28, while here on business connected with his union.

Thomas C. Stephenson.

RICHMOND, VA.

At our meeting Sunday, October 20, the scale was opened for revision and it was decided that only the newspaper end of it would be "tackled" at this time. There are certain conditions which make possible a favorable outcome. Representative D. I. Campbell of Norfolk is here and will remain until the matter of scale is settled.

There was an unusually large attendance at our meeting, due possibly to the fact that the scale matter was to be presented. Several of our members who are not regular attendants—and they are our brainiest and best members—were on hand, including McCullough, Keller, Clare, Coates, Hardwick, Tom Freeman, Joe Beasley, and many others. Mr. Perkins, managing editor of the Virginian, was also in attendance, but he had to leave before the "good-of-order" head was reached, consequently those present were disappointed, as we expected "a few lines" from him. We hope to have him with us often. He carries a card. All the boys on the Virginian think he is the finest man the Virginian has ever had in this responsible position. Of course, the members of No. 90 feel proud of this, although Mr. Perkins is not originally a Richmond man.

Frank Lyon, of Newport News, a candidate for commissioner of labor, was a visitor at our meeting. We are always delighted to have Frank with us, as he was a member of No. 90 for many years. About the only thing that could attract Frank from "the Liverpool of America" (this is Frank's familiar reference to Newport News) would be to land the commissionership. It is said that C. G. Kizer, now chief of police of Norfolk, also member of Norfolk Union, is making a strong effort to land the job. R. F. Don Leavy and A. L. Vonderlehr are not saying much, but feel confident they will get the appointment. C. P. Harwood has said that he is out of the race. The last three are members of No. 90.

Printers and operators are very scarce in Virginia. There are ads appearing in the daily papers for men in the small towns very frequently. They are scarce in Richmond, also. Many requests come to Secretary Woody for men to go to other places.

At last the awards for state printing have been made. Davis Bottom, superintendent of printing, had three sets of bids submitted before he awarded the work. He threw out the first two as being too high. According to a statement in a newspaper of this city, the increases range from 10 to 30 per cent over the last awards.

The chairman of the committee to request employing printers in the city to grant our members 10 per cent increase in salaries reported that Mitchell & Hotchkiss, one of the large open shops, had granted the increase. We hope the few others who have not met the request will do so soon, as there is not the slightest evidence that Mr. Hoover or Mr. Garfield or any other bureau head is doing anything to relieve the wage-earner of the abnormal prices. There is plenty of food, clothing, coal, etc., but lack of money in the pocket of the wage-earner prevents him buying as he has been accustomed to. He finds difficulty in getting necessities.

While Representative Campbell was here last month he was called home by telegraph. We are glad to announce that his wife, who had to undergo a surgical operation, is now getting on nicely.

GEORGE A. JENNINGS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The hand of Death laid heavily upon the membership of No. 1 during the past month, six well-known members of this union having answered the final summons since our last letter to THE JOURNAL. Walter A. ("Shorty") Allen, a well-known job printer of this city, died suddenly of intestinal hemorrhage on September 14, at the age of 45 years. Interment was at Columbus, Ohio, where a surviving sister resides. William F. Jenks, age 49 years, who, although not an "oldtimer" in this city, had a wide circle of friends here and who was well liked by all fortunate enough to know him, died October 2 of typhoid meningitis.

On October 9 Thomas J. Steele, of the Star chapel, one of the oldest members of No. 1, who worked as a proofreader on the old Indianapolis Journal in the "handset" days, and in various capacities on other local newspapers in more recent years, died as a result of a complication of diseases at the age of 75 years.

On Saturday, October 13, William H. Potts, 57 years of age, for forty-one years connected with the Sentinel Printing Company, the greater part of that time as foreman of the composing room, died of organic heart disease while working in his "war garden" at his home. The funeral was on the following Tuesday afternoon at the Broadway Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. Potts was a devout member. The widow, a sister, a daughter and two brothers, of whom one is Robert L. Potts, also of the Sentinel composing room, survive.

On the same day, October 13, John C. Tutt, age 66 years, also succumbed to heart failure after having been confined to his home only three or four days with what was believed to be only a slight indisposition. Mr. Tutt had served in a number of editorial and mechanical capacities on local newspapers and at the time of his death was employed as a proofreader on the Star.

John N. Vestal, age 79 years, one of the oldest members of No. 1, was struck by an interurban car at Vestal's crossing, near Plainfield, Ind., October 15, and died an hour later at Plainfield without regaining consciousness. Mr. Vestal was for many years a resident of Plainfield, where he edited a newspaper in his younger days, and was returning from an afternoon's visit to his old home place when he was killed. He was at various times employed on the several Indianapolis newspapers, but had been on the pension roll for several years. He is survived by three children, Sidney, Mabel and May Vestal, all of Indianapolis. Funeral and interment were at Plainfield, several older members of No. 1 acting as pallbearers.

After considerable discussion of the question and of the principles and ethics involved, No. 1 at its last meeting decided to pay up its per capita tax in full and return to the central labor union with its full quota of delegates. Good results from this move depend largely upon the delegates sent to that body and are awaited with varying degrees of anxiety and interest by the membership. The union listened to an interesting address by a representative of the library war council and made a substantial appropriation to the fund to provide books for soldiers—with the proviso that the books purchased with the money be produced under union conditions. The attendance was again greater than the preceding month and the job scale committee hopes to see a still greater increase in attendance of members from that branch. The hall is at 43 West Vermont street. The secretary was instructed to prepare a "war record book" to contain the names and records of members in military service, and it is up to the soldiers and their relatives and friends to see that the secretary is provided with this information, to the end that the membership of those who go to war may be protected. The application of Henry C. ("Deacon") Kersey for the old age pension was approved.

At the convention of the state federation of labor, recently held at Anderson, Alden B. Hattery, a member of No. 1, was elected fifth vice-president of that organization. Proper support by the federation of legislation of interest to the printing trades was lacking at the last session of the legislature, and it is for this reason that the members of the allied trades of the state are elated over their success in placing a member of our craft on the executive board of the federation.

Alonzo Wiley, of Denver, a delegate from that union to the Colorado Springs convention, spent a fortnight here during the past month. "Lon" is a native Hoosier and for many years was employed on Indianapolis newspapers before going to Denver.

J. T. Rogers & Co., linotype trade plant, are installing three new model 19 linotypes.

"The Long Boy Bulletin" is the name of a little sheet that has made its appearance here. The paper is published by the employes of the News composing room and contains general news and humorous squibs of the members of that chapel as well as letters from several of the chapel members who are with the military forces of Uncle Sam. Sergt. Paul Coleman, Sergt. Frank Borcherding, Chief Musician Arthur Vitz, Corp. Johnnie McCann, Berton Deegan, Russell Lampkin and Huber Martin are the representatives of that composing room "at the front." All have been presented with wrist watches by the day and night chapels.

Work is holding up well at present and there appears no reason to expect a slack period before the first of the year.

FRESNO, CAL.

The raisin city—and this section is blessed with a bumper crop of raisins this year. The very hot weather of our summer season has subsided, and about all hands have had a vacation and returned and settled down for the winter. Among those who took vacations were the following: Messrs. Callaghan, Brown, Salter, Giffen, Tanner, Bruesing, King, Longwell, Williams, Webb and Hunt, who attended the convention, and the pleasant memories of Colorado Springs, the Home, and the meeting of the officers, delegates and old friends still linger.

Members of No. 144 who have enlisted so far are John Chick and Ed Faddis, now in Honolulu; Craig Potter and "Kewpie" Bomer, now in camp near San Diego. Others have been drafted but not yet called.

Death took two of our members recently, Mr. Davis and Mr. Walters.

Kelly Crawford is domiciled at the Home, and reports say he is improving.

William Probit took a traveler and went northward. W. Seaberry departed for the south. W. C. Klemberg, another oldtimer here, also departed.

Jeff Welsh did not say much about it, but married a charming young lady of Hanford. We all wish you happiness, Jeff.

The Herald has moved into a brand new building, built for it. The paper is prosperous and the employes correspondingly happy.

The Republican (morning) has added another linotype, making twelve, and a monotype. Some plant for a town of this size.

At the last meeting No. 144 decided to revise and print its by-laws, and a committee is at work on the same.

The season for duck hunting is at hand. Several have tried their luck, made big promises, but no results so far as we can learn.

We have had a number of tourists lately, among them the following: Mr. and Mrs. Tapper, Stillwell, Baker, Pine, Hadfield, Campbell, Grainger, Kell, Valentine and others. R. A. HUNT.

PASADENA, CAL.

J. W. Wood, former newspaper man, and for twelve years postmaster of Pasadena, is writing a history of Pasadena and has engaged Secretary H. A. Huff to furnish data of all the unions in the city, of which there are eighteen.

President Swerdfiger has gone to Honolulu on a combined business and pleasure trip. Mr. Swerdfiger is greatly interested in Hawaiian music and dancing, and if he can secure the right material he will engage a band of ukulele players and Hawaiian dancing maidens to return with him to the United States.

Burdened with a wrist watch, a new pipe and lots of smoking tobacco, Paul Rowan left for Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash., recently, glad to be chosen as one of the Liberty army boys. The presents were given jointly by the union, the Star-News chapel and the president of the Star-News. Don Gair is taking Paul's place until he returns.

Pasadena's job shops are in a healthy condition as far as unionism is concerned, there being but one or two places—and those are one-man shops—where union help is not employed. One of the growing concerns is that of Ramsay & Burns, which firm has recently found it necessary to rent larger quarters. James M. Ramsay was born in Ohio, but for many years worked in cities in the northwest, principally in the states of Montana and Wyoming. He has been a member of No. 583 for seven years. T. A. Burns is a New Yorker; that is, he was. He is a Californian now and always will be.

Bert Watson and R. A. Benedict, as members of the Elks' band, attended the state convention of Elks at Monterey, Cal. As a souvenir of the trip, Mr. Watson had a snapshot of himself taken in the center of a group of Japanese children.

W. R. Snow, who for many years published a daily paper in Bisbee, Ariz., has secured an interest in the Pasadena Press. Mr. Snow is an active member of No. 583, and has done much in the interest of union labor of all kinds.

Among Pasadena printers who not long ago were working for daily wages, but are now in business for themselves, are T. S. Heskett, A. V. Gilbert, L. P. Mitchell, L. R. Morehouse, E. H. Morse and George Linney. Mr. Linney is not exactly in business, he being one of those fortunate fellows who bought all the Tom Reed gold mine stock he could get hold of when it was cheap.

PHILIP G. GAIR.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

Oklahoma City—in January.

There will be one sad incident to mar the occasion—the annual synod of the great Ecclesiastical Order of the Tom Cat. That is to say, the affair will be convoked, all right, but its ceremonial is a depressive circumstance, enshrouded as it is in a sort of holy immolation. But there is such a lot of rude and clumsy printers that not yet have felt its refining grace and become ennobled in its benediction. We always should be willing to do something for the profanum vulgus of our craft, you know. Supreme Starter of the Cataclysm Harry Berkshire will be here, and—well, leave it to Harry.

Billy Jenkins writes from San Antonio (on the Texas front) and loudly declares, "This is, I believe, the livest and best city in the li'l ol' United States." It is a good town—fat piece scale, six and one-half hours, good beer, etc.—but it has one drawback, it is not in the Missouri Valley conference.

Much shifting about is going on among Oklahoma City linotype operators. In the job offices, especially, is he becoming a most transilient person, if you please. Apparently they have ceased to be a numerous sort. One operator, getting a raise in wage each time, moved three times in one week. Some one asked the galley boy: "Where's Jim; has he gone to lunch?" "No," the lad replied, "he was here a while this morning, but he's workin' over at ——— shop now; got a raise. He may be back tomorrow, though."

Our old friend Grant Tuttle, of Tulsa, states in his Tulsa letter in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL that "W. A. Freeman and W. J. Dowell have gone into business in Oklahoma City." They sure have. Together with the Purcell brothers, they now form the New Printing Company, and the last time we saw them they were so all-fired busy on delinquent tax-list composition they nearly ran past lunch time.

Mr. and Mrs. T. M. ("Tobe") Weatherby, both of them members of No. 283, have completed a new bungalow on West Thirtieth street in this city, and they will hereafter be classified as most worthy proper nouns, and in the possessive case.

Frank B. Faunt LeRoy is the second member of

No. 283, and of the Oklahoman-Times chapel, to enter the great national army, reporting at Camp Travis (San Antonio). "Faunt" is an interesting and affable chap and a numerous coterie of friends certainly wishes him well.

R. E. Walker, for nearly five years a member of the Oklahoman-Times chapel, has yanked his slip and joined the Harlow chapel. Ray recently had the experience of attempting to join the army, and owing to some minor disqualification or other, was four times refused. Says he will try it again.

Another member of the Oklahoman-Times chapel to leave the city is K. T. Goldberg, who has settled himself within the environment of No. 16, which has seemed to have established itself as a haven for quite a number of our former members. "Goldy" had been a member of the Oklahoman-Times chapel since 1913.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Hon. John P. Nichols, whose death occurred recently in Raleigh, N. C., served as a member of congress at the time when there were quite a number of printers in the house, among them Amos J. Cummings, Bob Vance, J. H. Gallinger and others, and he was one of the contestants in a typesetting match, the result of a wager between Amos Cummings and Walter Wellman, the well-known journalist.

Billy Watson was recently called here to attend the funeral of his sister. He has been filling a position on the New York American for a couple of years, after a residence in Chicago for an extended period.

Miss Julia M. Burke has received a number of complimentary letters from residents of the Home and others who have examined her "Scrap Book," which she presented to the library, and desires to extend her thanks to all who have written her.

"Jake" Stadtler has resumed the position of day foreman on the Post, after an absence of about a year on the road for the Keystone type foundry. He is a very useful man about a newspaper and received a royal welcome from his former associates.

"Connie" Ratcliffe, whose death occurred here on September 27, was well known all over the country from having "toured" it a number of times. He had been in poor health for a number of years, living here with relatives, and enjoying the benefits of the International pension. He was, I believe, a native of Alexandria, Va., and served at least part of his apprenticeship in the government printing office, and worked there a number of times in various capacities. He was 64 years of age.

Charley Deming has made a change of base since his return from the convention, having left the Herald to accept a position on the Evening Star.

Joseph Scannell has resigned an $1,800 position in the printing office to accept a clerkship with the shipping board, and Capt. Charles Slack has forsaken the proofroom to engage with the same board. Both are good men, whose friends are pleased at their advancement.

Jesse Lednum is in the training camp at Fort Meyer doing his bit to obtain a commission. He served as a lieutenant in a Maryland regiment during the Spanish-American war, and is of the right stuff that makes good soldiers.

Joseph E. Ralph has resigned as director of the bureau of engraving and printing, after a service of about ten years at the head of one of the greatest establishments of the government, and during that period he has been almost continuously in conflict with the labor organizations in which the people employed there are enrolled. Much was expected of him from the fact that he came from the ranks of labor and carried a union card, but he was found wanting in many respects, and his resignation is not regretted in labor circles. It is reported that he is to head a great corporation, yet to be formed, at a princely salary, which is to rival the bureau in magnitude, and engage in the same line of production.

The announcement of the death of Martin R. H. Witter was a surprise to many friends here, who had not heard of his illness. Mr. Witter was at the head of the International Typographical Union at its most critical period—during the time of the opposition of the Knights of Labor, when Martin Irons conducted the great strike throughout the southwest—and he proved the man of the hour at that trying time. Men here who had intimate association with him while president of the International Typographical Union speak in the highest terms of his ability as an executive and of his high character and pleasing personality.

Miss Teresa McDonald, who has been a proofreader on the Post for a number of years, and who had the honor of representing Columbia Union as a delegate to the St. Joseph convention, has accepted a position in the monotype section of the government printing office, over which "Spadge" Parsons presides.

George P. Nichols, while returning from Colorado Springs, had the pleasure while in Chicago of meeting ex-President Mark L. Crawford, who is still on Uncle Sam's pay roll in a congenial capacity and enjoying good health.

Jimmie Furbershaw, one of our best all-around good printers, is holding a position in one of the shops of Dave Campbell's town, and reports Norfolk A-1, notwithstanding it's awfully dry.

Henry M. Smith died at Kearneysville, W. Va., September 15, of general debility, at the age of 73 years. When John R. McLean became the owner of the Washington Post, Henry Smith came here from Cincinnati, where he had been a member of the Enquirer chapel for many years, and was employed in the Post composing room up to the time of his last illness. He was a man of strict integrity, a most congenial companion, and had a host of friends.

Three fine old printers who had seen long service in the government printing office passed away during the past month: Jacob C. Morgan, at Kansas City, age 75 years; Jeddiah Shaw, at Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., age 81 years, and Augustus L. Roberts, at his home here, age 75 years.

The bindery and pressrooms of the government printing office for months have found difficulty in getting competent men, and many who have come here have shown little disposition to keep in proper condition to do good work, which made some of the foremen look forward to November 1, when this became a dry town, as a good thing, in that it will minimize their troubles, while others are fearful that the government will have no attraction at all for the kind of help it so badly needs.

Ira E. Cole, who works every day as a pressman in the government printing office, was presented on his last birthday with a bunch of American Beauty roses—one rose for each year of his useful career—and it took eighty-eight roses, which is some record.

Thomas E. Kemp and Charles A. Riggleman, of the monotype keyboard section, each recently went away and came back with the added responsibility of a new wife.

Since his father's death Edward B. McLean has given his personal attention to the Washington Post, with the result that the paper is one of the best in the country, and few are more generally quoted. What is true of the editorial and news departments is also true in the mechanical departments; the best of paper and other material is used, and the presswork is first-class, Frank Pidcock, who has charge of the pressroom, being right up to date. He served his time here, then he took to the road, traveled all over the country, and also put in a couple of years in South America, and with the experience returned to his home town a craftsman as good as the best.

Cleveland, Ohio, was recently invaded by a number of Washington printers, members of the Veterans of the Spanish War, included in the number being Capt. Dan Chisholm, James A. Maynard, Alex M. Forrester, William T. Heritage and William A. O'Connell, and they report royal treatment by Cleveland printers.

Help of all kinds is reported extremely scarce in all the downtown book and job shops, and situations are said to be on the hook in some of the newspapers, especially machine operators. This would appear to be a good time to make a drive to clean up some of the non-union places, when inducements can be offered competent men to come out. GEORGE M. RAMSEY.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Albany, 1919!

The October meeting of No. 4 was fairly attended in spite of the beautiful weather and a Paragon board which recorded and showed all the plays in a world's series game, and which was being operated on the floor below. Eight apprentices were obligated, several interesting reports and communications were read, business was transacted in a snappy manner, and of course this resulted in a not long-drawn-out, tiresome meeting.

"Our band" is certainly in right as far as financial backing is concerned, and we are all wishing that their first dance, which will be held on Thanksgiving eve, November 28, will be a success. Henry Crance says they can play "America" now.

George Weiland, who some months ago left this city for San Francisco, Cal., with the intention of giving up the printing trade, has been forced to return, owing to his not being able to get acclimated to the 'Frisco winds—at least, that's what George says. But we are glad he is back with us again, as he is a "live wire."

The printers matinee bowling league, composed of members of this local, started the season October 8. The teams and players are as follows:

Breviers—F. Monette, captain; J. A. Flynn, J. Bearup, E. A. Dory, R. J. Daly.

Diamonds—T. Devlin, captain; C. Stack, R. E. Stiles, B. Harvey, A. E. Hoogkamp.

Long Primers—H. E. Wood, captain; F. Cox, J. J. Stack, J. J. Kenny, C. A. Fry.

Nonpareils—E. D. Jagarzeski, captain; D. V. Coughlin, W. M. Ahern, R. E. Marco, W. E. Welch.

Picas—E. S. Scofield, captain; J. L. Quinn, G. A. Harbinger, J. Fraser, W. B. Higgins.

Minions—H. J. Crance, captain; J. W. Howarth, G. F. Higgins, J. R. Condon, H. W. Schenck.

Agates—J. J. Nolan, captain; E. G. Lechner, G. A. Pfister, F. R. Putnam, G. E. Dillon.

Rubys—J. Shepard, captain; E. T. Graham, J. E. Hanson, T. C. Little, M. Kenneally.

All Albany is bestirring itself in its effort to dispose of its share of the second issue of Liberty bonds, and it is safe to say that there will not be many "slackers" in our ranks.

A new magazine, State Service, is being published by the J. B. Lyon Company, which deals with affairs and news of New York state-wide interest. The first three numbers have been put in circulation, and from all reports the magazine is making a hit.

No. 4 has now ten members on its honor roll.

Thanks, Baltimore, for your boost on page 352 of the October JOURNAL. ALFRED LUSSIER, JR.

At the October meeting former President James M. Lynch was unanimously endorsed for reappointment as commissioner of the state industrial department, and the secretary was instructed to forward the resolution to Governor Whitman.

The union purchased $25 worth of tickets for the ball given by Typographical Union No. 4 band at Knights of Columbus hall on Thanksgiving eve. The band promises to be a credit to the union, and every member should "do his bit" by purchasing tickets for the ball, the proceeds of which will go toward the payment of instruments. At a recent meeting the band, which is of thirty-four pieces, James A. Dunnigan was chosen bandmaster. Other officers elected were Henry J. Crance, president; James R. Bearup, treasurer; Henry P. Moffit, secretary. Weekly rehearsals are being held, and "Jim," the bandmaster, says that they will be capable of entertaining the 1919 convention delegates in Albany with some "Sousa stuff."

The delegate to the state federation of labor, T. D. Fitzgerald, reported the proceedings of the recent session. Mr. Fitzgerald also made a final report from the Labor day committee. The report was received, committee thanked and discharged.

President McCann appointed T. D. Fitzgerald, Earl Scofield and J. J. Skelly as the committee on consideration of subject-matter of all communications for the year.

"Chris" Hoff, all-around comedian, imitator, guitar juggler, and several other things, is "setting 'em up and knocking 'em down" at the Sunday Telegram. "Chris" says you never know what a hard world this is till you slip on a banana peel.

It was reported at the October meeting that Palm Garden and organized labor were on a friendly footing. Former President Rifenberick reported the work of the Patriotic League. John J. Skelly gave a synopsis of the work of the finance committee. Former President Quirk presented the report of the membership committee. Eight future aspirants of No. 4 cards were obligated as apprentice members.

The right of labor organizations to boycott the product of non-union shops among their members, if not done maliciously and with intent to injure, has been upheld by the court of appeals in reversing the lower courts, which enjoined the United Brotherhood of Carpenters from refusing to handle the mill products of Louis Bossert & Son, of New York, an employer of non-union labor. The Bossert firm manufactures building trim. The carpenters' organization prohibited its members from handling it in all construction work and called strikes where it was being used. The union also notified contractors to refrain from using the product of the Bossert company if they wished to avoid labor troubles. As a result of the strikes and boycotting the business of the Bosserts decreased from $525,000 in 1905 to $20,000 in 1911. The opinion of the court was written by Judge Emory A. Chase and is an exhaustive review of the decisions affecting the relations of workmen and their employers. He says:

The voluntary adoption by an association of employes of reasonable rules relating to persons for whom and conditions under which its members shall work is not illegal at common law. An association of individuals may determine that its members shall not work for specified employers of labor.

R. H. Parmelee.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The September meeting of the union was very well attended, the report of the scale committee being the main attraction. At this writing the scale proceedings at Indianapolis are nearing a close, and in a few days the newspaper printers in San Francisco will have a new scale. The union continued its 1 per cent assessment for the street car men who are out on strike, which is now in its ninth week, the men being very confident of ultimate success. The union unanimously concurred in the report of its delegates to the allied printing trades council and has taken an appeal from an action of the council in removing the union label from one of our union printing offices without just cause and over the protest of No. 21's delegates. Our delegates to the Colorado Springs convention submitted a very fine report of the actions of that body. The report was complete in every detail and the delegates laid particular stress on the splendid reception received at the hands of Colorado Springs Union, and also of the many kindnesses shown by Superintendent and Mrs. Daley. President Tracy and Vice-President Bebergall were both unable to attend the sessions of the state federation of labor convention, and at the September meeting Louis A. Bickell was elected alternate delegate.

Since the last letter the following members of No. 21 have gone with Uncle Sam: E. E. Fitzmier of the Morris-Sheridan chapel; B. Goldberg of the Hicks-Judd chapel; D. F. Malloy of the Crocker chapel; Carl E. Nelson of the Sanders Printing Company; Paul E. Nielsen of the Williams chapel; W. D. Rencher of the Dewey Publishing chapel, and Fred H. Richards of the H. S. Crocker chapel, who is now a drill sergeant at Fort Riley, Kansas. The following apprentices are now with the colors: Walter Seward, Jacob Silverman, Louis Guenley, Alfonso Moreschi, George Sorensen and Theodore Steffen, Jr. A letter received from "Bud" Brown (Chronicle chapel), dated American Lake, Wash., says that he is feeling fine and having the time of his life, and that the outdoor life is the only life. Jesse E. Baker (Crocker chapel) graduated this month from the government radio school at Harvard University and is now waiting to be assigned. (You can't keep No. 21 down.) Jack Phillips, of Belcher & Phillips Linotype Company, is a member of one of the local exemption boards, as is also James W. Mullen, trustee of No. 21 and editor of the Labor Clarion. James M. Scott has a son in the army, also Frank Magner.

C. W. Rhodes, who has been reading proof on the Chronicle, has drawn his card and moved eastward. Jesse H. Miller, of the Shannon-Conmy chapel, drew his card and is now setting type in Chicago. Both of these gentlemen were popular members of No. 21, and their many friends did not care to see them leave.

Eddie Sullivan has migrated from Los Angeles and now has his card here, showing up at the Chronicle. George W. Harris, of No. 16, and formerly a member of the Illinois senate, has been in San Francisco for several weeks and may stay here. He says it is the best climate he ever struck.

The Union Printers' Mutual Aid Society held its quarterly meeting October 14, much business being transacted and a good attendance at the meeting. The society adopted an amendment to its laws which will make the fines for non-attendance at the four meetings of the society uniform, all now being 50 cents. The former law was 50 cents for the quarterly meetings and $1 for non-attendance at the annual meetings. An assessment of 10 cents a month per member was levied for one year to pay the dues of members who join the colors. The society has six members now in the service. The report of the secretary-treasurer showed a gain for the quarter of nearly $300 and a total credit to the society of almost $10,000. Two applicants were elected and one obligated.

As this letter is being completed a notice has just been received of the death of Charles E. Boyer at the Union Printers Home. Death occurred on October 11 and burial was at his old home in Spencer, Iowa. He was admitted to the Home about a year and a half ago from San Francisco Union. Mr. Boyer had a host of friends all over the country, and especially in San Francisco, Chicago and Salt Lake. The news of his death came as a shock to his many friends here.

Fred F. Bebergall.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Frequently I am asked how many members from No. 8 are at the Home, or their names. At present writing there are nine: W. O. Edwards, Oscar Langford, W. J. Condon, George Dunnett, J. H. Thousand, John T. Smith, Herman Mulack, H. C. Haysler and Miss Mabel Wells.

Now that the baseball season is over and the fishing season nearly so, would like to see more of the members attend the union meetings. There is always something of interest transpiring.

Under good and welfare of the union it would be interesting to the members if President Hertenstein would again make arrangements to have prominent citizens address the meetings. The few times we had these ten-minute talks were certainly appreciated by those in attendance, and, I believe, is a good opportunity to make valuable friends among business and professional men. It would also be an additional inducement to attend the meetings.

We extend sympathy on account of the death of his wife to Oscar Boecke, mechanical superintendent of the Republic, well known to newspaper printers. Mr. Boecke is a brother of Henry Boecke, foreman of the same paper.

Secretary Woods was the recipient of many congratulations on Thursday, October 18, the occasion being his thirtieth wedding anniversary.

The morning newspaper cocked hat bowling league opened the season October 9 at Tony Sax's alleys, Bremen avenue, North St. Louis. It is a sign of good fellowship to see so many bowlers year after year again taking up this form of exercise and sport.

At the October meeting the following chairmen were obligated: J. F. Kastler, of Woodward & Tiernan's, and W. A. Danbridge, of Curran's.

According to latest reports, Tommy Burns, for a long time machinist on the Republic, has retired and departed for Burbank, Cal., where he has a walnut grove. The reason for leaving St. Louis is attributed to his wife's health. Mr. Burns is a gentleman in every sense of the word, a clever machinist, a conscientious union man, and we wish him well wherever he goes. Ed Moore, since Mr. Burns' retirement, has been in charge of the Republic machines, and is now working on the day shift as head machinist.

Charles Tenny, of the Globe-Democrat, recently made a trip of a few days to Kansas City to visit his father, who was seriously ill.

We note that Hugh I. McSkimming, foreman of the Post-Dispatch, has a new automobile, the latest model Hupmobile.

We understand the Post-Dispatch recently had three women visitors who worked in the composing room of that paper when located on Olive street between Fifth and Sixth streets—Mrs. Finis Marlow, Miss Thornton and Mrs. George Bain, of Idaho, sisters.

Ed Bright is again working on the Republic after an absence of many months. He had an extended trip, visiting San Francisco, Panama canal, New Orleans and other places. Previous to returning to St. Louis he worked for a number of weeks on a farm near Jefferson City, and arrived in this city much sunburned, and certainly enthusiastic about farming life. If he could only get a sixty-acre farm he would soon have more money than any three or four other well-known moneyed men in the office put together, according to his statement.

The following members are reported on the sick list: T. H. Blakemore, John T. Coughlin, M. F. Heili, F. W. Kellogg, E. J. Kreppelt, E. C. McCormack, Gene Plochman, George J. Runge, J. M. Young.

The Globe-Democrat composing room, owing to the recent painting and rearrangement of the stands, along with the addition of monotype casters and racks, looks like a new place. Looks brighter and is cleaner.

President Hertenstein was head of the committee which received the British labor commission while in St. Louis. It is noticeable to our members the frequency with which Charlie is called on for services in numerous capacities and occasions. None more capable.

"Bud" Matlock, of the Chicago American, was a visitor in St. Louis for a few days in October. Having formerly worked at Woodward & Tiernan's and other job offices, he had a busy time looking up old friends.

Albert Sexton, lately of the Post-Dispatch, is now working on the Star. W. H. MacLain is now working on the night side of the Republic. "Bill" Petty, of the Zimmerman-Petty Linotype Company, was a caller on the Globe-Democrat recently. He is evidently prospering, having an up-to-date plant and owning his home, recently built.

While noting improvements in composing rooms, we must not overlook the Star, which now has eleven Mergenthalers and three intertypes, also two monotype casters (non-distribution system). Mr. Steenrod, the foreman, has made numerous changes, making quite a decided improvement in the appearance of this plant.

At the October meeting "Rube" Kendall, of the Star, was elected a member of the executive committee, a vacancy having occurred by reason of the death of L. L. Sawtell.

Along with other improvements on the Globe-Democrat are two new proof presses to take the place of the Washington handpress. For a number of days this press stood, already packed for removal, close to the elevator, as though reminding the workmen of many years of service rendered, a memory of the past—and regretting departure. The delay in its removal, no doubt, inspired the following farewell to the "old Globe-Democrat Washington handpress:"

THE LAST PROOF.

Good-by, Old Sport, your time has come,
You've served us long and well;
But now you're old and on the bum
And you can go to—well,
Why don't you go? Don't stick around,
Your services are not required;
Hey, Elevator! Going down!
This old skate don't know he's fired!

The Old Press creaked his rusty bones
And thus replied in hollow tones:
"You think I am no longer fit?
I go to France to do my bit;
Old junk ain't what it used to be;
They'll make a cartridge out of me.
And some day I'll go howling o'er
The blasted heath of Verdun moor,
And all the Dutch will then confess
The mighty power of the press."

—H. A. Danford.

We regret we report the death of John R. Love, which occurred October 9. Mr. Love was born in Hopewell, Washington county, Mo., and was initiated February 28, 1886. Burial was from Mullen's undertaking rooms, October 11, to Park Lawn cemetery.

Charles E. Robbins died at his former residence, 4418A Greer avenue, after a lingering illness, on Tuesday, October 2, 1917. His remains were laid to rest in Bellefontaine cemetery on Thursday, October 4, the obsequies having been attended by a large number of relatives and friends. "Bob" was born in Kentucky, but had passed most of his life in St. Louis, having for more than a quarter of a century been an employe in the composing room of the Republic, in recent years serving as a linotype operator. Always an active participant in the affairs of that chapel, and of Typographical Union No. 8, he made many acquaintances and friends, all of whom will greatly miss his presence in their midst. He had a high sense of that which is just and right in chapel affairs, and was strictly honest in his dealings with his fellow workmen. Using an office term, he never "worked the hook." Those qualities in a man's character of themselves constitute an enduring monument to his worth. Mr. Robbins was a delegate to the Toronto convention in 1904. The Republic chapel adopted resolutions on his death.

At a special meeting of No. 8 held Sunday, October 21, it was unanimously adopted by a rising vote that the board of trustees be instructed to purchase an additional $15,000 worth of Liberty bonds, the bonds to be purchased through Edward J. Diestelkamp, who was present at the meeting and made a talk on the subject. This now makes a total of $20,000 in bonds, using all the money in the sinking fund. The following telegram was forwarded to the president of the United States:

Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 subscribed to $5,000 of the first issue of Liberty bonds, and now, as an evidence of the patriotism and loyalty of its members to the government in the present crisis, we have decided to place the balance of our treasury, $15,000, in the second issue. This amount has been supplemented by over $30,000 individual subscriptions, and fifty-two of its members have responded to the call at the front.

We pledge the government our solid support in the battle for democracy.

Now that a substantial order from the Globe-Democrat has been received by Barney Chittick, Frank Hill, et al., representing the Intertype Corporation, in the words of the song: "Where do we go from here, boys; where do we go from here?" They worked consistently for this order. At this writing we understand a contract has been signed for the immediate delivery of seven model C intertypes to the Globe-Democrat. It is the intention of the management, as soon as business in general settles to a proper working basis, to have thirty-two new typesetting machines, throwing out all the old ones. There are being installed numerous new racks, stands and other much needed up-to-date material. George Windegger, the foreman, has been and still is a very happy person, seeing so many improvements installed.

The new sick benefit department of No. 8, in operation since July 1, has been working out in a satisfactory manner, according to Mr. Wilson, of the committee, there having been no assessment necessary as yet.

Members of No. 8 and friends of labor were grieved to hear of the death on October 5 of T. M. McAuliffe at Clifton, Ariz., where he had been for about two weeks in an effort to regain his health. McAuliffe formerly was connected with the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association. He was buried from St. Patrick's church, this city, October 12, in which parish he had spent boyhood days. Father Dempsey paid a splendid tribute to the benevolent qualities and friendship of Mac. The funeral was attended by numerous members of No. 8 and representatives of organized labor and prominent citizens. McAuliffe was always the printers' friend in any festivities which they undertook and we will miss him greatly. To his family we extend our sincere sympathy.

During the month George Windegger and Machinist Noortwick, of the Globe-Democrat, made an extended trip, visiting various large newspaper plants in Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Peoria and other cities. While in the last-named city Herman Noortwick greeted his brother Gus, whom he had not seen for some years. Gus has a fine lot of intertypes in his charge which are, according to reports, in perfect running order.

The following members have notified Secretary Woods of having entered some branch of the army or navy: William A. Lay and Edwin R. Kruse.

At the last meeting, during talks on the discharge of a member, stress was laid on the manner of discharge, that it was not done in a gentlemanly manner, being reminded of a warmer climate. This called for a rejoinder from Frank DeWarf, stating that when firing a man a foreman was not in his usually good mood and that one could hardly expect him to modify the dismissal by saying to him quietly, "Well, Dick, old boy! Sorry! I'll have to fire you! Take care of yourself! I wish you well!" A broad smile, to say the least, spread round the hall. The debate closed.

The following applications for the pension were endorsed by the union at the October meeting: W. T. Ratcliff and W. L. Stone.

Steve Tammany, of the Globe-Democrat, has returned after a vacation. We understand part of the time was spent fishing on the Gasconade river in company with Machinist Noortwick. He reports fishing fair. No postcards, however.

The following received situations in various departments of the Globe during October: J. P. Dorsey, E. B. Stewart, F. H. Walden, Otto Wulf, S. G. Katz, C. A. Gallagher, Ed Evers, E. H. Plummer and Joe Bonery (machinist).

Members should see that the label is put on as many jobs as possible, particularly where a proof is submitted.

Charles Deacon, former superintendent of the Home, was in St. Louis for a short time recently. He is looking well and evidently has gained many pounds in weight.

Homer Dunn, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, has become a member of the St. Louis Typo Athletic club.

Information has been received that Oscar Langford's wife is now an inmate of the old people's home at Kirkwood. Mr. Langford is a resident of the Home in Colorado Springs.

We are pleased to learn that "Mattie" Gannon, of the Post-Dispatch, is back at work after a siege of illness. "Mattie" has been employed on this paper many years. Indeed, I am informed the real problem in arithmetic is not "How old is Ann?" but "How old is 'Mattie'?" For answer see Jakie Rau, of the P.-D.

Sympathy is extended to Mr. Ryan on the death of his father, also to Mr. Burke on the death of his mother. Both are employed on the Globe-Democrat.

Quite a number of our members belong to hunting and fishing clubs. Among their number is Tom Costello, of Woodward's. He goes down to Wicks every opportunity for the week-end; says it is cheaper than staying in the city. No wonder, with coal in the city at present prices and brush so cheap in the country.

William Ewing Love, formerly telegraph editor of the St. Louis Republic, was in town a few days on account of the funeral of his brother, John R. Love. He is a member of Chicago Union.

We are glad to hear that Eugene Kreppelt is again at home from the Mullanphy hospital, where he was operated on for tonsilitis.

Secretary Woods was the victim of an attempted holdup during the month by two unknowns. By striking out vigorously he thwarted their efforts at robbery, though not without receiving a cut nose and a badly bruised face. He is again O. K. Glad it was no worse. A few days later Oscar Altman was also held up, according to his own statements, by two highwaymen. "Red" escaped a beating, but experienced a shortage of money.

We learn that Harry Lieberstein, machinist on the Republic, has taken advantage of the circular recently issued by President Scott with reference to positions in the army by sending an application to Washington.

BROCKTON, MASS.

Owing to the fact that there is so much confusion and uncertainty as to the station the drafted men are to occupy, it does not seem advisable to publish the addresses of the enlisted men at the present time. Suffice to state, the members of No. 224 are doing nicely and fast becoming accustomed to the life of a soldier.

It is a well-known fact that the workingman, and union men in particular, fight the capitalists and bosses 364 days a year, and then on election day turn right around and vote for them. Such was the case in Brockton at the recent primaries, when Joe Poitras, one of this city's foremost and active union men, was overwhelmingly defeated for county commissioner. At the same time our own E. Gerry Brown received the democratic nomination for state senator. A man of splendid qualities, he is admirably fitted for this position and he should receive a substantial majority at the coming election. At any rate, he can depend upon the solid support of his fellow-members.

Fred L. Wright, of the Keith chapel, who enlisted in the naval reserve some time ago, has been called to serve the colors.

A corporal's guard (the regular attendants at our meetings) realize that No. 224 is fortunate in having a live and progressive apprentice committee. Hardly a meeting passes but what this committee has some important suggestions to make and their reports are always brimful of interesting and breezy information. Credit should be given William E. Norris, W. C. Harcus and J. J. Reardon for the good work this committee is doing.

At the last meeting it was voted to invest $100 of the union's wealth in the second issue of the Liberty loan.

At least 50 per cent of the membership in attendance at the meetings for the remainder of the year. With the election of officers a short distance away, a job scale being negotiated and several other important matters to come before the union it does seem as though 50 per cent was a conservative estimate. The fourth Tuesday in the month. Be there. CLIFFORD B. MAIN.

PORTLAND, ME.

"The Electric City, 1918."

The impulse was to boost for Scranton, but judging by the letters which the able Scranton scribe is producing for THE JOURNAL, such an effort would be like trying to gild fine gold. Evidently he is akin to what the down east farmers call "a whole team and a horse to let."

The Express-Advertiser has added to its battery of machines a model C intertype with side unit. It has six fonts, ranging from six- to thirty-point, and is equipped with an electric melting pot.

Many changes have been made in the personnel of the local offices. Charles Libby, machinist at the Argus, has gone to the Press as operator. Bert D. Weymouth has become night machinist on the Argus. Mrs. Dorothea Gray, of the Express-Advertiser, has taken charge of a machine at the Press. Bernard Goan has left the Argus to take a position in Bath. Albert E. Brewer, of the Argus, has enlisted in the engineers' corps, printing department, and has been called to Ayer, Mass. Philip G. Owen and John B. Murphy have made application for similar service and are ready to answer if the summons comes. John L. McNeil, who has been in the Express-Advertiser stereotype department since his apprentice days and was its head, is now in Boston in the employ of the Western Newspaper Union.

Helen Marie Cassidy, of the Press linotype force, was married October 15 to Edward Dempsey, of Bangor.

Vacations still go merrily on when subs can be obtained. A. E. Pollard, foreman of the Express-Advertiser, passed his two weeks enjoying suburban trips and attended the Great Sun Council Fire of the Improved Order of Red Men, held in Portland, of which body he was great prophet the past great sun. Allen Cobb and Judson Nichols, with their wives, went to Jackman by auto, thence into the happy hunting grounds. Annie Henley had a delightful auto trip with friends to the Rangeleys. Mrs. Maude Center went to Boston, Mass., and Rochester, N. H. Carl C. Verrill and Mrs. Verrill made the trip to Boston by trolley, as did also the writer, who continued the journey to Barnstable by auto.

J. J. Dallas was warmly greeted by friends on a short stopover en route to Bangor.

No. 66 has five members in the service of the United States and is taking care of their cards.

Everybody is at work, the advertising in the newspaper offices is brisk and linotype operators are in demand. A. GILLIATT.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

The Electric City—one week—1918.
The Diamond City—one day—1918.

One of the convention days will be taken over by Wilkes-Barre. This much has been decided. At the last meeting a committee was appointed to plan and arrange for the entertainment of those delegates and visitors who will attend the next convention. True to our past reputation as entertainers de luxe, we are not to leave anything undone to make this one of the best days of the convention, which at this writing gives every indication of being the largest convention ever held by the International Typographical Union. Those boys that are always to be found on the firing line in Scranton, President "Bill" Hughes, "Commodore" Walton and "Tony" Langan, paid No. 187 a fraternal visit in the interest of the convention and were given every assurance of Wilkes-Barre's co-operation and that our end of the affair will be right up to the queen's taste. Visit Scranton and Wilkes-Barre next August and the "Commodore" will welcome you in both places.

Death visited the ranks of No. 187 during the month and removed therefrom Joseph Wehner, our vice-president, and one of the most active members of the local organization. Mr. Wehner had passed his fiftieth milestone on life's highway. He had always been identified with the printing industry and had been continuously a union man since the termination of his apprenticeship. He was not without honor among his fellow men, having represented No. 187 at the sessions of the Eastern Pennsylvania Typographical Union and at the Baltimore convention of the International Typographical Union, and will be remembered by those in attendance at that gathering as having championed the resolution to extend the time of apprentices on machines from six to nine months, believing the time too short for apprentices to become competent on machine composition, as the law now, as well as then, provided. No duty was too arduous for accomplishment in Joe's hands, no matter how unpleasant. It will be recalled by those who passed through the eight-hour struggle that arrearages for the 10, 8, 7 and 5 per cent had accumulated to such an extent that it seemed to be beyond human possibility to collect. These were placed in Mr. Wehner's hands for collection, and let it be said to his credit that he performed this duty so thoroughly and systematically that all arrearages were satisfied in a remarkably short time and without any hardship on the delinquent. He never faltered in his faithfulness, and it is the writer's belief that his record for attendance at meetings, taking his length of membership into consideration, will average higher than that of any other member of the local body. As chairman of the executive board he made one of the best officers No. 187 ever had in that capacity. For his faithfulness and willingness to be of service we have sustained a loss that will be hard to fill. The following members acted as pallbearers at the funeral: John Schappert, J. R. Haldeman, Charles W. Casey, James McGinty, Frank Veltum and Thomas Collins.

The contest between John Thomas and James McGinty for delegate to the sessions of the Eastern Pennsylvania Typographical Union developed into a red-hot fight and resulted in a tie vote. However, McGinty gave evidence of having a keen sense of political shrewdness and withdrew in favor of Mr. Thomas. That Mr. Thomas will make a capable representative goes without saying.

"Sammy" Gilger has departed from our midst and has left for Pottsville, his former home. Mr. Gilger's health has not been of the best for the past year and we understand that he has given up the business, temporarily at least.

John Graham has returned after spending a few months at the Home. He has resumed his former position as machinist on the News. Mr. Graham is loud in his praises for the curative qualities as well as the efficient management of the Home.

"DICK" RICHARDS.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

There are some members of No. 533 who have an interest in the union. The October meeting lasted from 1 o'clock until 5, which is unusually long for a session to hold, and notwithstanding that a world's series baseball game was being megaphoned play by play within half a block of the meeting hall and the cheers of the fans were continually floating in through the open windows, a majority of those who answered roll call stuck through the meeting.

The scale committee made a final report at the October meeting, and after some amendments and thorough discussion the report was adopted and ordered forwarded to headquarters for approval by the executive council, after which the contract will be submitted to the employing printers. Besides a substantial advance in wages, the new contract includes a number of provisions which are believed will be beneficial to both employer and employe. The present contract expires December 31, this year.

John M. Curtis, former linotype operator on the Advertiser, came from the training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, with a lieutenant's commission and is now stationed at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. "Chic" Frampton and Earl Jamison, former Advertiser reporters, were also commissioned lieutenants at Fort Harrison and are now somewhere in France, having been ordered to the front within thirty days after receiving their commissions.

T. F. Fitzgerald, for some time employed at the Standard and the Advertiser jobroom, was called in September and is now at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va. Fitzgerald was temporarily employed in Logan, W. Va., on registration day and was called from that town. This city has already sent more than the quota of men prescribed by the war department, so that none of the printers registered here have been called. Four companies of militia are enlisted from Huntington.

No. 533 failed to file a report on the subscription to the first Liberty loan, but it was not because we are slackers. The union purchased a $50 bond, and individual members subscribed for about $500 more.

Homer Klem, late foreman at Haworth's, has installed a job plant in his office on First street. Klem is a good printer and deserves success.

L. D. Atkinson, known to friends as "Tommy Atkins," came in from Athens, Ga., and located on a machine "sit" at the Herald-Dispatch. Atkinson is one of eight brothers, all of whom are members of the International Typographical Union, a record that has probably never been equaled in the annals of the organization.

A. J. Brookbank deposited an Atlanta card and is working in the ad alley of the Advertiser. George H. Lane came in from Clarksburg, W. Va., and caught on at the Paragon. George Coburn dropped in from Charleston, W. Va., and operated one of the machines on the Advertiser for a few weeks, but has returned to Charleston. A. T. Matthews arrived with a Springfield (Ohio) card and caught on for a few days before passing on.

Query: Does a "tourist" printer ever land and stay "put?" One of the "gentry" arrived here last spring on the troop train that brought the Second West Virginia regiment from the border. He had come all the way from Chattanooga with the soldiers, after a hard winter in the south, where a day's work had been hard to find. He found work good here and soon dropped into a good situation. He subscribed for a Liberty loan bond on the payment plan, and gave it out that he had "signed up" till the bond was paid for. He hadn't missed a day at the shop for some months. One morning he failed to show up and sent word to the foreman he was sick. A day or two later the foreman received a letter from our friend stating he was not feeling any better and thought a little trip would do him good, and that he had gone to a certain southern town and would be back on the job the following week. Here's hoping he gets back soon. He is a good printer and this local needs union men of his caliber. Such as he "stiffen the backbone" of many a card man and keep the small locals together and striving to better their condition.

The recent changes are rather numerous: William Gibb resigned as foreman of the Standard and went to New York. J. S. Dinkens, who was machinist-operator in the same plant, was made foreman. Fred Nicholson left his machine in the Advertiser chapel to accept an appointment at the state capital on the board of control. Harlow Smith left the Standard to take a machine "sit" on the Advertiser. J. L. Boswell resigned as foreman of the Advertiser jobroom and is operating a No. 9 linotype at the Standard. B. Lovins, of the Advertiser ad alley, was made foreman of the jobroom. J. C. York and Belvard Fannin left the Herald-Dispatch and went to the Standard.

Because this is a 100 per cent union city there is noticeable negligence in the use of the union label. A great deal of printing for local concerns is done out of the city and much of it in non-union shops. A liberal use of stickers and the return of some of this out-of-town printing to the parties using it would cause some of them to "sit up" and surely result in placing more work in union offices, either here or elsewhere. J. L. BOSWELL.

FITCHBURG-LEOMINSTER, MASS.

North Adams, 1918.

Anthony J. Clement has been accepted in the national army and is now at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. Charles F. Warren, on the make-up in the Sentinel office, has gone to Springfield. He is to be followed by Maurice M. Klein, who has operated a linotype in the same office the past five years. Secretary Wallace W. Farnsworth has accepted a position as instructor of printing in the local high school. Bert Tiefenthal, our president, has taken a "sit" on the Sentinel.

The boys are right in the bowling game this winter, having two teams in one league, known as the Typos and News delegations. It is an understood thing that all meetings of the union adjourn to the bowling alleys.

Franklin S. Sherburne, formerly of the Gardner News office, who has taken a protracted rest, is back in his home town. He is representing the Worcester Telegram in Gardner.

In addition to the women members mentioned in my September letter in THE JOURNAL is one other, Mrs. Sina Liljequist, of the Raivaaja chapel.

Two of our members started on tours some time ago. Neither took a traveler nor have they been heard from for so long that it was necessary to allow them to stand suspended for non-payment of dues.

Our committee on apprentices has just started work for the winter, and it is apparent that the next few months will see good progress made in this phase of our work.

Business is good and everybody working full time. WILLIAM R. BYRNE.

SAPULPA, OKLA.

All offices in the town—two dailies, one weekly and one independent job office, signed up for an increased scale, operative October 1, without demur or protest. The former scale, $20 for floormen and operators, $22.50 for machinist-operators and $22.50 for foremen, has been increased $2.50 for day work and $5.50 for night work, with the exception of foremen's scale, which has been raised $2 on day work and $5 for night work. The scale has been signed for but one year, as this union believes that it should not bind itself for a longer time at that scale. As every proprietor in Sapulpa is a present or former member of the International Typographical Union, No. 619 looks for no trouble if future exigencies demand a further increase.

Roscoe Frye, former machinist-operator on the Herald, is in the service, under the first draft, and stationed at Camp Travis, near San Antonio, Texas, and writes that the early morning "hikes" there put it all over showing up at dewy morn to get a Mergenthaler mill started. Frank Price, also of the Herald, is elected for the next call.

George H. Davis, former foreman of the Daily Argus, who was stricken with paralysis about two months ago, has recovered sufficiently to walk with the aid of a cane. No. 619 will try to get him into the Home. Since his illness he has lived with a sister and brother-in-law.

"Bill" Wood, formerly of Sapulpa, but recently foreman of the Okmulgee (Okla.) Daily Democrat, has returned to Sapulpa and is working in Jennings' job office.

G. W. Kennedy, former machinist-operator at Jennings', has left with his family for Kansas City, where he has a machine situation on one of the dailies.

Camp Jones and wife (both machinist-operators) are in Sapulpa, from Pittsburg, Kan. Mr. Jones will run the machine at Jennings' and Mrs. Jones that of the Daily Herald. Mr. Jones is a brother-in-law of "Bill" (A. S.) Green, machinist-operator on the Argus.

Sapulpa in future will attempt to furnish regular correspondence for THE JOURNAL, as every, prideful local union should. The correspondence from the various organizations throughout the country is a much-liked feature of THE JOURNAL, and it is the duty of every local, both to its present and past members, to furnish its quota, not to speak of the benefit to the organization in general and to the localities themselves. CHARLES WOLF.

PETERBOROUGH, ONT.

Some months have elapsed since the last letter from No. 248 appeared in THE JOURNAL. While we could have chronicled a few arrivals and departures, there was nothing of moment transpiring, hence no news. An excursion was held to Harwood in midsummer, the small number of members on board not meriting the term "printers' excursion." However, we came out ahead and had an enjoyable sail. There was no Labor day activity in these parts, little enthusiasm being in evidence along this line. Work kept up fairly well during the summer, and no idle printers were, nor are at present, reported.

The departures from this local to other scenes since our last letter include: George Hamon, to Galt; Arthur Meyer, to Prince Albert, Sask.; James Mason, to St. Catharines; Sam Tovell, to Guelph; George L. Myland, to Toronto; "Benny" Moore, to Regina; Harold Hummel, to the west.

W. A. Pratten, who came to the Review from St. Thomas about a year ago, and has had charge of the job end during that time, has taken an honorable withdrawal card, he having purchased the Barrie Advance, a town weekly. We wish him every success. Mr. Pratten is succeeded by Mr. Westcott, of Hamilton.

Sam Whittaker, from Montreal, and S. E. Anderson, from Toronto, have deposited their cards and are holding down "sits" in the Review job-room. Milton Lake and Ed Shanahan are "hitting the keys" on the Review, the former coming from Kingston, Ont., and the latter from St. Thomas.

The Review added a linotype to its equipment some time ago, making three in this office. The firm also took over the equipment of the defunct Morning Times.

It has been the rule of No. 248 to refuse newcomers permission to start work until their cards are presented O. K. As we can see no reason for any one traveling minus his card, this notice is to warn any coming this way to see that they are in possession of a paid-up traveler.

Ernie Smith was chosen at our October meeting to fill out the year as secretary, in succession to George L. Myland.

David Moore, Albert Martin, Jack Cook and

Fred Dobbin, all of Toronto; Jack Thompson, Ottawa, and Sam Jamieson were all visitors here during the summer, and were welcomed by old associates.

Charlie Brownlee, an old veteran of No. 248, is still on our roster. Charlie is now proprietor of a general store at Minden, some miles north of here. He drops in occasionally to talk over old times. Charles looks well, and from what he says Mr. and Mrs. Brownlee are enjoying a fair share of prosperity in their northern home.

James Browne, of the Examiner chapel, joined the ranks of the benedicts recently. Mr. and Mrs. Browne have the best wishes of the membership of No. 248 for a long life of connubial bliss.

The ranks of our local will not be appreciably diminished by the first draft under the military service act, only one member in the jurisdiction being affected, and he has, we understand, been graded in class A.

No. 248 has met regularly once a month since scale negotiations were concluded in March. For two or three special meetings and one regular session every member was in his place and deeply interested. After the agreement was signed the falling off set in, and some members have not been in the hall since that time. Now, brothers, take counsel with yourselves. Think it over. Things are not what they should be. We don't know why you remain aloof. About twelve or fourteen are regular, and we know why they come. They are deeply interested in their union and their material welfare. It is often truly said, "There is no man who takes less interest in his own interest than the workingman." Our local is a standing proof of this. If you don't like the way things are conducted, come and say so, and see what can be done. We want the other fellow's viewpoint. Suggestions are always in order. If the fault lies with the officers, the annual election will be held Saturday, December 1. Come and nominate your choice. The present incumbents hold no mortgage on their jobs. But come anyway, and a few meetings with a full house will give inspiration to you and the others.

While a Dominion election is right at hand, organized labor in this city is not at this date (October 18) in a position to say what's what in regard to a candidate on the independent labor party platform. Perhaps before many days, and certainly ere this appears in print, the workers here will know what is expected of them. The trades council by that time may have a man away from the post. Some of the members of the trades council think the time was never more opportune. However, the writer is of the opinion that we must learn to creep before we walk. We believe it to be policy to first carry off some honor in the municipal field. Get an alderman or two in the local council, as a starter. There are men—no doubt plenty of them—holding cards in this city equal to holding an alderman's job. This would give the interest and inspiration to try for higher honors. It would gradually work up a healthy appetite, which at present is hardly whetted sufficiently for the larger purpose. There are many places in Canada much larger than Peterborough, with men who stand out prominently in the ranks of organized labor, yet what can labor be proud of today in the house at Ottawa, or at the provincial capitals? We hope and believe that out of seven independent labor party candidates in Toronto, at least two or three will come through winners. We have that much confidence in organized labor there. Later on one or two more will be sent down to represent (not misrepresent) labor. The day is coming, as it has in Britain, when we will have a direct voice in the councils of the nation. But we, like they, must grow by degrees, and be satisfied with a small beginning, seeing in each success the signal for another drive. It is our earnest hope that organized labor in this city will not stand supinely by and wait for some serious situation to rise up and bring them to a full sense and understanding of their opportunities and responsibilities.

A. J. Bolwell.

EASTON, PA.

"Good luck to Scranton, 1918."

At our last meeting, held on October 10, Harry Meyers was elected by a close vote for delegate to the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union.

After scanning The Journal I have noticed Reading classes Allentown, Harrisburg and Lancaster as neighbors and attendants of the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union. What about Easton as a neighbor?

Easton fell in line for another $100 Liberty bond of the second series.

Chris Carroll, a machine operator, has taken a withdrawal card.

Business is the same as for some time—brisk.

TRENTON, N. J.

Warren M. Erwin, of the Trenton Times chapel, was elected secretary-treasurer at the last meeting of the union, replacing Harry F. Hart, resigned.

William Dingethal, Benjamin Wilson and Leon G. Basford were elected delegates to attend the regular quarterly meeting of the New Jersey State Printers' League, held in Newark, N. J., October 28.

Two cards, those of George H. Taylor, Somerville (N. J.) Union No. 628, and F. H. Ingele, Allentown (Pa.) Union No. 534, were received at the last meeting of the union.

Owing to the pressure of other business, Kenneth Buck, of the State Gazette chapel, has resigned as delegate to the central labor union, being replaced by Benjamin F. Wilson.

Carl Dietrich, of the Gazette bookroom, has returned from his summer home at Washington's Crossing on the Delaware. He is the owner of a beautiful bungalow at this historic spot and spends his leisure moments during the summer and early fall at this place.

Martin Jaroni, of the Times chapel, has enlisted in the engineers' division, United States army, and is stationed for the present somewhere in the south.

The scale committee is still at work, with promising outlook, although at present no settlement has been reached.

With the expiration of the contract between No. 71 and the Trenton Evening Times on October 8, that paper changed its policy in the composing room, giving out six-day situations in place of seven-day "sits" as formerly, to comply with International law. The innovation worked out very well under the management of Lafayette Hooper, foreman, and harmonious relations still prevail.

"Doug" Evans, one of the oldest members of No. 71 and a pensioner, is ill at his home in Parksburg, Pa.

Two members of the Times chapel "went and done it" last month, and not to evade service in the army, either, and two lovely Trenton girls are now sporting wedding rings. The lucky chaps were Thomas Williams and Henry George Guire.

Reuben Forker, editor of the Trades Union Advocate, secretary of the central labor union and a member of No. 71, was elected a member of the executive board of the New Jersey Federation of Labor recently at the annual convention of that body at Paterson.

"Al" Chalfonte, machinist at the Times, and a party of gunners brought home several fine deer from south Jersey recently.

"Gus" Homeier is tickling the keys of a new three-deck intertype at the office of Harrison & Van Fleet. LEON G. BASFORD.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.

Bernard Middlebrook, for several years in the mechanical department of the Temple Telegram, has accepted a good position with the Beaumont Journal. Oscar Williams, formerly a member of this local, but now in the signal corps, paid a short visit to relatives and friends in this city recently. Hunton & Liles, who have been conducting a job shop for some six years, sold out recently to Messrs. R. E. Lee, of Waco, and J. T. Franklin, of Fort Worth. T. C. Houston, a member of this local, has joined the colors and will soon be "somewhere in France." Jules Soule, a member of the Belton local, was a caller recently.

Mills H. Starke has arrived and Bernard Middlebrook has departed. STUART SHAW.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Thermopolis and Hot Springs County, Wyoming, is the name of a neat magazine, containing industrial and historical sketches of that locality, received in this city. The paper was printed in the office of the Thermopolis (Wyoming) Independent, on which paper Al Bergseth, a former member of No. 23 and who later spent some time at the Home gaining strength, is employed. "Diversified Industries of Hot Springs County," by Al Bergseth, local editor of the Independent, is an interesting contribution in the magazine from his pen.

Hugo Miller, second vice-president of the International Typographical Union, was in Milwaukee last month on official business, and paid our headquarters a visit.

President James F. Blakely will represent the federated trades council in the American Federation of Labor convention at Buffalo in November, being elected at the last meeting of that body.

Walter Ames, who has been engaged in farming at Three Lakes, Oneida county, during the summer, is back at the linotype on the Sentinel.

Charles G. Conrad, after an absence of about a year in St. Paul and Minneapolis, is back home.

James Garvey, for many years foreman on the Sentinel, who was obliged to lay aside his active duties, due to illness, has regained his strength—glad news to all—and returned to that office, serving in the capacity as efficiency man.

We always like to do things co-operatively—eliminating waste, needless expense and work—thus getting the fullest measure from the efforts contributed. Hence, we take this opportunity and medium to thank President Scott and the various unions and their officials who gathered data and information concerning the state printing in the various state and municipalities in America. This information was collected through International headquarters, Mr. Scott addressing a letter to various locals at my request several months ago. The replies were splendid in some instances and the material was used on the assembly floor in arguments, in an endeavor to have all of the state printing in Wisconsin done under the eight-hour conditions. Many states are in advance of Wisconsin in this matter. We didn't succeed, and this state continues to have about 90 per cent of its printing done in a non-union office—the Madison Democrat. Fourteen democrats, seventy-nine republicans and seven socialists constituted the assembly that permitted this, only the socialists and thirty-four other members voting O. K. The information, however, was not gathered in vain. We have it intact—and next year we will again take up the battle, which will make the third inning. Three times, and out—we shall win—non-union printing for the state of Wisconsin after next year will lose qut.

It is with deep regret and much sympathy for their families that we must chronicle the death of three of our members, two of whom had been for many years affiliated with No. 23 and co-workers with many members—Edward J. Pacholski, Arthur H. Beck and Albert L. Pratt.

Edward J. Pacholski died September 30, of diphtheria, after being sick for but a few days. He was born April 1, 1894, in Milwaukee, and joined No. 23 January 16, 1916. Commencing his apprenticeship on the Free Press, he had continuously been employed on that paper up to his death. He was unmarried, and was one of those likable fellows that won the friendship of all who knew him—being attested to by the respect in which he was held by his immediate co-workers in the Free Press office.

Albert L. Pratt, a member of the International Typographical Union since November, 1890, about sixteen years of which he spent in Milwaukee, died October 8, of Bright's disease, he having taken sick Saturday, October 6, while at work on the Sentinel. He was born September 12, 1869. Coming to this city from the south, he worked some time on the Daily News and Free Press and the past twelve years on the Sentinel. He leaves a widow and several grown-up children.

Arthur H. Beck, a member of No. 23 since April 7, 1899, who suffered a mental breakdown—his mind partially giving way—some five years ago while make-up on the Leader and remaining in that state since, died October 10. He was born July 29, 1878, in Milwaukee, and joined No. 23 April 7, 1899, working on the Journal, Free Press and later the Leader. No. 23 shares with the families the sorrow and grief caused them by the death of our departed brothers.

Milwaukee's newspaper scale, commencing with the week of October 13 and continuing for three years, will be $27 per week for afternoon and $30 for morning papers. The old agreement had expired in August, 1916, and negotiations had been pending since, going through the local arbitration board, with the award made by Judge John C. Karel, as local judge of the board representing the publishers and No. 23, of seven-and-one-half-hour day and $1 increase over the present scale, based on a one-year period. This was not upheld by the International Arbitration Board, as the local award should have, in its opinion, been made on the three-year period—the time period negotiated upon by the local parties to the contract. No agreement apparently could be reached after the International board had remanded the case back to No. 23. The union thereupon decided to remand it back again to the International Typographical Union for a decision on the merits of the proposition. The scale which will prevail for the next three years is the result. Back pay of $2 a week from April 1, 1917, is included. One apprentice to every five journeymen—not more than eight in any one office, is also included. The union's proposition was one apprentice for from two to five men; two for ten men; three for fifteen; four for twenty-five; five for forty. The superannuated scale was raised from $15 to $18, with back pay as in the regular scale. A ten-hour rest period was awarded between shifts. Apprentices will receive during their probationary time $7, with an increase of $1 every six months, and $16 in the final year of their apprenticeship. The publishers had offered No. 23 a five-year contract, dating from the expiration of the old one, at $27 and $30, which, of course, was not acceptable to our members. No. 23 desired this for a three-year period. We have not as yet ascertained the opinions of the members on the new scale and will comment further next month. Back pay is ready for members in the various offices, we are informed.

Considerable provocation has prevailed the past month—and still continues—among the thousands of citizens, and particularly among the workers, organized and unorganized, over the action of the postal authorities at Washington in denying second-class mail privileges to the Milwaukee Leader, a socialist daily, thereby greatly handicapping its usefulness and to some extent injuring it financially. The case, we understand, has been appealed to the United States Supreme Court. Victor L. Berger was in Washington regarding the Leader case and stated that there was no specific charge against the paper, save that the general tone was displeasing to certain officials. The Leader is a socialist paper and the voice of the socialist party here, and has been the one paper in Milwaukee that organized labor regarded as its real true champion in every struggle it has been engaged in in the past, and it realizes that its support will be on the side of labor in every battle for justice and freedom and liberty it may wage in the future. The paper is nearly entirely owned and managed by socialists and labor unions —about 12,000 persons have given of their meager means for its establishment and support. That loyal support is given the paper which has championed democracy was exemplified in a protest mass meeting in favor of maintaining the freedom of the press and against the action of the postmaster-general's department, held October 12, when over 6,000 persons gathered, filling Plankinton and West Side Turn hall, with about 2,000 turned away unable to gain entrance. This meeting pledged moral and financial support, many who were not even readers of the paper making handsome contributions to protest against what they termed unwarranted interference against freedom of the press. Big business, eager to stifle the voice for truth and justice, one after another ceased advertising in the Leader—a great unison of heart they received instantaneously, these gentlemen who have fought labor at every turn—and thus the paper was minus ads for two weeks, necessitating several of the employes seeking jobs elsewhere. If the action of the advertisers was to weaken the Leader, then they adopted the wrong methods, for the Leader is getting the biggest boost of its career. Merchants who hardly ever used space before are coming in with full page ads, and though there were no ads from Gimbel's, Boston store, the Grosses, Schuster's or Kroeger's, the paper had its usual allotted space for ads filled. The paper will be kept going and the merchants who withdrew their ads are coming back again, for they felt the pinch worst. They inferred to the friends and readers of the Leader by the withdrawal of their ads that they did not desire their trade, and so thousands who had patronized their stores because they advertised in the Leader voluntarily went to other stores, many withdrawing their accounts. The apparent knock resulted in a boost.

There was a rush on in the newspaper offices Saturday, October 20, about closing time, even greater than that which accompanies the issuing of an "extra." Anxious people on the street who, expecting possibly to read some big, startling piece of news, waited in vain—the "rush" was created by the boys when the time was at hand to get their back pay.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

We notice a wail from Concord, N. H., about the lack of interest and non-attendance at meetings, and the wail ends by asking advice. We would advise the Bridgeport way—start something. Our local always has interesting and well attended meetings, for the reason that we always have something new to spring, and everybody comes around to help out. At our October meeting the piece de resistance was delinquents, and we advise those who are behind to get a hike on and see the secretary, or something is going "to drap as sure as preachin'" at our next meeting.

By the time Santa Claus arrives we expect to see the Standard-American in its new quarters, with a new press and many new innovations.

Miss M. R. Sherwood, formerly of the New York Life, has been secured by the Farmer as associate editor. Arthur Good has also become city editor in place of Daniel McNamara, who has resigned to enter business with his father.

Billy Brennan and Bob Cherry, of the Herald, and Hugh Plunkett, of the Farmer, went to New York to see the last game of the world series. According to all reports, Heinie Zimmerman was not the only one who "pulled a bone."

Frank L. Winfield, another one of our boys, has joined the colors. Frank was one of our best members and well liked by everybody, and while we miss him greatly, we are glad to see him help our Uncle Sam.

At our October meeting Secretary Cooper presented his quarterly report, which showed an excellent condition of health in our affairs. Our growth has been steady all along and, while we are not making rapid strides in placing new contracts, we are surely making some progress.

We believe that Bridgeport has an honor that few of our sister locals can equal, and that is that one of our members has four sons serving our Uncle Sam. John J. Broadrup is the proud possessor of this honor, and, while he misses his boys, he can truly say that he has given his all to his country. We congratulate both him and his wife, and also the boys, and hope ere long to see the whole family again together.

Charles Bent, operator at the Graph, recently slipped while stepping from a trolley and severely strained his left arm and shoulder. He is now back on the job, and will soon be as good as new.

The Connecticut Press has recently gone into the hands of a receiver. From reports received, the receivership will only be temporary, and the firm will again resume with renewed vigor and life.

ROBERT TARRING.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Nine journeymen and two probationary members were initiated at the October meeting. The organization work conducted by President Hoban has brought results achieved by few unions of the size of No. 53. At every meeting the large number of candidates presenting themselves for admission into the union gives evidence of the wonderful strides being made by Cleveland Union in bringing into the fold the unorganized workers at the printing trade, and if the increase continues No. 53 will be known as the best organized union in the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union.

The four propositions voted on Wednesday, October 17, received a good vote and each carried by a large majority with the exception of plan A of the fourth proposition, which was defeated in favor of plan B. The following is the vote of each proposition: First—For, 485; against, 100. Second—For, 422; against, 164. Third—For, 482; against, 91. Fourth—Plan A—For, 129; against, 403. Plan B—For, 432; against, 107.

In respect of the members of No. 53 who are under service to the government for the war in Europe, the executive committee purchased a service flag, containing a star for every member of the union enlisted in the army or navy. The flag is a large one with a white field in the center, upon which are fifty-three stars, and with room for several more stars, which will find their places when the president of the United States calls for more of our members. The flag is unfurled each morning from a window at headquarters building, and, flaunted in the breezes, it gives voluminous testimony that there are no slackers among us.

Two very enjoyable events were held by the Printers' club last month. On Sunday, October 21, about 200 members gathered at the club and enjoyed an old-fashioned corn roast. Corn was not the only feature of the repast, as the bill of fare also consisted of Bibbs' famous clam chowder, a Dutch lunch and all the trimmin's. A company of cabaret performers furnished entertainment during the afternoon and evening. The other event was the club's annual Hallowe'en party, held Sunday evening, October 28. The clubrooms were decorated appropriately for the occasion and were thrown open to the members and their ladies. The large front parlor was converted into a ballroom, and dancing was indulged in during the entire evening. Two orchestras were engaged, one to furnish music for the dancing and the other for the entertainment provided between dance numbers. Singers and vaudeville artists helped to liven the affair, and all who attended acclaim the party one of the most successful ever held by the club.

JOHNNY HOGAN.

A MODEL NEWSPAPER BUILDING.

[From the Lexington (Ky.) Herald.]

The Herald has received a letter from D. I. Campbell, representative of the International Typographical Union, which it takes the liberty of publishing, with the approval of Major F. C. Leaming, foreman of the composing room. It is a gratification to the Herald to have its efforts to provide convenient, healthful and pleasant surroundings for those engaged in the work of its production approved by the representative of the typographical union.

There is no union that has throughout the years shown keener or more intelligent appreciation of the need for pleasant and healthful surroundings for its men than has the typographical union. It has persistently through a long period used all its influence to secure for its members such surroundings as would enable them to perform the best work and to retain their health. And, going a step further, it has conducted a propaganda to educate its members to take all precaution against preventable diseases, and, still a step further, has provided means for the treatment of its members when they contracted curable diseases.

There is not in the United States a more complete or serviceable sanatorium for the care and cure of tuberculosis than the sanatorium built and maintained by the contributions of the members of the International Typographical Union, all members of that union contributing voluntarily to the maintenance of that hospital for the treatment of their fellow workers who suffer from that disease that is so often developed because of insanitary surroundings.

Recognizing and appreciating the wisdom of the principles advocated by the union, the Herald spared neither thought nor expense in its effort to have for its staff in every department such surroundings as would make for safety of health, for ease of work, and therefore for maximum production. Intelligent self-interest only, it is described by some. Intelligent self-interest it most certainly is, for there is no newspaper in the country of which we have any knowledge the force of which does better or more work than the Herald force.

We should be glad if the readers of the Herald would visit the Herald building and see the arrangements for the comfort and health of its staff. The composing room, in which the members of the typographical union work, is as nearly open as it is possible to make a room with due regard for safety and for warmth in winter. With high ceiling, extensive windows on three sides, with shower bath and lockers, and every mechanical device for rapid and efficient work, it is, we believe, as pleasant and as safe a composing room as can be found in any newspaper plant.

PEORIA, ILL.

No. 29 has the following members in war service: R. E. Dumon in the Brooklyn navy yard printshop, Curtis Bennett and Fritz William Ritter, jr., at Salt Lake City, and Glenn Taylor at Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Fred Howeler has changed from the Transcript to the Star after serving for about twenty-five years on the morning sheet.

Delbert H. Hooker had his hip broken at the implement show. He will be laid up in the hospital for three months or more. Willard Frank has returned after being laid up in the hospital.

MAILERS' DEPARTMENT

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Joe Baker, one of the charter members of San Francisco Mailers' Union No. 18, has had a hankering for traveling for the last twenty years. But with the "ponies," the "fights," the billiard games at Graney's, and the moving picture shows, Joe was always "clean." However, at last his chance came. In May of this year the Automobile Association of America had a convention in St. Louis, and San Francisco was represented by about forty or fifty machines, which made the trip from here in caravan style. Joe got the opportunity to go along as helper. At Denver a stop was made, and that was the last the "caravan" saw of Joe. He was offered a "sit" on the Post and grabbed it. He held on to it, and also to his "mazuma," and last month started for his goal, New York city. From last accounts he arrived O. K. and is subbing on the Times. The members of No. 18 wish Joe all the luck in the world and hope that after he has seen all there is to be seen he will once again come back to us with his happy-go-lucky Joe Baker smile.

ARTHUR A. BERLINER.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Los Angeles No. 9 has, after nineteen months of negotiating, finally succeeded in getting a new agreement with an increase in wages and fourteen months' back pay. We have had meetings with the circulators week in and week out, month after month, in which we have pitted our most learned members, to no avail. We have been continually stalled off and delayed by every known reason the circulators could formulate, and they must have stayed up nights to gather new reasons for delaying a settlement. We have shuffled our committee and put a new member on from time to time, but still the same old story. Our last committee was composed of L. Jack, J. Jarvis and S. L. Brison. They finally concluded that it would be useless to go on any longer, as we were not going to get a settlement without International help. So they recommended that we ask Charles N. Smith to come here and see us through. The patience of our entire membership had long been exhausted and they were willing to go to any means to have our trouble settled. President Smith was wired, got on the job in record time, and immediately stepped over the circulators' heads by going direct to the publishers, thereby getting quick action. President Smith, in his quiet, masterful way, accomplished in a week what we have been trying for nineteen months to do. We can not praise him too highly and earnestly recommend him for a higher office. Our committee members are also praised for the efficient help they have accorded President Smith.

The Schleuter brothers have, after twenty years' residence in Denver, migrated to Los Angeles. They have given up snow and ice for beautiful, balmy, sunny southern California. Casper Maile, of Atlanta, Ga., is another mailer on the new arrival list. He did not come direct from Atlanta, but has been rambling around all the large cities before dropping his anchor here. Casper is so impressed with Los Angeles that we think it will take a team of horses to drag him away from here.

The membership of the Atascadero (Cal.) chapel is growing steadily. There are now four mailers on the job, with another man on the way. If business keeps growing like it has in the past six months we will expect to see a new local on the map.

J. E. CORNELSON.

DENVER, COLO.

W. E. Hedrick has deposited a Toronto traveler, and J. W. Baker, Casper Maile and H. R. Pierce have taken out cards. Joe Baker is from 'Frisco. He has been with us a few months, but wanted to see the world series and the white lights of Broadway. Casper Maile came from Georgia by way of New York and Cleveland. He is now working in Los Angeles, Cal. He is the third man from No. 8 to go there within the last few months, the others being A. E. and E. F. Schleuter. H. R. Pierce is reported in Kansas City. Henry Grauli, apprentice on the Times, was admitted to the union at the last meeting and Barney Frank and George Hoage at the previous meeting.

This local has an appeal before the International Allied Printing Trades Association to lift the label from the Brock-Haffner shop, due to the fact that the Western Farm Life, which is published by that shop, employs a non-union mailer. The printing firm claims it does not hire the mailer, but that it rents a room to the Western Farm Life and the latter hire whoever they please.

TRACY MENARD.

TORONTO, ONT.

There have been seven members of this local found fit, so far, for the firing line, among them President George Webber. Several were rejected outright for weak hearts, etc. Quite a number of eligibles have yet to appear before the medical board.

The job scale has been signed up. The increase was $4 per week, from $20 to $24. Overtime, time and one-half, 75 cents per hour; double time after five hours and for holidays. Term of agreement, August 10, 1917, to June 1, 1919.

The questions at issue between the publishers of the Mail and Empire, Globe and World will have to be referred to the International Board of Arbitration.

President Smith handled the Oklahoma City trouble in a resolute manner, which achieved the results desired after all other means failed, and the other members of the executive council were kept in touch by him with the situation from time to time.

The Louisville boys are very much on the map and your correspondent had the pleasure of renewing old acquaintance, on the way home from the convention, with the members of that local, and shaking hands and congratulating the "dean" of the mailing branch in the entire jurisdiction—Mr. Thompson, of the Courier-Journal, hale and hearty and good for many years to come.

J. G. GALLAGHER.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The tenth anniversary of Portland Mailers' Union No. 13 occurred last month. The union was chartered October 15, 1907, and five charter members are at present active members. They are M. H. Clark, W. G. Raymond, M. F. Kyne, R. F. Clark and E. D. Dewey. The local has steadily grown and now has twenty-five members. As to conditions, seven years of recognition has bettered them as nothing but unionism can.

There have been no arrivals or departures this month and work continues very good for all. One half-day position has been lost by the closing down of a small German-American paper, but subbing is fair on the larger dailies.

Once the proud owner of a fast Harley-Davidson motorcycle, Harry Benson, of the Journal chapel, is now mourning its loss, stolen while he was working.

L. W. PAGET.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

All members employed in job offices have been receiving $1 per week increase since October 1. Our members are now doing the single wrapping of the Literary Digest. This was formerly done by non-union girls. Business Representative McArdle recently held a conference with representatives of practically all the non-union binderies in the city. It was agreed to hold another conference, when a tentative agreement would be drawn up covering these shops. If we should be successful it would make this city nearly 100 per cent organized in the mailing trade.

The warring factions of the bindery unions have amicably adjusted their differences. Business Representative McArdle was a member of the peace committee.

The Greek Herald recently locked out all union men. At this writing the situation is still unsettled.

Joseph McAvoy took out a traveler, returning to Newark, N. J. E. Patrick deposited a traveler.

William Brosnahan, who has been sick for the past two years, has regained his health and is back at the bench. Miss Mary Mahoney, who has been on the sick list over two years, has taken out a withdrawal card. Her health has returned to her, but she will not return to the bench for the present.

William Hoey has been reinstated.

Over 200 newspaper men with their wives and sweethearts gathered at the festive board at Reisenweber's Sunday evening, September 30, to honor William Henry, who has been connected with the circulation department of the New York American for the past twenty-three years. Mr. Henry has been granted a six-weeks' leave of absence and has gone to Los Angeles, Cal. Following the elaborate menu, Business Representative McArdle, in a brief but interesting speech, told of the high qualities of Mr. Henry as a circulator and of the esteem in which he is held by his friends in every branch of the craft. After finishing his speech he presented Mr. Henry with a handsome diamond charm, the gift of his co-workers. The recipient, in a voice filled with emotion, replied fittingly to the remarks of the toastmaster. E. J. McCafferty, of mail and deliverers' union, made an interesting address, lauding the efficiency of Mr. Henry. During the serving of the dinner the assemblage was entertained by William Cronin, Miss Kingsland, Miss Edna Brink, daughter of Louis Brink, foreman of the American mailroom, and the famous jazz band. Among the mailers present were President Fullam, Dan McCullough, John McArdle, Daniel Corcoran, Edward McArdle and the entire American chapel. Mail and deliverers' union was represented by President Joseph Bannon, Secretary J. R. Dunne, David Powers and others. The committee in charge consisted of Louis Brink, chairman; John Geary, Barney Goldblatt, Thomas Rigney and T. T. Overbaugh.

CHARLES A. GALLAGHER.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

President Smith was with us for a few days last month. His visit was much shorter than expected, as the principal publishers of the city came to an agreement with him after a sixteen-hour lay-off.

We are all hard at work now, well satisfied in every way, with each one of us taking more interest in our work. We will prove that we are worthy of what we asked for and got.

The Oklahoman and Times is using the stencil list and blank wrappers, and we are expecting the same system on the Farmer-Stockman in a few weeks.

Ezra ("Tinney") Wright, recently of New York, is with us for a while. He is here on a visit to his parents before leaving for a training camp. He and President Calvin Watkin accompanied a few boys from the pressroom on a pleasure drive to Wichita Falls, Texas.

A. GIBBS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

One of the new ideas employers have recently seen fit to introduce is the profit-sharing or bonus system on a large scale. The object of this—in most cases—is, of course, to eliminate labor unions and the necessity of dealing with men as a collective body. On first glance it looks good. The employer comes to the men who are employed and says: "For the last few years it has been costing this firm this amount to do this much work of this grade, and we believe that if we all work together we can lower the cost of production a great deal. If you will put aside all thought of organization—outside the plant—we will try this scheme, and if we find at the end of a year that we have saved or made more money by the method than we would have by our present (union) plan we will split the increased saving or profit fifty-fifty." That sounds good, does it not? But wait, what is going to become of the men who are not quite up to increasing their output? It may be fine business for the very best men, and the very best men are the only ones who will be able to get on the pay roll. After a while these "very best men" lose interest in the "class struggle" and only think of themselves and what they can earn. They forget their brother workmen who are not quite able to keep up with them, owing to physical infirmities or an inherent inability to work top speed at all times. Also they forget that they will be in this class themselves after they have burned the candle out. If all the industries were worked on this plan what would become of all these men who are not able to qualify for the bonus? Some of them are perhaps too old or have only one leg, perhaps lost one in the fight for their country, or for some other reason they are not going to be able—under the bonus system—to earn a living for families being brought up and from which families we are going to have to take our new manhood when today's bonus earners have worked themselves to death. This new manhood will not have had sufficient food or education to take the place of the deceased bonus earners and we will have gone back three hundred years in twenty. One of the representatives of one of the biggest eastern corporations said: "The men whom the bonus corporations consider inefficient" (meaning the men who have not been able to pass the test they set) "will have to be taken care of in some way. If the private employer will not do it, the state must." This means that men who have been used to getting fair wages, under union conditions, will have to shovel in the street or do some like work for starvation wages. The test the employer would put you through would be the decree which stated how many men would work on the street. We might have too many street shovelers, so the rest would have to go to the poorhouse. Under the present conditions of society we have not been able to get the better conditioned man to pay his proportionate share of taxes, so the street shoveler would have to pay the board of the man in the poorhouse. It is not hard to see that the minimum scale has been proved to be the only right method of equalizing the difference between the fast and slow worker. A slow worker, who works his best or as near his best as physical possibilities will permit, has contributed his all to the good of humanity and to the cause of progress and is entitled to as good a living as the man who can put out twice as much work with no more effort. Therefore, he is entitled to a living or minimum scale. If the employer considers he is making more money off the faster man, it is well that he should pay him accordingly, but it is not right that he should try to keep the minimum scale low enough to pay the faster man the money the slower man needs to live on. They are both human and are giving him the best they have. This earth and its inhabitants were made by a far greater power than any employer, and he should not try to change or censor the natural things in it.

There have been a few cases where the profit-sharing or bonus plan has been successful and of benefit to the union worker, but when a big business, already established, offers to take the workmen into it, then is the time to look out.

A great many unions seem to find it necessary to discipline or fine the same members over and over again, and nearly always for the same few offenses. It seems there are some members who find it easier to pay a one, two or three-dollar fine for failing to show up for work than it is to leave the pleasure they happen to be enjoying at that particular time. They forget that if they do not cover their position it makes the difference of one man on the pay roll, and that they can not blame the manager for thinking there is one man too many in that department. The man who audits the pay roll does not look at any side except the financial one. He does not investigate and learn how hard and extra speedy the remainder of the men had to work to get the mail out on time. That, in his opinion, is no business of his. In his eyes, if the mail can be put out for a less sum once it can be done always, and from his point of view he has good foundation for his belief. We can never adequately convince him of the fact that the men, in their fast work, were protecting the office and not the man who had violated what he should consider one of the most sacred precepts of his obligation. The manager simply thinks we have been holding back the ability we owe him and that he has been cheated all the time. He then starts wondering how many more men he can do without, and the chances are he will try a further reduction in force, and if then he is not able to get the mail out on time his thought is that we are throwing him down.

Many men have done things for which they deserved fining, but it is not always a good idea to fine a man the first time he commits a minor offence. It might be that you would injure a man's pride. Many men like to say "I have never been fined," and if they are fined for some trivial thing they have lost that pride which they had and do not feel so bad over the prospect of more fines. It is far better to assess each member 10 cents to get more funds for the union than it is to fine a man for his first little offence. There is no doubt that we could fine nearly every man in the union if we went to the bottom of all hearts. Nearly every one does something, in his mind or in fact, which is treason to his oath, but most of the time this never happens again. Perhaps it is a good lesson for him, learned by himself and therefore more lasting.

If he were caught and fined his pride would have been broken and he would not have cared so much the next time. It is great to be able to say "I have never been fined," but it is greater to say "I have never deserved a fine." M. R. GRAY.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

We received a letter from President Charles N. Smith stating that mailers are needed in New York, Boston, Toronto, Denver and Kansas City. Louisville has six subs at present, and I hardly believe any of them will leave.

John Gallo has returned from Minnesota, where he had been for the past six months. John Hawkins paid the mailers of No. 16 a visit and is now on his way back east.

At the last regular meeting the mailers adopted a proposition that any members drafted or voluntarily offering their services to Uncle Sam, his dues will be paid by the organization.

EUGENE E. NORTON.

THE SECRETARY'S LETTER.

In the past month our local in Oklahoma City has been successful in establishing a wage scale of $18 per week after a strike of a few days' duration. This is an increase of $6 per week over the amount of wages formerly paid to them. President Charles N. Smith assisted them greatly, as he has also assisted the mailers in Los Angeles, Cal. He is now in Chicago and we hope he will be successful in helping us to success. We have been successful in establishing our job scale of $4 per day in every office in the city, so you can see that the matter before the union will be to adjust our affairs with the newspapers, which we hope will be adjusted without any difficulty.

TESTS OF UNIONISM.

[From the Des Moines Register.]

If the publishers and other employers of printers throughout the United States had the opportunity by a downward turn of the thumb to put the International Typographical Union out of existence it is doubtful whether many of them would vote in favor of such action. This is not because they altogether approve of the terms of their agreements with the union, but because the typographical union has demonstrated that its word is as good as its bond. What it has agreed to do it does.

The worst enemy of unionism is the union man who votes to violate a working agreement into which he and his employer have entered, or who violates it without a vote. The last argument of the employer who does not want to recognize the union is that labor organizations will not live up to their word.

A victory has just been won for union labor in Montana which is more important than the winning of a strike. It consisted in a refusal to strike, by Anaconda copper mine employes, when the question was put to them in a referendum.

Aside from the question of violating contracts, the question of a strike at this juncture in American affairs by men who are vitally connected with the production of means of defense imposes a new responsibility upon labor organizations. The union which takes advantage of the country's war crisis to force concessions without consideration of their justice, and the manufacturer who utilizes the demand for his product to hold up the government for an unjust price are alike strong in selfishness and weak in patriotism.

Union labor can bequeath no better heritage to the next generation than a consistent record of devotion to the nation's interest during the war, and only one as good, which is the establishment in all branches of unionism of as firm a respect for an agreement as has been found to exist in the unions with which the newspapers of the country are called on to deal.

DADDY IS A GRAND OLD DAD.

Daddy was a grand young dad,
Just the boy for mother;
They together life did plan,
For daddy was a grand young dad.
A dimpled little baby fair
Came to bless the home;
Happy, then, we all declare,
For daddy was a grand young dad.

CHORUS:

When daddy takes his ease,
After toiling all the while,
We will do our best to please,
For daddy is a grand old dad.
Making this a joyful day,
His friends gathered round him;
He chats and smokes away,
For daddy is a grand old dad.

Three score years and seven
He labored hard for us,
Now make his life a heaven,
For daddy is a grand old dad.
And when life is well along,
We have our sunset days;
Then all will sing the song
That daddy is a grand old dad.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES AND CORRESPONDENTS.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

Communications for the correspondence department of THE JOURNAL must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. No communication will be published that does not bear the full name of the writer.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a cardholder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 20th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of a list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. Hays, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

LABOR DAY IN 1917.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

Labor day this year finds the trade unions of the country divided internally along what appears to be new lines, but what are in reality much the same lines as before so far as the elements on both sides are concerned. There has been for some time a struggle between the members inclined toward socialism and the members opposed to the doctrines loosely grouped under that name. The struggle has changed in its issue but not in its alignment of forces. The agitators of the socialistic wing are now conducting a campaign for peace, regardless of the terms or the consequences of any peace now obtainable, and the former opponents of these agitators are supporting the government of the United States and by every means in the power of the organization which they control are actively and passively aiding it to accomplish its purposes in the war.

There is every reason to believe that the large majority of membership in the American Federation of Labor, which is the dominant body in organized labor, are wholeheartedly with the men at the head of their body and are loyal Americans in this crisis. Their proportionate numbers are probably larger than before the war, in fact; for some of the radicals have left the ranks of the federation and have gone out to join the I. W. W. Others have lacked the courage to cut loose, have remained within the unions and have diligently practiced a sort of sabotage there by trying to wreck the organization from the inside; but these are outweighed in influence, if not in noise, by the more conservative and patriotic element of the membership.

The federation has faithfully fulfilled its pledges to abstain from injecting domestic industrial strife into the complications of the nation and what strikes have been experienced during the summer have been originated from sources associated with the newer organizations, and have been, it is noticeable, neither extensive in scope nor prolonged. The older type of unions is truly American; the rivals of recent formation profess a cosmopolitanism that in its effect could, under conditions of today, result in nothing but the establishment of an autocracy which would make all our nation, labor and capital alike, subject to tyranny such as the world has seldom seen before.

KEEPER, HE'S OUT AGAIN!

[Composed by L. L. Harmon, after finishing an eleven-months' period on the "graveyard" shift at the state printery, Olympia, Wash.]

"The moving finger writes, and having writ, moves on."
Each cycle sees new faces adorn the "graveyard" shift;
Vexing the "comma-chaser" until he prays they'll drift.
Thorns in the side of the foreman, bane of the man on the bank.
They complain of "rotten copy;" they aver the machinist is rank;
In winter they "yell" for new stoves, coal and plenty of wood,
In summer for gentle breezes from the snow-capped crest of Hood.
There's joy at the state print'ry when their final checks are "wrote,"
For these cantankerous birds get the public printer's goat.

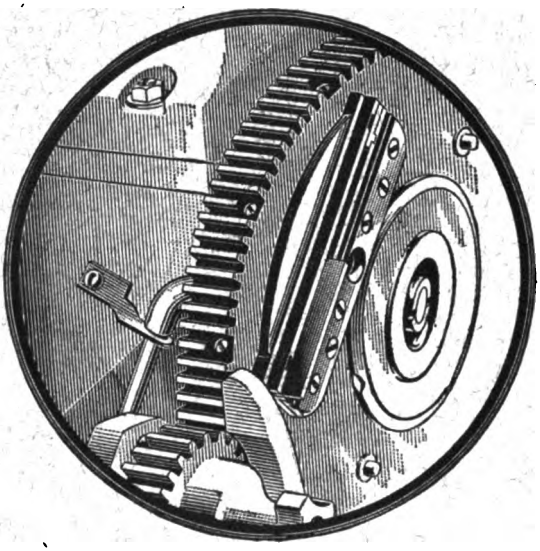
TRADE LINOTYPE MARK



Changing Linotype Mold Liners

By simply loosening three screws in the mold disk the liner is ready for removal.

The new liner is inserted and the screws tightened. The entire operation requires less than 30 seconds.

No loosening of nuts and removal of bolts; no removal of the mold cap; no necessity for working barehanded on a hot mold disk.

Mold simplicity is a Linotype feature which turns minutes into dollars.

UNION'S DECISION UPHELD IN THE NEW YORK SUN PRIORITY CASE

Because of its completeness the decision of Justice Lehman in the New York Sun priority case is herewith reproduced in full. This action was brought in the supreme court in New York city and the decision was published in the New York Law Journal on Friday, November 9.

This decision dismisses the complaint with costs, and will be interesting to the offices and members of subordinate unions. The first part of the decision gives a history of the controversy, and is as follows:

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM, PART VI.

BY JUSTICE LEHMAN.

Hamilton v. Rouse, etc.—The plaintiff is a member of Typographical Union No. 6, which is a subordinate body or local union of the International Typographical Union of North America. Prior to July 1, 1916, the plaintiff was employed as a compositor in the printing office of the Sun Printing and Publishing Association, which published two newspapers, the Sun and the Evening Sun. The Sun Printing and Publishing Company is a member of the Publishers' Association of New York city. The Publishers' Association of New York city has an agreement with Typographical Union No. 6 in which it is provided that:

"Foremen of printing offices have the right to employ help and may discharge (1) for incompetency, (2) for neglect of duty, (3) for violation of office rules (which shall be conspicuously posted) or of laws of the chapel or union, and (4) to decrease the force, such decrease to be accomplished by discharging first the person or persons last employed, either as regular employes or as extra employes, as the exigencies of the matter may require. Should there be an increase in the force, the persons displaced through such cause shall be reinstated in reverse order in which they were discharged before other help may be employed. Upon demand, the foreman shall give the reason for discharge in writing. Persons considered capable as substitutes by foremen shall be deemed competent to fill regular situations and shall be given preference in the filling of vacancies in the regular force. Any substitute with an office standing of at least sixty days is eligible to a vacant situation. This section shall apply to incoming as well as outgoing foremen."

This provision of the agreement between the Typographical Union No. 6 and the publishers' association is in exactly the same language as section 121 of the general laws of the International Typographical Union of North America and is obviously intended to secure for the members of the union freedom from discharge for reasons not connected either with the proper performance of their duties or a decrease in the force of the office where they may be employed. Under the by-laws of the International Typographical Union it is further provided that no member of any local union "shall sign an individual or private contract with any employer agreeing to work for any stated length of time. The union alone has the power to contract for conditions, wages and hours," and there is a further provision that it shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by expulsion, for one member of the union to make application for the position of another member of said organization in any office.

By the provisions of the constitution of Typographical Union No. 6, in every printing office where three or more members of Typographical Union No. 6 were employed, they were required to form themselves into a chapel and elect a chairman and secretary, and such a chapel existed in the printing office of the Sun Printing and Publishing Company and maintained a priority list showing the priority standing of the various members of the said chapel who were compositors employed in its printing office. There were fifty-five compositors employed in the office, of whom seven came after the plaintiff on the priority list. A similar chapel of members of Typographical Union No. 6 existed in the printing office of the New York Press Company, Limited, which printed and published a newspaper known as the New York Press. It employed fifty-eight compositors in its printing office. The stock of this company was owned by the Frank A. Munsey Company and the stock of the Frank A. Munsey Company was owned by Frank A. Munsey. In addition to printing the New York Press, the New York Press Company, Limited, set up in its composing room type to be used in other publications of the Frank A. Munsey Company.

In or about the end of June, 1916, the Frank A. Munsey Company purchased a bare majority of the stock of the Sun Printing and Publishing Company, and thereupon, and on July 1, 1916, a notice was published in the Sun and in the Press by Mr. Munsey, stating: "Yesterday afternoon I took over the control of the Sun and the Evening Sun, having bought from William C. Reick his majority interest in these two newspapers. My object in this purchase was to bring the New York Morning Sun and the New York Press together; that is, to consolidate them into one newspaper."

When this announcement was made, the executive committee of Typographical Union No. 6 was called together by its president. This committee, according to the allegations of the complaint, admitted by the answer, had power under the constitution of the union to "take such action as may be deemed necessary (except ordering a strike) in all matters involving the interest of the craft and the good and welfare of the union," and had power "to pass upon the questions arising under the provisions of the general law of the International Typographical Union of America, known as the 'priority law,'" which I have hereinbefore set out. This committee thereupon issued the following order:

"At a special meeting of the executive committee, held on July 1, and called by the president of the union, upon being informed by the chairman of the Press chapel that an amalgamation of the Press and the Sun was to take effect on Monday, July 3, the following action of the committee was ordered forwarded to the chairman of the Press and Sun chapels, respectively: 'It is the opinion of the executive committee that in the change to take place in the Press and Sun chapels there will be no absolute elimination of either paper; in other words, there will be an amalgamation of both papers. In view of these circumstances, there should be an amalgamation of the two separate forces. Therefore, the executive committee believes that the only possible decision to arrive at for the purpose of making up the new force to publish the Sun or the Press, as you please, is that it should be made up from the priority list of the combined forces of the Press composing room and the Sun composing room. That a sufficient number of employes shall be taken from this combined list, in accordance with their priority standing in both composing rooms, to fill all the situations in the composing room of the new paper, whatever its actual name may be. In accordance with the foregoing decision the Sun and the Press chapels are hereby ordered to immediately appoint a committee from each chapel to act conjointly and prepare a joint priority list for the new chapel. There will be no reduction in either force until the end of the financial weeks of the respective chapels. Fraternally yours,

"S. Oppenheimer,
"Secretary of Committee."

In accordance with this order the chapels in the offices of the Sun Printing and Publishing Company and of the New York Press Company, Limited, proceeded to prepare a joint priority list (the Sun chapel, however, acting under protest). Prior to this time, and on or about July 30, the New York Press Company, Limited, made a bill of sale to the Sun Printing and Publishing Association transferring to it the newspaper known as the New York Press, together with the name, circulation and good will, its membership in the Associated Press, and all books, records, papers and documents pertaining to that newspaper. It retained, however, its physical properties and assets. From that time the Press Company ceased to publish the New York Press. On July 3 the Sun Printing and Publishing Association printed in its printing office and published a paper under the name of the Sun and New York Press.

After a short time, in accordance with its preconceived plan, the words "and New York Press" were gradually reduced in size and finally eliminated entirely from its front page and retained only in the "masthead" on the editorial page in small letters. The New York Press Company no longer continued to operate any printing office. The Sun Printing and Publishing Company continued to issue only one morning and one evening newspaper, and continued to employ only fifty-five compositors as theretofore, and took these compositors from the joint priority list prepared by the Sun and Press chapels, and on this joint list more than fifty-five compositors had priority over the plaintiff, and he was therefore discharged. He has now brought this action against the union, of which he is a member, after exhausting all remedies within the union to secure the reversal of the action of the executive committee in ordering the preparation of the joint list. Upon the trial of this action the plaintiff claimed that the case involves only a question of law and that this question has already been decided in his favor both at special term and in the appellate division upon a motion to overrule a demurrer to his complaint.

Justice Lehman then proceeds to analyze the evidence presented and clearly upholds the soundness of the decision made by the executive committee of No. 6, which was subsequently sustained by the union, by the executive council and by the Baltimore convention. Continuing, Justice Lehman says:

It is true that most of the facts stated above are set forth in the complaint, but, as pointed out by Justice Hotchkiss in his opinion at special term, the court could not, upon the motion before him, consider the question of whether "a consolidation of the two printing offices would justify a consolidation of the priority lists," for the complaint not only fails to allege such a consolidation, but affirmatively alleges that the Sun and the Press newspapers were never amalgamated. On the trial these affirmative allegations are denied, and the answer alleges that "there was an actual amalgamation and consolidation of the two printing offices." It therefore becomes necessary to examine the effect of the evidence produced on this issue.

The "priority law" in terms gives the foreman of a printing office the right to discharge for certain reasons, and though it does not expressly provide that the foreman may not discharge for other reasons, it is quite evident that the law must be so construed. On the other hand, if the priority law is so construed contingencies may arise not contemplated either by the union or the publishers' association through which some or all of the terms of the priority law may become inapplicable to a particular situation, or at least which may require further action on the part of the union in order to put the provisions of the priority law into operation.

SUCH A SITUATION SEEMS TO ME CLEARLY TO ARISE WHERE THERE IS A CONSOLIDATION OR AMALGAMATION OF TWO PRINTING OFFICES. If such consolidation can be held as a matter of fact to create a new entity, then technically a new hiring would arise from the time of the creation of that entity and previous service would give, strictly speaking, no right to obtain such employment, for the priority law is intended to secure to the union men the right to retain positions rather than any advantage in obtaining them. On the other hand, if the consolidated or amalgamated printing office be regarded as the continuation of the former separate offices, then the union must take some action to prepare some kind of a new priority list. If in this case there was a consolidation of the printing offices of the Sun Printing and Publishing Company and of the New York Press Company, Limited, it seems to me that there can be no doubt but that the executive committee had the right to require the preparation of the joint priority list of which this plaintiff now complains.

ON THE OTHER HAND, IF THE PRINTING OFFICE CONDUCTED BY THE NEW YORK PRESS COMPANY, LIMITED, WAS SIMPLY ABOLISHED, THEN THE ACTION OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE WAS WITHOUT AUTHORITY. The proof that the newspaper known as the New York Press, printed and published by the New York Press Company, Limited, was actually consolidated with the newspaper known as the Sun, printed and published by the Sun Printing and Publishing Company, seems to me complete. As stated above, the papers made joint announcement that they would be consolidated. For some time a newspaper was issued under the joint names of the two former papers, and even today the Sun bears on its masthead the words, "The Sun and The New York Press." The paper so issued contains many of the features of the New York Press and uses the Associated Press franchise of that paper. The mailing lists of the two newspapers were combined, the advertising contracts of the two papers were carried out, and the officers of the New York Press Company, Limited, the editorial staff of its newspaper and most of its office staff, etc., assumed similar offices or positions in the Sun Printing and Publishing Company and on the newspaper published by that company.

Upon the evidence presented Justice Lehman concluded that there was a complete consolidation of the two newspapers and not a discontinuance of one newspaper. On this point the decision says:

In my opinion these facts show almost beyond argument a complete consolidation of the two newspapers and not a discontinuance of the publication of one paper, even though the consolidated paper is generally known as the Sun and continues to date its issues from the date when that paper was first issued. It is urged, however, that the unions deal with printing offices and not with newspapers published in those offices and that it does not follow that because the Sun and the Press newspapers were consolidated that the printing offices were also consolidated. This argument is sound so far as it goes. The printing office of the Sun Company printed not only the Sun, but also the Evening Sun.

If, after the Sun and Press were consolidated, the Sun Company had continued to print the Evening Sun in its own office and to allow the Press Company to print the consolidated paper in its own printing office, it might well be argued that no consolidation of the printing offices was then effected. Similarly the printing office of the Press Company was used to set up type for other Munsey publications, and if after the Press Company had sold its newspaper to the Sun Company it had continued to maintain its printing office for other work, a different situation from that presented in this case would have arisen. Here the printing office of the Press Company was used for outside work only as an incident to its work on its own newspaper. When that newspaper was sold to another company it naturally needed no printing office. Practically all of its staff was absorbed in the staff of the purchasing company, in so far as no permission from the union was necessary, and when the union issued the order here complained of the staffs of the two composing rooms were also combined.

These acts, in my opinion, constituted a consolidation of the printing offices. It is true that the consolidated printing office was owned by the same company which had previously owned the printing office of the Sun and was continued at the same place by the same number of men and with practically the same equipment, but all of these facts seem to me of minor weight in the determination of the question before me. The union is not interested in whether or not the ownership of a printing office changes or whether two corporations legally amalgamate, nor in the place where a printing office is conducted, nor in the equipment of the offices. The union is organized for and interested only in the terms and conditions of the employment of its members, and it deals with the problems of the workmen. Legal abstractions of corporate entities or ownership do not concern it. When, however, one corporation purchases essentially the entire business conducted by another corporation in its printing offices, conducts that business jointly with the business formerly conducted by it in its own printing office and uses the staff of the former printing office of the vendee in its own printing office, there is a complete consolidation of the printing offices in all that concerns the union or its members.

In concluding his decision Justice Lehman calls attention to the well-established rule that the constitution and by-laws of our organization constitute a contract between the union and its members, and that if the procedure required by our laws is strictly observed, if all proper evidence is given full consideration, the decision is final and there can be no cause for action for damages, even if the court might have reached another conclusion. The remainder of the decision follows:

For these reasons I have decided that for the purposes of this action there has been a consolidation not only of the newspapers, but of the printing offices. Moreover, I believe that under the evidence presented here the decision of the union in ordering the making of the joint priority list is conclusive upon me. I have, of course, not overlooked the fact that upon the argument of the demurrer the court, both at special term and in the appellate division, has decided that the decision of the union was not conclusive. Justice Hotchkiss, however, has pointed out that the courts will review the action taken by association tribunals "sufficiently to ascertain whether the tribunals (a) followed the procedural terms of the agreement and (b) correctly construed and applied the substantive terms of the agreement" (citing Robinson v. Dahm, 94 Misc. 729).

In other words, the rule seems to be that since the constitution and by-laws of the association constitute a contract between the association and its members, the association can not disregard the terms of its own contract or construe it contrary to its language and intent. On the other hand, in this case it appears that under the constitution of the union the executive committee has power to pass upon questions arising under the priority law; and this provision of the constitution is also a part of the contract between the parties. The decision of this committee, created an arbiter by the contract of the parties, is binding upon them on all questions of fact which may arise upon which it has power to pass under a proper construction of the constitution and laws.

In this case when the union was notified that after July 3 the New York Press and the Sun would be published as one paper and necessarily in one printing office, the committee was called upon to decide whether under the circumstances a consolidation of the printing offices would be thereby created. They have decided this question, and there was at least some evidence to sustain their finding that this condition necessitated considering the Sun office as part of a consolidated office.

SINCE THERE WAS SOME EVIDENCE ON WHICH THEY WERE REQUIRED TO PASS UNDER THE CONSTITUTION, AND IT DOES NOT APPEAR THAT THEY HAVE DISREGARDED THE PROCEDURE PROVIDED IN THE CONSTITUTION OR MISCONSTRUED ITS PROVISION, THEIR DECISION ON THE FACTS IS FINAL AND CAN GIVE RISE TO NO CAUSE OF ACTION FOR DAMAGES, EVEN IF THE COURT MIGHT POSSIBLY HAVE REACHED ANOTHER CONCLUSION. Complaint is therefore dismissed, with costs. Plaintiff's findings passed upon. Defendants have failed to submit findings, but may settle decision containing findings heretofore approved and additional findings in accordance with this opinion.

Accidentally Killed.

More than passing notice should be paid to the death of the Rev. Albert E. Ogg, who was killed by a train near Chicago, Ill., on October 13, for the reason that after he had ceased active work at the printing trade, having served as chairman of what was known as the navy branch of the government printing office, Washington, D. C., he went to India as a missionary for the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the time of his residence in India he always kept in the hands of Secretary Seibold, of No. 101, sufficient money to cover several months' dues in advance. On his return to this country, which was on account of ill health, he went to the Union Printers Home, where he remained for several months, and then took up the work of his choice in New York. He was about to assume a pastorate in New Jersey and had gone west to visit relatives before doing so, when he was accidentally killed.

The mortuary benefit of Mr. Ogg was paid through Columbia Typographical Union No. 101. The secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, on behalf of the widow, wrote a letter of thanks to Secretary Seibold, in appreciation of the promptness displayed in payment of the benefit, and asked that he "convey to the local and International Union our appreciation of your prompt and early action."

The Public Service Reserve.

Under the auspices of the United States Department of Labor, there has been organized the public service reserve, which will be a national body of adult males who desire to find their place for effective service to the country in the present war, and to make it easy for the government to locate them when it needs help from men of their capacities.

It is a purely voluntary plan. All adult males are asked to enroll, but there is no obligation to serve. It is intended that all who enter the service of the government through this reserve shall receive a fair compensation for their services should they be called upon to render assistance in the great world conflict.

The plan has been endorsed by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor and also by many international unions. There are no penalties attached to the plan, no conscription or any form of compulsion. It is merely a registration scheme, created under the department of labor, which is to keep on file the name, location, qualifications and industrial status of every man willing to take a job in a war industry.

If the war proves to be a long one—and many there are who believe it will—there is no telling what effect it will have on the printing industry. Already the soaring price of paper, newspaper consolidations and suspensions, suppression of seditious organs, and the increase in the letter postage and second-class rates have made serious inroads in our trade. That there is now little unemployment is caused through many of our members enlisting or being drafted in war service. The catalog houses will be hard hit by the increase in postage, and much printing will be eliminated by concerns that heretofore have been heavy buyers of printing. This may mean slackness in our trade, and for this reason printers should avail themselves of the opportunity to enroll in the federal public service reserve. Should opportunity for employment present itself, the printer would be placed in that branch where his services would be the most valuable. It might be in a munition plant, and then again it might be in some clerical capacity.

When applications for men are made to the public service reserve, information as to those who might be available for such purposes is given to the applicant, and the members selected as probably available are notified of the opportunity. It is then entirely voluntary with the members whether they will accept the opportunity or not. In the present crisis most men are eager to work where they will be most useful to the country. The plan established by the department of labor will constitute a mobile reserve of volunteers who, through a simple appeal to patriotism, can be induced to enter employment in the government or in essential industries as the need may arise.

Members of the International Typographical Union have proved their intense patriotism to Uncle Sam on every occasion when the opportunity has arisen. They will not be slackers in this instance. A letter addressed to the Public Service Reserve, U. S. Department of Labor, 1712 Eye street, Washington, D. C., will receive immediate attention, and a blank will be sent to the applicant to be filled out and returned.

The Montreal Newspaper Scale.

In negotiations recently concluded with the Montreal newspaper publishers Montreal Typographical Union No. 176 was successful in abolishing the piece scale. This sweat-shop system had been in effect in the jurisdiction of No. 176 for many years, but the persistent efforts of the union for a number of years past to relegate it to the scrap heap finally prevailed and the time scale has taken its place.

The abolition of the piece system in itself was victory for the union, but when considered in connection with the increase in wage secured, and other advantageous provisions of the agreement, it can be said that No. 176 has made real progress.

Digitized by Google

Under the old agreement the scale was $23 per week for day work and $24 per week for night work. The new agreement was adopted October 27, about three months' time being consumed in negotiations, and provides for the payment of the new scale from September 15, which was the expiration date of the old agreement.

The agreement runs for five years and the increase in the scale is $4.50 per week on evening papers and $5.50 per week on morning papers, this increase being spread over the length of the agreement, as follows: Members employed on evening papers receive an increase of $3 per week for the first two years and 50 cents per week increase for each of the succeeding three years, making the scale during the last year of the contract $27.50. Members employed on morning papers receive an increase of $4.50 per week for the first two years and $1 per week increase for the last three years, making the scale for the last three years of the contract $29.50.

Other important features of the agreement are:

Seven and one-half hours constitute a day's work for all machine men employed on night shifts. Under the previous scale, eight hours constituted a day's work on time machines.

The ratio of apprentices is one to twelve journeymen or major fraction thereof, the limit in any one office being three.

Overtime is to be paid for at the rate of time and one-half for the first three hours and double time thereafter, and all work performed by day shifts on evening papers on holidays calls for double price.

A provision of the agreement also provides that in cases of discharge the member affected may appeal to the chairman, who shall appoint a committee of three to make an investigation and report to the chapel, and if the appeal is sustained by the chapel the member must be reinstated pending decision by the executive council on appeal.

When consideration is given to the scale prevailing in Montreal five years ago, the progress of No. 176 is deserving of special notice. In 1912 the day scale was $16; in 1914 it was increased to $20; in 1915 to $21; in 1916 to $23, and in 1917 to $26, the total increase in the five years being $10, or 51¼ per cent. And the night scale has been increased in about the same proportion.

No. 176 is to be congratulated on this remarkable showing.

First Vice-President Barrett assisted the local committee during the last two weeks of the negotiations.

Transfer of War Service Printers Inexpedient.

At the Buffalo session of the Board of Governors of the International Allied Printing Trades Association, held last month, resolutions were adopted requesting that branch of the war department having jurisdiction in the matter of printing supplies, etc., give printers in the service, where possible, an opportunity to work at their calling, and that printers' apprentices in the service be given an opportunity to complete their apprenticeship. The resolutions were also introduced in the convention of the American Federation of Labor and adopted by that body.

Under date of November 24, the following letter, which is self-explanatory, was received:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS.
WASHINGTON, D. C., November 24, 1917.

J. W. Hays, Secretary-Treasurer, International Allied Printing Trades Association, Newton Claypool Building, Indianapolis, Ind.:

SIR—1. Receipt is hereby acknowledged of the reference to this department for consideration of your letter of the 16th inst. addressed to "Honorable Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States," transmitting resolutions adopted by the Board of Governors of the International Printing Trades Association at a regular meeting November 5 and 6, 1917.

2. In the matter of this resolution, you are advised that this department fully appreciates the valuable and loyal assistance your organization has rendered in disseminating the requirements of the army for the purpose of recruiting printers for service in the surveying and printing battalion, Twenty-ninth engineers.

3. The number of typographical printers and pressmen required for this organization is not large, and through the assistance of your organization mentioned above has now been fully met in the units ordered.

4. It has been the policy in making the selection of men for this service to enlist, transfer, or induct only men of mature experience and ability in the various professions and crafts employed in prosecuting this work. Nor is it deemed advisable or expedient now to undertake completion of the training of apprentices in this or other crafts or trades while serving with the army in France. The men in the field are there for a most serious purpose and their immediate and close attention to the accomplishment of that purpose is so necessary that all other activities must be left in abeyance.

5. The use of troops in the field must be subject to the discretion of the commanding officer. Anything which interferes with his freedom of action is apt to lead to disaster, as has been exemplified lately in Europe. You can therefore readily understand that a compliance with your resolutions in so far as they refer to troops in service is impracticable.

Very respectfully,

W. M. Black,

Major-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

No. 80 Alive to Its Interests.

Much favorable comment has been bestowed upon Kansas City Typographical Union No. 80 by both press and public for its action in voting unanimously to apply for membership in the local chamber of commerce. At the same meeting it was also decided to procure a service flag with thirty stars for the members and apprentices who have joined the army and navy. The Kansas City Journal, under the caption, "Printers Prove Loyalty," made the following editorial comment:

Certain groups of workingmen have done so much of late to bring reproach upon the name of organized labor that it is distinctly refreshing to note the fine patriotism of the Kansas City Typographical Union No. 80, which voted unanimously last Sunday to join the chamber of commerce and to procure a service flag with thirty stars upon it in honor of the members of the union who have joined the army and the navy. By this act the printers of this city have at once arrayed themselves actively with the forces that are working for the good of the nation and the city. That there was not a single vote recorded against either proposition is an inspiring testimonial to the individual loyalty of the men who represent what is, perhaps, the best governed and most intelligent class of men within the ranks of organized labor.

By voting to join the chamber of commerce the members of the printers' craft have signified their earnest desire to promote the welfare of the city in which they have their homes and in which they are rearing their families. They have at once broken the ridiculous tradition that organized labor is a thing apart from active good citizenship. It is not true and never has been true that members of organized labor are not just as vitally concerned in the advancement of civic affairs as other people. But it is unfortunately true that members of many labor organizations too often confine their entire interests, economically at least, to the promotion of their various trades. There is no good reason why organized labor should not become actively identified with civic organizations of a broad and beneficial character. Certainly in most of the aspects of life the good of organized workers is identical with the good of all other workers and producers. The chamber of commerce has but one paramount object, and that is to plan and strive for the upbuilding of this community. In this idea every reputable citizen should share and do his part. Having set this splendid example of civic pride and civic patriotism, it may be hoped that many other unions will fall in line with the members of the typographical union.

It was most fitting that the printers should decide in favor of a service flag. They have a right to feel proud of their members who have joined the fighting forces in the battle for humanity and democracy. It is reassuring to reflect upon the sanity, the good judgment and above all the patriotism of that craft which stands at the head of all labor organizations. With such a demonstration of pure Americanism there need be no fear that the seeds of sedition will ever take root among the printers. They have put themselves on record and they have honored themselves by honoring their country and their city.

A number of our local unions have taken similar action to that of No. 80. In some places their representatives in local chambers of commerce or similar civic bodies have been instrumental in throwing much printing into union establishments, and also keeping at home local printing that had previously gone out of town.

"Skee" From "Chi."

An Associated Press dispatch last month said that the flotilla printer is one of the busiest Americans with the United States naval forces now in European waters. He is a native of Chicago and holds a card in Typographical Union No. 16 of that city. "Skee" from "Chi," he is called by the bluejackets, who seem to have a nickname for everything.

"Skee" does not go to sea. He works on board a vessel that swings at a buoy in a seaport. From morning until night he is kept busy on the avalanche of orders that come rolling in for printed stuff for the whole flotilla. Of late he has been doing some work for the British naval forces. His workroom resembles a small jobbing office, and is tucked out of the way in the stern of the flotilla flagship. It is fenced off with warnings against intrusion. All type is set by hand and printed on a small hand press electrically operated.

The flotilla printer has made a hit by the way in which he illustrates the program he prints of the entertainment provided by the bluejackets at their shore clubhouse, turning out rough wood cuts for the cover of the program. Recently he had a picture of the clubhouse, with sailors arriving in limousines. Girls who are barred from the clubhouse are frequently depicted waiting in automobiles for the sailors to reappear. His latest attempt was an illustration of that part of West Forty-third street, New York, known as Melody lane, to go with the burlesque of that musical thoroughfare produced by the sailors.

The flotilla printer is a chief petty officer with the rating of a first-class printer. With the increase in pay made recently he gets $62 a month as printer, and to this must be added his $50 a year allowance as a naval reserve man, which brings his monthly stipend up to $70. Uncle Sam pays his board and lodging. A satisfactory feature is that there is no composing-room foreman to boss him. He alone in the whole flotilla knows his job.

The Label Trades Department.

According to the usual custom, the union label trades department of the American Federation of Labor held its annual session the week preceding the opening of the convention of the American Federation of Labor, which met this year at Buffalo, N. Y. The delegates to the label trades convention voted that organizers of all affiliated internationals be required to agitate for union labeled products when addressing meetings, that all forms of advertising union labels be encouraged, that a strictly union label store in New York city be subsidized in the hope that a chain of such stores may be established gradually, and the organization of auxiliary leagues of women be commended. An effort will be made the coming year to federate or amalgamate a number of label organizations that are now co-operating in a loose way in order that greater efficiency may be obtained.

J. W. Hays, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union, was reelected president, a position he has occupied for several years, and John J. Manning, of New York, a member of the garment makers' union, was elected secretary-treasurer. This position has been vacant since the death of Thomas F. Tracy a year ago. Secretary-Treasurer Hays was also a member of the delegation to the American Federation of Labor convention from the International Typographical Union. He was appointed by the executive council in place of H. W. Dennett, of San Diego, Cal., who was unable to attend the convention.

Popular Liberties in Wartime.

Writing in The Public, of New York, Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of labor, at Washington, reassures those who fear that we are losing the right of free speech and a free press. He says:

> In the north during our civil war, as also in the south, arbitrary suppressions of free speech and free press and free assembly were frequent. President Lincoln exiled Vallandigham for giving aid and comfort to the enemy by abusing freedom of speech. Under Lincoln's command soldiers took possession of two New York daily papers, suppressing their publication for days, on account of a news article, published innocently, which might have given aid and comfort to the enemy. None of those war-time violations of democratic guarantees extended over into peace times. With the end of the war came an end to arbitrary acts except in the conquered states; and there they did not long persist. Furthermore, there was soon greater freedom of speech, press and public assembly, both in the north and in the south, than there had been before the war. So far from retarding democracy in the United States, that war, in the waging of which constitutional guarantees were temporarily suspended for military reasons, actually advanced it. Without abolishing any of the democratic freedoms we had previously enjoyed, it gave us new ones and made the older ones more secure. Guaranteed liberties are more likely to be lost, let this be repeated with emphasis, by gradual innovations in time of peace and over long periods than by specific suspensions in time of war.

THEODORE EICHHORN, secretary of Typographical Union No. 77, was elected one of the three city commissioners of Erie, Pa., at the November election, receiving the highest vote cast and leading the non-partisan ticket. The office carries a salary of $2,500 and is for two years. Four years ago Mr. Eichhorn led the ticket for the same office, two years later losing by five votes. In the opinion of his friends, this year's result was "some come-back."

At the Colorado Springs convention, Delegate Hetherington, a member of the composing-room chapel of the Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Mass., announced that a Liberty loan bond of the value of $50 had been purchased by that chapel and would be donated to the Home endowment fund. The bond has been delivered. It is of the 3½ per cent series and numbered 582,682.

Robert B. Gragg, for several years secretary of Typographical Union No. 751, Corpus Christi, Texas, has the sympathy of a wide circle of friends among the craft in the loss of his son, age 20 years, a member of the naval guard on the ill-fated Rochester, torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine on November 2. For two weeks his parents were kept in suspense until word was received that the brave lad had died from exposure and had been buried on the Irish coast.

The Journal has received a copy of the Soldier's Handbook, edited and compiled by William A. Goulding for the soldiers in training at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash. Goulding is a well-known printer and for a number of years was a member of Chicago Typographical Union No. 16. The handbook fully lives up to its title, as it contains a vast amount of information and instructions for new soldiers. It is thirty-two pages and cover, 7¾ x 10 inches, and has a large amount of advertising. Its editor was attached to the headquarters troop at the time the book was compiled, but expected to be transferred to an infantry regiment later to help straighten out and instruct the new national army. Goulding is a Spanish-American war veteran and re-enlisted when the Mexican trouble started a couple of years ago.

Robert F. Salade, a member of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, has written a technical book entitled, "Plate Printing and Die Stamping." It is a "how" book. It tells how the printer can install and operate a plate printing and engraving department. One chapter explains what mechanical equipment is essential; another chapter is devoted to make-ready on plate presses and die stampers; still another chapter tells how the plates and steel dies are made, etc. The business side is given special attention. Helpful suggestions about selling the product are offered. The volume is neatly bound in cloth; seventy-seven pages; illustrated. Press of the Oswald Publishing Company, New York. By mail, $1.10. Mr. Salade is a professional editor, author and special writer. He has written many business and technical articles for the printers' magazines and for various trade journals.

"Condensed History of the International Typographical Union and History of Typographical Union No. 79, Wheeling, W. Va.," is the title of a volume of a hundred pages, beautifully bound in brown and gold, and compiled by Edward Sims, a member of No. 79. "Ned" Sims needs no introduction to the union printers of the country. He has been in the forefront of the battle for advancing unionism ever since he obtained his card, and that was more years ago than we care to tell. The book he has written must have consumed a vast amount of time in research and poring over union archives, but the result is a monument to "Ned" Sims' zeal and energy in the union movement.

H. J. Gaither, who was a resident at the Union Printers Home and recently vacated, has the following to say in a letter to Secretary-Treasurer Hays:

> The Union Printers Home is certainly a great institution, and Providence must have had a hand in the selection of the present superintendent and Mrs. Daley.

Martin Grady, president of Kalamazoo Typographical Union No. 122, has been appointed by President Wilson on the appeal board for the first western Michigan district. Mr. Grady is being congratulated by his friends in that jurisdiction on receiving the appointment.

THE publishers of the Times-Journal, Bowling Green, Ky., purchased bonds of the second Liberty loan in the sum of $1,300 for themselves, and in addition presented a fifty-dollar bond to each of their married employes who had been on the paper for a year. Several members of Typographical Union No. 629 were benefited by this action. The seven active members of Bowling Green Union have $450 invested, in addition to the bonds given them by the Times-Journal management, which speaks volumes for their love of country.

SECRETARY McADOO has announced the selection of nine "excess profits advisers" to assist the treasury department in administering the war revenue act. All of the men are recognized leaders in the business and economic world. Among the number is T. W. McCullough, associate editor of the Omaha Bee and member of Typographical Union No. 190. Mr. McCullough has two sons in the army. His acceptance of the appointment by Secretary McAdoo is evidence of his readiness to do his full share in the support of the government's war policies.

MEYER LONDON, the lone Socialist in congress, representing a district of New York city's east side, calls upon those of his political belief to support the government and be loyal to the United States. He says:

> If I am expected to appeal for fair play for the socialists in congress, I want to appeal to the socialists for common sense in their attitude in this great crisis of the world. You talk about the capitalistic classes as being responsible. Why, that is nonsense! Do away with the stupidity of the masses and there will be no more war! I am not interested in why Morgan is for war. I know. It is the same reason as the Krupps are for war. But after the United States declares for war there can be no choice. I owe a duty to every man who has been called to the service of his country, and that is not only that nothing shall be left undone to provide him with everything he needs, but to get this fight over as soon as possible.

THE city of Niagara Falls, N. Y., is now solid union, typographically speaking, with the exception of a one-man shop. This condition is the result of the Niagara Falls Gazette and Courier-Press last month signing an agreement with No. 233. This terminates a twelve years' fight to unionize the Gazette. There has been a fighting group of trade unionists comprising the membership of Niagara Falls Typographical Union, and one of the leaders, and one who is entitled to a large share of credit in the final outcome, is M. F. Ohmann, secretary of No. 233. He was continually in the struggle and never lost his courage.

MEMBERS of the chapel of the composing room of the Indianapolis News have started the publication of a monthly paper called the Long Boy Bulletin, named after the war song written by William M. Herschell, of the editorial staff of the News. About a dozen members of the News chapel have enlisted in the army or navy, and the Bulletin is devoted to news of these men who have gone to war, and contains interesting chapel gossip. If subsequent issues are kept up to the standard of the first number, the Long Boy Bulletin will fulfil its purpose in being a gloom dispeller to the boys in camp and on the firing line.

THE whole Russian printing trade of New York city is now practically organized, through the unionizing last month of the only paper printed in the Russian language that employed non-union printers—the Russkoye Slovo. Ten men are employed on the publication. They will work the same hours as the Yiddish newspapers, with only a slight change in the scale and the same concessions that the other Russian papers have, until the expiration of the present contract in 1920.

ACCORDING to reports made to Secretary-Treasurer Hays, the following amounts have been subscribed to the second Liberty loan: Union subscriptions, $40,700; chapel subscriptions, $214,450; individual subscriptions, $399,050. Total, $644,200.

the Milwaukee Sentinel, and John W. Campsie, of the Milwaukee Wisconsin. President J. F. Blakely, Secretary-Treasurer Thomas and D. L. Angell appeared as representing Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23.

After some discussion held in a general way upon the Milwaukee situation, the contending parties from Milwaukee were asked to hold a conference outside the board room in an effort to reach an agreement, or at least to make a definite statement to the board of just what the claims of each member were. This request was agreed to and the interested parties withdrew.

The board then took under consideration a San Francisco newspaper scale controversy. At the request of the San Francisco publishers and the officers of Typographical Union No. 21, Chairman Kellogg and President Scott had agreed to arrange for the arbitration of the differences between the local parties, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., July 7, 1917.

George A. Tracy and H. W. Norton, 701 Underwood Building, San Francisco, Cal.:

The undersigned representatives of the International Board of Arbitration agree that questions in dispute in San Francisco newspaper scale may be submitted to a board composed of equal number of representatives of publishers' association and International Union, they to select odd man as chairman satisfactory to No. 21 and San Francisco publishers. Procedure of arbitration code to be followed in hearings to be held in Indianapolis. All expenses to be equally divided between San Francisco publishers and No. 21.

M. G. SCOTT.
H. N. KELLOGG.

President Tracy and Mr. Norton appeared before the board and stated that after several weeks they had been unable to agree on the fifth member of the board, the names submitted by Chairman Kellogg and President Scott having been rejected either by the representative of the San Francisco publishers or by the representatives of the San Francisco Union. President Tracy stated that he was convinced that the representatives of the local parties would not be able to select a chairman, and said that the representatives of the union would accept any man named by the International board. Mr. Norton protested, and insisted that the board had no right to assume the authority to select a chairman for the arbitration board. In executive session the board decided that it had authority to select a chairman under the provisions of section 6 of the code.

George C. Hitt was nominated by the members of the special standing committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and was accepted by the representatives of the International Typographical Union, and Chairman Kellogg and President Scott were instructed to arrange for the hearings, Mr. Hitt having agreed to serve as chairman of the board.

The contending parties in the Milwaukee case then appeared before the board and made a statement regarding the conference which they had held. This statement was discussed for some little time and the board once more requested that they retire and give it further consideration and bring to the board a signed statement as to the exact points of difference between them which they desired the arbitration board to settle. This request was agreed to and the Milwaukee parties once more withdrew.

The arbitration board then gave consideration to a controversy existing between the Boston daily newspapers and Boston Mailers' Union No. 1. Vice-President Smith, as a representative of the Mailers' Trade District Union, replaced Vice-President Barrett on the board during a consideration of this case, after which adjournment was taken to 10 A. M., October 9, 1917.

OCTOBER 9, 1917.

The International Arbitration Board met at 10 A. M., as per adjournment, with all members present and Chairman Kellogg presiding.

The board took up the consideration of the controversy between the Milwaukee Typographical Union and the Milwaukee local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and the representatives of these parties submitted the following:

OCTOBER 8, 1917.

To the Members of the International Arbitration Board, Indianapolis, Ind.:

GENTLEMEN—The following is a summary of what has been done in the negotiations on the most important points in the pending contract of Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23 with Milwaukee Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association.

1. TERM OF CONTRACT. The union contends for a three-year contract dated from August 8, 1916; the publishers contend for an agreement for three years, to run from the date the contract is signed.

2. WAGES. The publishers offered the union its full demands for journeymen, apprentices and superannuated members; the journeymen's wages to be $27 a week on the day side and $30 a week on the night side; which is an increase of $3 a week on both sides. The publishers offered to increase the superannuated member scale from $15 to $18 a week. The publishers offered the union the scale asked for apprentices, as follows:

For the probationary six months...	$5 00
For the following six months.....	6 00
For the following six months.....	7 00
For the following six months.....	8 00
For the following six months.....	9 00
For the following six months.....	10 00
For the following six months.....	11 00
For the following six months.....	12 00
For the following six months.....	13 00
For the following six months.....	14 00
For the following six months.....	16 00

3. HOURS. The union asked for seven-and-one-half-hour day or night; the publishers asked for an eight-hour day or night. On the lobster shift the union contends for a six-and-one-half-hour night and the publishers for a seven-hour night.

4. APPRENTICES. The union contends for a sliding apportionment of apprentices as follows:

For two journeymen and up to five journeymen regularly employed, one apprentice; for ten journeymen regularly employed, two apprentices; for fifteen journeymen regularly employed, three apprentices; for twenty-five journeymen regularly employed, four apprentices; for forty journeymen regularly employed, five apprentices, provided, that in no case there shall be more than five apprentices in any one office. The publishers offered the union a new apportionment on the basis of one apprentice for every five journeymen.

5. FOREMEN. The union wants the wages of foremen to be $5 per week in excess of that for journeymen. The publishers contend that the contract shall be left as it is, and the wages determined by the office.

6. GOVERNING APPRENTICES. Section 8 of apprentices in the new scale provides that during the last six months of the fifth year of apprenticeship an apprentice shall be employed on a typesetting or typecasting machine. The publishers contend that the word "may" should be substituted in place of the word "shall."

7. STARTING AND QUITTING TIME SHIFTS. The union's proposal contains a new clause that ten hours shall intervene between quitting time and starting time of the next workday; the publishers are opposed to this new clause.

The various concessions offered by the publishers have been made with the understanding that the proposition as a whole must be accepted. Up to this time all propositions of the publishers have been rejected. Respectfully submitted,

JOHN POPPENDIECK, JR.,
JOHN W. CAMPSIE,
Representing Milwaukee Newspaper Publishers' Association.
J. F. BLAKELY,
O. H. THOMAS,
D. L. ANGELL,
Representing Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23.

After some discussion on the statement presented by the representatives from Milwaukee and the general situation in Milwaukee, the representatives from that city were excused, and the board again took up the mailers' controversy in Boston and rendered the following decision:

In the case of Mailers' Union No. 1 against the Boston Publishing Company the board decides that the extra or syndicate work shall be restored to the conditions in effect prior to this controversy and that time within time should not be asked for by the members of Mailers' Union No. 1 or allowed by the publisher of the Boston Herald. Also that the said Boston Publishing Company may reduce the regular force in its mailing department to a minimum now or at any time it feels so disposed.

The arbitration board then took up the scale controversy existing between the Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16. In this case the Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association was represented by Henry N. Cary, and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 was represented by Messrs. Otto E. Rossner, William A. Klinger and John A. English.

In a preliminary discussion on the Chicago case it was brought out that under the existing agreement any decision made by this board of arbitration would run only to February 15, 1918. The board requested the interested parties from Chicago to hold a conference and see if they could not agree upon some later date on which the decision, if one was rendered, should expire. This conference was held and the following was presented to the arbitration board as a result:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., October 9, 1917.

To the International Board of Arbitration:

GENTLEMEN—The undersigned, on behalf, respectively, of Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, do agree that, in event of a decision being reached in the scale controversy now before the board, said decision shall continue in effect until February 15, 1919, unless otherwise changed or amended by mutual agreement between Chicago local and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16. Respectfully submitted,

HENRY N. CARY,
Representing Chicago Local American Newspaper Publishers' Association.
OTTO R. ROSSNER,
WILLIAM A. KLINGER,
JOHN A. ENGLISH,
Representing Chicago Typographical Union No. 16.

At 12:30 the board adjourned to meet at 2 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The board met at 2 P. M., as per adjournment, with all members present, and Chairman Kellogg presiding.

Consideration of the Chicago controversy was resumed. Mr. Cary opened the argument for the Chicago publishers and Mr. Klinger followed, presenting the case for Chicago Typographical Union No. 16. Following Mr. Klinger's presentation of the union's argument, Mr. Cary made a further argument, which was followed by Mr. Rossner for Chicago Typographical Union No. 16. A general discussion then took place and at 6 P. M. the board adjourned to meet at 8 P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The board met at 8 P. M., as per adjournment, with all members present and took up the controversy existing between Beaumont Typographical Union No. 339 and the Enterprise Company of the same city. This case came to the board on briefs submitted by the interested parties, there being no personal appearances. The following decision was rendered:

In this case the union contends that whoever is authorized to act in the capacity of foreman when the foreman is not on duty is entitled to the wages provided for foremen in section 47 of the contract, viz., $5.25 per night, and cites section 48 of the contract in support of its position. The section reads:

"The term 'foreman' as defined in this scale is declared to be a journeyman printer having charge of mechanical work in any printing office under the jurisdiction of this union."

The contention of the union is sustained.

The board then gave consideration to a measurement case between St. Paul Typographical Union No. 30 and St. Paul local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. This case had been before the board on a previous occasion when no decision was reached and the board was unable to agree on a decision at this time. The matter was therefore put over to the next meeting of the board for the purpose of submitting the case to a seventh man, as provided for in the arbitration agreement.

The board then resumed consideration of the controversy between Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23 and the Milwaukee Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association, and the following decision was rendered:

This case concerns propositions for a new wage scale agreement.

The board decides that under section 15 of the code of procedure of the arbitration contract it can not make a decision for more than three years; therefore, this decision shall date from August 8, 1916, until August 8, 1919.

The hours for a regular day's or night's work shall be eight, exclusive of at least thirty minutes for lunch. Help employed on the lobster shift commencing at 12 o'clock midnight shall work seven hours per night and shall be paid at the rate of the regular morning scale.

Journeymen on evening papers are to receive $27 per week to date from the beginning of the next fiscal week. Journeymen on morning papers are to receive $30 per week from the beginning of the next fiscal week.

Superannuated members are to receive $18 per week beginning with the next fiscal week.

Morning and evening journeymen and superannuated members are to be given $2 per week back pay from April 1, 1917, to the beginning of the next fiscal week.

The ratio of apprentices shall be one to five, and no office shall be entitled to more than eight. No present apprentice to be disturbed, but offices now having more than eight shall conform to that ratio when apprentices now employed in excess of the ratio complete their terms. Apprentices shall receive the following wages from the beginning of the next fiscal week:

For the probationary six months...	$5 00
For the following six months.....	6 00
For the following six months.....	7 00
For the following six months.....	8 00
For the following six months.....	9 00
For the following six months.....	10 00
For the following six months.....	11 00
For the following six months.....	12 00
For the following six months.....	13 00
For the following six months.....	14 00
For the following six months.....	16 00

The representatives of the publishers and the typographical union having stated that an agreement on the remaining sections of the contract can be reached through conciliation, the board refers these sections to the local joint committee, the provisions of the existing agreement, except as changed by this decision, to remain in effect pending an adjustment as above provided.

At 12:30 A. M., Wednesday, the meeting adjourned to meet at 10 A. M.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1917.

The arbitration board met at 10 A. M., as per adjournment, with all members present and Chairman Kellogg presiding.

Consideration of the scale controversy between Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 and Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association was resumed and Mr. Cary submitted a rebuttal argument. After Mr. Cary finished his argument, Mr. Rossner presented a sur-rebuttal argument for No. 16.

At 12 o'clock noon the board adjourned to meet at 2 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The board met at 2 P. M., as per adjournment, with all members present, and resumed consideration of the Chicago case. The entire afternoon was taken up in discussions by the Chicago representatives and the board allowed the widest latitude for a full discussion on the points of interest or any matters that might be brought up that would enlighten the board as to the exact situation in Chicago.

At 6:30 P. M. the board adjourned to meet Thursday morning, October 11, at 9:30 A. M.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1917.

The board met at 9:30 A. M., as per adjournment, with all members present and resumed consideration of the Chicago controversy in executive session.

The board continued in executive session on the Chicago case until 12:30 P. M., when adjournment was taken to a time to be designated later by the chairman of the board.

EVENING SESSION.

Chairman Kellogg called the board together at 7:30 P. M. of Thursday, October 11, 1917, for a further consideration of the Chicago controversy, which was held in executive session and the following decision reached:

CHICAGO TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION NO. 16
vs.
CHICAGO LOCAL AMERICAN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

This case was referred to the International Board at the request of the local parties under the terms of the local contract, which provides that controversies of this character may be submitted to the board and considered under the procedure of the International agreement in effect September 1, 1909. That arbitration agreement provides for a board consisting of three representatives of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and three members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union and does not permit the board to call in an additional member in the event of the failure of the six members of the board to reach a decision.

The request of the local parties was granted and the proceedings were conducted as above indicated.

The decision follows:

SECTION 1. Day work shall be between the hours of 7 A. M. and 6 P. M. Night work shall be between the hours of 6 P. M. and 7 A. M.

SECTION 2. Eight hours shall constitute a day's or night's work, and forty-eight hours a week's work; but employes working at the hourly rate (except operators employed on the bonus basis on typesetting machines, who shall receive not less than six hours' continuous work per day) shall receive not less than seven and one-half hours' work per day.

SECTION 3. All work performed in excess of eight hours shall be construed as overtime, and shall be paid for at the rate of price and one-half. Overtime shall be calculated only for actual time on duty in excess of eight hours, except as provided in section 13.

SECTION 4. All employes shall have thirty minutes for lunch on each shift. Time of taking lunch to be at the discretion of the foreman and not to be included in time paid for by the office. Provided, that no employes shall be required to work more than five consecutive hours without a recess for lunch.

SECTION 5. There shall be an intermission of ten hours between each day's or night's work. If an emergency arises in which it is demanded that a man work without the ten hours' intermission for rest, then he shall be paid at the rate of overtime until the ten hours' intermission shall have elapsed.

SECTION 6. Work performed within the day hours shall be paid for at the day rate; work performed within the night hours shall be paid for at the night rate; excepting that where a working shift falls partly in the night hours and partly in the day hours more than two days in any one week, employes shall be paid the night rate for the work done in such week. Where a working shift falls partly in the night hours and partly in the day hours two days or less in any one week, employes shall be paid the overtime rate on the day scale for the work done in the night hours. Provided, that where employes work one full night in any one week, they shall be paid the night rate for the work done in such week. This rule shall apply to extras as well as to regular employes.

SECTION 7. The hourly wage for other than machine operators shall be at the rate of not less than 66 cents for day work and not less than 71 cents for night work.

SECTION 8. Weekly employes shall be paid not less than:

	DAY.	NIGHT.
Proofreaders	$31 00	$33 00
Copy cutters	31 00	33 00
Copyholders	23 00	25 00
Make-ups	31 00	33 00
Linotype machine tenders.....	31 00	33 00

SECTION 9. The scale for bonus operators on linotype machines shall be 58 cents per hour for night work and 53 cents per hour for day work, and the operator shall receive not less than six hours' continuous composition per day. To be deemed a competent operator and entitled to the above rate of pay a man shall produce not less than 3,500 ems solid per hour for a week of six consecutive days of six hours each. On attaining a product of 4,500 ems solid per hour for a like period, operators shall be paid for that period 63 cents per hour for night work and 58 cents per hour for day work. Additional rates for machine composition after an average of 4,500 ems per hour is attained shall be 1 cent per 100 ems. Provided, that substitutes employed on the machine shall be paid at the rate per hour provided in the above schedule in accordance with their average speed for time employed each week.

SECTION 10. Machine operators may be employed on machines on the hourly basis and shall receive not less than 66 cents per hour for day work, and not less than 71 cents per hour for night work.

SECTION 11. Bonus operators at present employed at any other work in the composing room and now paid for such work at an established average, in accordance with rulings heretofore made by the parties to the agreement, shall in no way be affected by the preceding section.

SECTION 12. A bonus operator, regular or extra, temporarily employed at any other work in the composing room shall be paid at his established average for such employment.

SECTION 13. On any shift starting between 12 midnight and 6 A. M. a day's work shall consist of seven hours, including not less than thirty minutes for lunch. Night rates shall be paid to men employed on this shift, and overtime rates shall be paid for all time in excess of seven hours.

SECTION 14. Men called to work on Sunday, when regular editions are not published, shall be paid at the overtime rate, and shall receive not less than $5.50 for work on extra editions. Provided, that this shall not apply to men regularly employed on regular shifts working on that day.

SECTION 15. Men not holding regular situations shall be classed as extras. Extras working three days or less in any one week in any one office shall be compensated at the rate of 50 cents per day in addition to the regular scale for each day or shift. Extras shall not have the right to refuse regular employment when tendered by the office. Four days' or more employment as an extra in any one office in one week shall be at the regular scale. When the hours worked by extras, who work three days per week, as above, fall partly in the day schedule and partly in the night schedule, the night scale shall apply, plus the extra 50-cent rate. Extras working four days or more in one week on split shift as above shall receive the night scale only.

SECTION 16. All time lost through breakage of machines, alterations of copy, non-supply of copy, matrices and spacebands, or any other cause not the fault of the operator, shall be credited to the operator at the schedule rates. The decision of the foreman on the points involved shall stand pending an appeal.

SECTION 17. When an employe is called back after having left the office at the completion of his regular work for a day or night, he shall receive $1 bonus in addition to overtime rates for the time worked.

SECTION 18. All strings shall be cut, distributed and pasted by the office, and the measurement subject to daily inspection by the operator. Lost dupes shall be found by the office. If the operator can not identify missing dupes he shall not be allowed for them.

SECTION 19. Machine tenders' helpers, if journeymen members of the union, shall be paid as follows per week of forty-eight hours, eight hours per day (overtime shall be paid for at price and one-half):

	DAY.	NIGHT.
First year	$14 00	$14 50
Second year	16 00	17 00
Third year	19 00	21 00
Fourth year	22 00	24 00

At the beginning of the fifth year journeymen machine tenders' helpers shall become journeymen machine tenders and shall receive not less than the scale provided in section 8 for such work.

SECTION 20. One machine tenders' apprentice, not a journeyman member of the union, may be employed in each composing room covered by this scale of prices, such apprentice not to be included in the allotment of apprentices otherwise provided for in this scale. Said apprentice shall be governed as to the wages, hours and term of apprenticeship provided for other apprentices.

SECTION 21. The proportion of apprentices to regular journeymen shall be as follows: For ten journeymen or less, one apprentice; for every additional ten or fractional part thereof, one apprentice—the average number of men employed to be the basis—but no office shall have more than six apprentices at one time, except as provided in section 20. Provided, that morning papers employing a day shift and afternoon papers employing a night shift shall be entitled to one extra apprentice. All apprentices must be given an opportunity to work in every department of the composing room, and must be employed the last three years of their apprenticeship on the case and at other intricate work, excepting the last six months of said apprenticeship, which time must (if the apprentice so desires) be devoted exclusively to work on linotype or typesetting devices in use in the office where said apprentices are employed, five years to constitute an apprenticeship term. In furtherance of the spirit and to properly observe the object of this section, foremen shall exercise due care in selecting apprentices with a special regard to their qualifications and common school education.

SECTION 22. The term of apprenticeship shall be not less than five years and the wages for the third, fourth and fifth years shall be as follows: Third year, one-third the scale for journeymen; fourth year, one-half the scale for journeymen; fifth year, two-thirds the scale for journeymen.

SECTION 23. The office shall keep an authentic style posted.

SECTION 24. An alteration from copy not provided for by any style of the paper kept publicly posted in the office, nor by instructions given to the compositor by the copy cutter when the copy is given out, or marked on the copy; alterations in the spelling of proper names; proper names not legible; names of corporations where initials are given and required to be spelled in full; words from foreign languages, etc., not provided for as above; alterations in the spelling or division of words not in accordance with the dictionary given as a guide and not provided for as above; alterations in punctuation or capitalization where a take commences or ends even within two lines of commencement or end, unless it is evident from copy that it should be so punctuated or capitalized; long lines, short lines, wrong font, and imperfect slugs, when not the fault of the operator; also spaceband transpositions and non-dropping of matrices after the machinist has been notified—shall be ringed.

SECTION 25. The loaning, borrowing, purchase or sale of news matter in type, linotype matrix or plate form, or of miscellaneous matter or cuts in such form, between the newspapers represented in this agreement is prohibited. This section shall not be construed as prohibiting the exchange of matter of any kind between two or more papers under one management, when said papers are owned by the same person or company and printed in and published from the same office. The loaning, borrowing, exchange, purchase or sale of matter or matrices or cuts of advertisements by the different newspaper offices is prohibited, except that where matrices of advertisements are furnished by one local newspaper to another, the text shall be reproduced within one week from the time of publication as nearly like the original as possible, made up, read and corrected, proofs being submitted to the chairman for inspection, who shall also keep a record of all such matrices used from day to day. Provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the loaning and borrowing of matter and matrices by a newspaper which is party to this agreement on occasions of extraordinary emergency, such as fire, explosion, cyclone, or other unforeseen disaster, including the pi of a form or forms at a late hour, when it shall be permitted without penalty; and provided, further, that this section shall not be construed as changing in any manner the present custom in regard to the acceptance and use by newspapers of plates, cuts and matrices of advertisements of establishments located outside of Chicago, or of Chicago advertisers not properly considered merely local advertisers.

SECTION 26. Employes shall not be held responsible for errors or pi lines occurring in railroaded matter.

SECTION 27. Foremen are prohibited from selecting their forces from day to day, or not having any regular situations; they must give out such number of situations as are needed to meet office requirements.

SECTION 28. The foreman shall be the judge of a man's competency as a workman and of his general fitness to work in the office.

SECTION 29. If the chapel has a grievance against the foreman it shall first refer it to the executive officers of the union, and if the grievance is sustained by the executive officers and is not satisfactorily adjusted the executive officers shall then refer the grievance to the joint standing committee of the union and Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association for settlement. Nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the union, in the case where a chapel refuses to sustain or present the grievance of the individual, from presenting it to the joint standing committee for consideration and settlement.

SECTION 30. All straight matter set full column in width shall be measured according to the number of ems of the type used.

SECTION 31. In all cases where matrices are inserted in the assembler by hand, running pi, fifty ems extra shall be charged for each line in which they occur; provided, that where a special style is in vogue as regards setting proper names in small caps, inserting superior figures in racing tables, and other intricate work, the operator shall be entitled therefor to the rate of pay established by his average speed on the type most in use on the paper, provided that provisions governing the measurement of all extra priced matter shall be covered in this scale in accordance with the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That as a means of facilitating the work of this local board of arbitration the determination of what shall constitute penalized or extra-priced matter shall be referred to a committee of four members, to be composed of two foremen and two journeymen, to be selected respectively by representatives of Chicago local American Newspaper Publishers' Association and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16; and,

"Resolved, That the findings of this committee shall be accepted as an act of this board and become a part of a newspaper scale of prices effective between Chicago local American Newspaper Publishers' Association and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 when the document is complete."

SECTION 32. Should the International Typographical Union and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association mutually adopt a new standard for the measurement of type, and said standard be used in the offices under the jurisdiction of the parties to this agreement, if said standard shall affect the wages, the scale shall, if possible, be fixed by the joint standing committee of the two parties to this agreement, and should said committee fail to agree, the question shall be submitted to arbitration, as herein provided, the decision to be binding upon both parties to this agreement.

SECTION 33. Existing working conditions as established under the previous scale and not specifically changed by this award are in no way affected by this decision and can only be changed through the procedure required by the contract.

This decision is to be effective from October 11, 1917.

The board directs that the memorandum submitted by President Scott and the dissenting opinion of Messrs. Barrett and Hays be attached to this decision. Respectfully submitted,

H. N. KELLOGG,
CHARLES H. TAYLOR, JR.
W. S. JONES,
M. G. SCOTT,
Memorandum attached.
W. W. BARRETT,
J. W. HAYS,
Dissenting opinion attached.

Notwithstanding the fact that the increased wage provided in this award is entirely inadequate, the undersigned votes to concur in the above decision. The representatives of the International Typographical Union on the International Board are bound by the terms of the local contract, which does not permit a seventh member to be added to the International Board in this case. Rather than permit the Chicago publishers to continue to profit at the expense of the employes through an indefinite deadlock and extension of the previous scale, the writer reluctantly agrees to the award.

M. G. SCOTT.

We dissent from the above decision on the ground that the increases in the wage scale provided in the award are inadequate.

J. W. HAYS,
W. W. BARRETT.

The board also directs that the following letter be attached to this decision:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., October 9, 1917.

"To the International Board of Arbitration:

"GENTLEMEN—The undersigned, on behalf, respectively, of Chicago local of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, do agree that in the event of a decision being reached in the scale controversy now before the board, said decision shall continue in effect until February 15, 1919, unless otherwise changed or amended by mutual agreement between Chicago local and Chicago Typographical Union No. 16.

"Respectfully submitted,

At 11 P. M. the board adjourned.

EIGHTH TIME WINS.

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel.]

That a determined man can not be kept out of military service when his country needs him was proved by Harry S. McKinley, 450 Cass street, a member of the Sentinel composing room, who enlisted in the First Milwaukee infantry after seven futile attempts to become one of Uncle Sam's fighting men.

On the same day that the United States severed diplomatic relations with Germany, McKinley applied at the local navy recruiting station, but was rejected because of defective eyesight.

He immediately began treating his eyes to strengthen them and was able to pass the eye test for the national guard a few weeks later, but was rejected on account of other physical disabilities.

Following this he attempted to join the regular army, marine corps and an engineering corps, but was turned down in each case.

Still determined to get into service, he underwent an operation and applied at Fond du Lac, but again he was rejected.

In the hope that his condition had improved sufficiently McKinley again applied at the regular army recruiting station, but again he was rejected, due to his eyesight.

On Tuesday his efforts were crowned with success and he was accepted as a member of the First Milwaukee infantry by the draft board as a volunteer. He is one of 1,200 volunteers that have been called for.

Whoso lives for himself is his own cancer, eating himself up miserably.—William Marion Reedy.

MISCELLANEOUS SECTION

SOMEWHERE IN ALBANIA.

If I remember rightly, my last letter to THE JOURNAL was written from the land of Holo Pau, some time last fall. When I returned to the Pacific coast in December after nineteen months in Hawaii and the Orient I felt convinced that my travels were at an end for a while. I reckoned erroneously, however. In May my college days were terminated when I joined a volunteer ambulance unit of Stanford university for service with the American ambulance corps in France. Arriving at Paris in June we were offered an opportunity to drive cars for the Armee d'Orient in the Balkans. We left the French capital in July, traveling overland by rail through France and Italy to Tarento, thence by transport to Saloniki in Greece, and from there by rail and auto camion to our present field of operations somewhere in Albania.

To avoid reference to an atlas, I may explain that Albania is the Balkan country which lies on the eastern coast of the Adriatic, south of Montenegro and north of Greece. The battle front runs across the country from the sea into southern Serbia. The western part of the line is held by Italian troops and the eastern part by the French troops, including colonials, and Russians in the employ of the French government. The French section of the front continues on into Serbia. The English are further to the east. While the war on the Albanian front is far less intense than that in France, it certainly is not dull. Trench systems are less extensive and operations generally are more open. All movements are attended by great difficulties in transportation, owing to the complete absence of railroads. The country is very mountainous; it is inhabited by some of the strangest peoples on the globe. In addition, picturesqueness is lent to the activity on the front by the presence of a great variety of races and nationalities.

On the allied side of the entire Balkan front there are at least twenty-six different nationalities. In Albania the number is much less, yet in many places one may see men from four continents. In the Armee d'Orient, for example, are not only Frenchmen, but Senegalese, Arabs, Indo-Chinese, Moroccans—the famous Spahi cavalryman—and Americans. The latter are not numerous, being entirely confined to two sections of ambulance drivers representing the American field service. In one of these sections your correspondent has the honor to serve. There are twenty-five men in the group, with two exceptions former students of Stanford university in California.

Driving an ambulance in the Balkans is perhaps less exciting than one might imagine. In the main, the work consists of transporting malades, or sick men, from ambulance camps near the front to hospitals some thirty miles to the rear. Dysentery and malaria are very common in this part of the world, and probably kill more men than the bullets of the enemy. Occasionally there is a spell of activity on the front, during which wounded men will be numerous. Last month the blessés included numbers of Austrians who had been taken prisoners during a French offensive. The roads are bad, the grades steep, and the hauls long, so the work is hard. Perhaps the chief danger is derived from driving at night through the mountains. At times aeroplane bombing parties enliven things somewhat. Last week a hostile avion acknowledged my existence by dropping three bombs near the road about 200 yards ahead of my car. The presence of numerous bands of komatajes, or brigands, in the region adds something to the interest of the work. Four cars upset during our first six weeks of service here, the total damage to the drivers being one cracked rib. Broken springs and axles are frequent, and the staff of mechanics is kept pretty busy.

The Albanian people are agriculturists, primarily. They have no manufactures to speak of, and the poor means of transportation forbid any considerable commercial development. Many of the men have been to the United States at some time or other, and these constitute the most progressive element of the community. In addition to the native Albanians, many Roumanians and Turks live in the country, and Bulgarians were numerous before the war. Religiously, the people are divided between the Mohammedan and the Greek Orthodox faith. In most towns are to be seen both the Greek church with cross and the mosque with minaret. Education is not extensive, and development generally has been arrested by protracted political strife and misgovernment. The southeastern part of Albania within the last decade has been under the rule of Turks, the independent Albanian government, and the Greeks. Last fall this section was organized into a republic of Koritza, with the encouragement and support of the French military authorities.

At this time the presence here of large bodies of troops changes the general complexion of things. Food supplies are scarce, and prices are very high. Ravitaillement, or supplies for the troops, is brought into the country by automobile transport, the normal native production being insufficient even for the natives, many of whom must be supported by the military authorities. As a result, large gangs of men, women and children are employed at road work, for which labor they receive both wages and rations. So far as an observer can see, the French authorities treat the natives with scrupulous fairness and generosity. At times, when an attack is contemplated, the civil population is marched to refugee camps well to the rear, pending the completion of the action.

As to the future of the Balkan states, and of Albania in particular, no one may fairly profess to have a very definite idea. Austria has declared a protectorate over northern Albania, and Italy has taken similar action in regard to the southern part of the state. The existence of the Republic of Koritza, ostensibly under French protection, further complicates the situation. Certainly there will be much wagging of diplomatic tongues and much scratching of statesmen's heads before anything like a permanent and just solution is achieved. I will not muddle this simple narrative by interpolating my own opinion.

Typographically, Albania is hardly on the map. I believe that a few small papers are printed in the coast towns, but in the interior there exist only a few small job offices, employing only natives. Before arrival I had an idea that there might be a few real offices in Saloniki, Greece, the great center for allied operations in the Balkans, a city which recently burned. I was disappointed. There were no linotypes in town, and the cases were manned by Greeks and Spanish Jews. The single English newspaper there, the Balkan News, is published by government employes, and solely for the convenience of the troops. As yet, I have met no printers among the soldiers anywhere along the front.

Between pounding linotype keys and driving an ambulance there is some difference. First, in the matter of the wage scale. Just now I am earning the munificent sum of eight sous per day. For this sum I can buy one egg, if there is any on the market. As for hours, we are liable to be called out any time, though there may be days when there is little or nothing to do. Officers are no more exacting than proofreaders and foremen. Dues are nil. On the whole, it is rather a happy, carefree life—one can have as many friends, and of as many different nationalities, as he cares for. Of course, in time it will become rather boresome. Food is sufficient, but not in great variety, the short ration of sugar being rather painful. The government tobacco comes from Algeria; occasionally some philanthropist in the States sends out a few cigarettes or cigars by registered mail, and there is real joy in camp.

The length of my stay in the Balkans is contingent on many things. The American field service is now in process of absorption by the United States army, and I may find myself in the automobile service on the French front before many months. At any rate, I hardly expect to punch keys again until aprés la guerre. After traveling so far, it is pleasant to be stationary for a while, even though in a place so far from home as a little mountain town of Albania. During the last twelve months I have been under more flags than I expected—the American, in Hawaii, the Philippines and the United States; the English, at Hongkong; the Portuguese, at Macao; the Japanese, the Chinese, the French, the Italian, the Greek, the Serbian and the Albanian. Don't seem to be any chance to get in Germany this year, but perhaps next! Here's hoping, any way!

The best thing that one ever gets out here is mail from home, and I'd be mighty pleased to hear from any of the friends of yesteryear who may care to write—Tom Gloster, Holo Pau, Charlie Ruhmland, Ross Draper, Ralph Criswell, jr.; Art Anderson, Harry MacArthur, Bob Sanburn, please note. OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS.

The result of the referendum vote on the first proposition submitted by the sixty-third session of the International Typographical Union is right or wrong, according to one's viewpoint. Looked at from a cold-blooded insurance-calculating point of view, the minimum pension and mortuary assessments of 30 cents per member per month for each fund is all right. No man, member of the union or not, has a right to demand anything for which he does not properly pay. But from the altruistic—the big brother—standpoint of the International Typographical Union, the action resulting in defeat of the first proposition is all right; because, so far, the mortuary assessment seems to be sufficient to provide for mortuary disbursements; and because not all of our members are now, ever have been or ever will be actual beneficiaries of the pension fund. Therefore, while the disbursements of the pension fund are much greater per beneficiary than are the mortuary benefits per member (and while the pension fund, may of necessity, soon need a heavier assessment), still the fact that all do not draw the pension benefits makes it possible to administer the two funds on similar assessments, the member who does not benefit by the pension contributing to the welfare of the member who is so unfortunately fortunate as to become a beneficiary of the pension fund. And surely, in these premises, a member who does not earn should not be required to contribute to a fund which is based upon earnings through a system of percentages. The earning member becomes the burden-bearing big brother to the non-earning, out-of-work, out-of-health member.

The second proposition is where I say, "I told you so." I plead with the convention on this wise: If you really want to increase the salaries of your officers, adopt here and submit to the referendum my proposition to add $250 each to the salaries of your president and secretary-treasurer, $25 to the salary of the first vice-president, and $50 each to the salaries of the second and mailer vice-president. But if you send to the referendum this $4,000-$4,500-$5,000 proposition it will be defeated; because, while the proposition will have favorable action by the convention, which is composed of members from the larger unions where the higher wages are paid to our members, the referendum takes in nearly 600 unions who have no representative on the floor of the convention and whose members earn and receive scales of wages from $15 to $25 a week, the majority of them probably not exceeding $20 per week; and when a proposition to increase $500 per year for three consecutive years the salary of an officer who is already receiving over $67 per week is submitted, the small earnings member who has to contribute to the payment of this increase votes no. It may be well to say that the member who thus votes does so not for lack of appreciation of the ability of or the services rendered by the officers in question (on general principles—nothing personal, for on this score all of our officials have deserved and do deserve as to the matter of ability and service above what they were paid), but because of his inability to pay. Many a man loves his home, his wife and children and appreciates the fidelity, ability and services of his mate in her efforts to make his earnings "foot the bill," and sometimes in one way or another, does something to supplement his earnings; but his appreciation must take some other form than an increase of the good wife's "allowance"—salary.

"Everybody to their own liking," as the old woman said when she kissed the cow. The third proposition is no exception to this rule. No. 3 should have been defeated. The old law requiring 100 endorsements of a proposition to go to referendum was sufficient. The amendment to require the executive council to have twenty-five endorsements of a proposition they wished to go to referendum was misinterpreted and misunderstood and led to the offer and adoption of the laws committee's substitute requiring 150 endorsements. Requiring such a large endorsement almost destroys initiative, for very few members or even unions would be able to procure the endorsements of 150 subordinate unions for any proposition.

That double-header—plan A and plan B—was a joke from start to finish. In the first place, the union printer-soldier is about as able to pay his dues as his brothers at home are to pay these dues for him. If his dues are paid by the subordinate local union, well and good. But I never could see anything in the proposition to pay the soldier's dues and in addition pay to the International Union an assessment of 10 cents a month for the purpose of reimbursing the local unions. It was like robbing Peter to pay Paul or changing your fund from one pocket to another.

There are two things, yes, three, that I wish to see at an end. I wish and hope and pray (as much as a sinner can pray) for the successful, complete culmination of this great world war, I hope for and expect the abolishment of the International board of auditors, and I trust the next convention will grant such recognition and encouragement to the woman's auxiliary as they may request and which they so richly deserve. I will not elaborate on the war. As to the board of auditors, I was opposed to and voted against the proposition. Later I was a candidate for auditor. But had I been elected my attitude for abolishment of the board would be the same. I thought we could find men in our membership who could audit International books and accounts. And I further thought that the International board of auditors would do the work of and thereby dispense with the services and expenses of the expert accountant auditors. Now, because the board of auditors is both useless and unnecessary, I hope to see the law which created the board and which maintains same repealed and stricken from the book of laws. And the reasons for this are that the International board of auditors is maintained at too great an expense when it does not audit and does not supersede the expert accountant auditors. And further, because I believe the intention of the law was and the belief of the auditors was that they would succeed and supersede the professional and expert auditing accountants. C. S. Gookin.

THE REFERENDUM.

The referendum, while ideal in theory, has not as yet been so conducted as to accomplish the best results.

In the first place, it is almost impossible to draw up a proposition to be submitted to the referendum in which the legislation contemplated can be worded or arranged so that the voting membership can have any discretionary power whatever. The result is that the only course for the member is to "swallow" the whole proposition, that is, vote for or against the entire proposition, or not vote at all. While the writer does not believe that this fault can be entirely eliminated, propositions submitted to the referendum should be presented in such a manner as to obviate this objectionable feature as far as possible.

The practice of taking referendum votes on propositions taken up by conventions almost immediately after the adjournment of said conventions, to say the least, seems foolish.

Conventions are supposed to be made up of representative members of the various local unions throughout the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, and to a greater or lesser extent this is true. These men meet as your representatives and at your expense to take such actions as seems best for the interests of the membership as a whole. And right here it must be said that conventions as a rule refuse to legislate for the benefit of any particular local or locality. This is as it should be. But what happens? Immediately after adjournment some local which has had a proposition before the convention particularly applicable to meet a condition in its own jurisdiction and which has been turned down, in most cases because it is not applicable to nor practical legislation for the entire jurisdiction of the parent body, starts out to have a referendum taken on the same question, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of the membership of the International Typographical Union, through its regularly and duly elected representatives in convention assembled for the specific purpose of expressing the will of the majority, has, in most cases by a large majority vote, expressed said will by defeating the proposed legislation, these aforesaid local or locals seek to have the question placed before the membership through the referendum, sometimes almost before the "ink is dry" on the notation of its failure to pass the convention on the secretary's books.

It would seem, in the light of the foregoing that for the minor reason of expense and the major reason of impracticability, that no referendum should be taken on legislation passed by the convention until at least another convention has convened, so as to give the law or absence of the law time to demonstrate the advisability of the action taken by the convention. As the law is at present the action of the convention may be set aside, before the change contemplated by the legislation has been put in operation. And this has been done on more than one occasion. We are prone to talk about the "intelligent compositor" and the "most intelligent labor organization on earth," but this manner of making and unmaking laws certainly does not bear out these assertions.

Further, if the referendum means anything it means an opportunity to vote intelligently, and this "intelligent vote" can only be taken at a union meeting, where the question should be discussed, pro and con, before a vote is taken, not as it is now, when "Jack" says to "Mike" as soon as he receives his ballot: "What about this?" And "Mike" answers about like this: "Oh, I don't know; I'm going to vote for the first one and against the second," etc. And they both vote, and this is no joke, either. This is about the manner in which 75 per cent or more of the membership votes on the various referendums submitted under the present mode of procedure.

Large unions oppose the proposition of taking the referendum at a meeting on the ground that they can not procure a hall large enough to permit of the entire membership participating, but it would seem that the answer to this is: What do they do at present? By what method or means do they hold at least twelve regular meetings a year at present?

Further, it would seem that it should not be necessary to hold more than one referendum between conventions, say in February.

In accordance with the foregoing the following is suggested:

Provide that a referendum vote may be taken only once between conventions (preferably at a regular or special meeting held in February), except in cases of emergency, as already provided.

That a referendum can only be taken for the purpose of new legislation or legislation relative to questions other than those discussed or acted upon at the convention immediately preceding such referendum.

That the referendum must be taken at a regular or special meeting of each local. W. K. Cody.

A PREMATURE PETITION.

To the unprejudiced observer, the action of Sacramento Union No. 46 in initiating a movement to abolish the present six-day situation plan on seven-day papers, seems premature and ill-advised. While it was to be expected that the change to the present plan from a custom which had been observed for so many years would cause dissatisfaction in some quarters, especially in sections where unreasonably long sublists have been the order, it is incredible that opposition to the plan is sufficiently widespread to warrant submitting the question of its abolition to the membership.

In view of the short time the new law has been in effect, criticisms of its operation at this time must of necessity be based upon prejudice and self-interest, rather than upon a comprehension of the merits of the plan. Only after a thorough and convincing trial of the new arrangement could the membership vote intelligently upon its discontinuance.

The resolution accompanying the Sacramento petition criticizes foremen for not making "an equitable distribution of work," entirely overlooking the fact that with the inclusion of the Spokane amendment in scale contracts foremen cease to exercise their discretion in giving out work. Advocates of that amendment can not consistently oppose the present six-day situation law, since that law merely carries out the theory that work should be given out according to seniority. To argue that all extra work and six days a week on any given situation should be given out according to seniority, while the seventh day on that situation should be given out indiscriminately, is the hight of inconsistency.

"An equitable distribution of work," in the broad sense of those words is greatly to be desired. Under a perfect distribution of work our entire membership would, we believe, have permanent employment. But "an equitable distribution of work," in the sense used in the Sacramento resolution, would work directly against the realization of this Utopian condition. Under the old plan, whereby each situation holder on a seven-day paper had one day which he gave out to whom he saw fit, cities where high scales prevailed became the Mecca of hundreds of journeymen, who passed up steady employment in localities where conditions were not so favorable to take chances on one or two days a week. As a result in certain centers we find men crying for work, while in other sections, frequently in close proximity, sufficient help can never be secured.

Under the new plan this condition should, to a great extent, cease to exist. Subs who are virtually eliminated from seven-day papers by the operation of the new law must of necessity seek new fields, thus bringing about a "more equitable distribution of printers," which, from an economic standpoint, is greatly to be desired. Any measure which makes for permanency of employment of the members is certain to redound to the benefit of the organization.

That more work will be given out under the new plan seems a certainty. Regulars on seven-day papers will no longer be able to arrange their day off to fit in with their social activities, while many offices which have always been blessed with an inexhaustible supply of subs will, when the sub scarcity becomes acute, find it convenient to add a few more situations in order to be prepared for emergencies.

If the present six-day situation plan is to be submitted to the referendum, justice and fairness would demand that it be done only after a thorough and universal trial of the plan.

GOOD WORK APPRECIATED.

The following resolutions, adopted by Charleston (S. C.) Union No. 143, are self-explanatory, and indicate that the union is making progress in the southeastern jurisdiction:

Whereas, One year ago, at the request of Charleston Typographical Union No. 43, Representative D. I. Campbell was sent into this jurisdiction to negotiate a contract with one of our morning newspapers, and at the expiration of a few days, by his untiring efforts and capable guidance, an agreement was perfected bettering the working conditions in morning newspapers in Charleston, which established a precedent in this local, inasmuch as No. 43 had previously been unable to secure an agreement with a morning newspaper; and,

Whereas, Representative Campbell has secured renewal contracts with three job offices in this jurisdiction, gaining a $2 increase for handmen, and by his repeated visits to this field and his many conferences with the employers has materially paved the way to receiving working agreements with the unsigned offices in this jurisdiction; and,

Whereas, Representative Campbell was a delegate, representing the International Typographical Union at the convention of the Southern Labor Congress, held at Charleston, September 19-21, and, as chairman of the resolutions committee and by his activities in the deliberations of the congress, Mr. Campbell reflected credit not only on the International Typographical Union, but on this local union as well; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Charleston Typographical Union No. 43, in regular meeting assembled, October 7, 1917, hereby tender Mr. Campbell our sincere thanks and hearty endorsement in recognition of his efficient work and creditable representation in this jurisdiction; and, be it further

Resolved, That Representative Campbell be presented with a copy of these resolutions, that a copy be forwarded to President Scott and Secretary-Treasurer Hays, a copy sent to The Typographical Journal for publication and a like copy spread upon the minutes of this meeting.

MAILERS' DEPARTMENT

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

I have been on the road since the middle of July, and have had the pleasure of acting on several scale matters, and can report that all the subjects acted upon have been decided very favorably. I have many other matters that I will touch upon in this article, and some that I will have to omit on account of circumstances surrounding them. Nevertheless, I feel that the subjects mentioned herein will be of considerable interest to our members.

I purposely omitted my article in THE JOURNAL last month, as I did not want to make any reference at all to the $100,000 general fund proposition that has been submitted to the membership to be voted upon. I would not have felt justified in writing for THE JOURNAL without mentioning the proposition, and now that the result of the referendum will be in prior to the members reading this article, I take this opportunity of contending that it will be absolutely necessary, sooner or later, to have a fund of this character created. It may not be possible to reach the $100,000-mark, nevertheless it will be necessary to have $25,000 or $50,000 as a reserve. I will call attention to the situation that now exists in Oklahoma, so as to give you an idea as to why this is an absolute necessity, and if the proposition is defeated, no doubt it will come up at a later date in a different form.

Our members in Oklahoma, prior to my arrival there, were receiving $9 and $12 a week, with no stipulated number of hours. Representative Gadd, a member of the typographical union in that city, had several conferences with the manager of the Oklahoman and Times, but failed to get any adjustment; in fact, he was prevented from conferring any further with the publishers, as they refused to see him. I was instructed by the convention at Colorado Springs to take up this matter with the other members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, and by them was instructed to go to Oklahoma City at my earliest opportunity and adjust the matter, with full power to act. On my arrival there I was compelled to do business with the circulation manager, James Matthews, who, by the way, is also secretary of the Circulation Managers' Association, and therefore must believe in organizations. Nevertheless, he met me very coldly, and my entire interview with him didn't last more than two minutes at any time. I was politely told that the management wouldn't have anything to do with us, and I could do as I liked about it, so I immediately called out the men. We were out less than twenty-four hours, when a Mr. Boggs, the business manager of the Oklahoman and Times, sent a member of the typographical union, Mr. Brown, who is mechanical superintendent of those publications, to see me, with the request that I call on Mr. Boggs regarding an adjustment, which, of course, was acceptable to me. At the conference that resulted therefrom, at which Messrs. Boggs, Brown, Matthews and myself were present, it was agreed that the members would all come back to work, and that the foreman, who stayed in, would be allowed to become a member of our organization, all receiving a scale of $18 a week, which was an increase of $6 for the men and $9 for one girl, who the manager had put in there to try to disrupt the union. The only question left open was the signing of an agreement, the business manager, Mr. Boggs, claiming that Mr. Gaylord, the general manager, was in New York city and in ill-health, and he did not want to disturb him, and did not want to take the authority himself to sign an agreement, and incidentally said that he was leaving Oklahoma City within a few days to attend the national championship baseball series, and wanted to feel assured that there would be no disturbance in the mailing department during his absence. I assured him that he need have no fear, and it was agreed that on or about the first week in November I would return to that city, provided Messrs. Boggs and Gaylord were in town, to take up with them the signing of the agreement. I left the city with that understanding. It was impossible for me to return to Oklahoma City the first week in November, on account of negotiating a scale in Chicago, which required constant attention, and was surprised to learn by telegram from the secretary of the Oklahoma organization that the Oklahoman management had put in a non-union foreman and refused to see a committee from our organization regarding the matter, and stated that they intended to run an open shop, and had additional men in Oklahoma City to take our men's places if it should be necessary. They now try to justify this action on account of my non-return in the first week of November, when, as a matter of fact, the only question to be taken up on my return there was the signing of the agreement. It has been the custom of the International Typographical Union to guarantee verbal agreements, and I am surely claiming violation of the agreement by the publishers of the Oklahoman and Times of that city, and I presume it will be necessary for me to force the issue with the officers of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and if I can not get an adjustment that way, I suppose I will have to find some other solution; but at the same time you can realize what we have to contend with, and why it is necessary for us to have a large reserve fund.

While in Topeka I succeeded in signing up an agreement with the manager of the Capper publications. About fourteen of our members received an increase in wages, ranging from $1 to $6 a week. The agreement carried with it the recognition of the organization, and the officers of the organization are now attempting to sign up the Journal and the Kansas Farmer of that city, which will about cover all the shops they have there.

Nothing new has developed in Kansas City, although I have made two attempts to get a signed agreement from the Star and Times manager. The men on the Journal got an increase of 5 cents per hour, which does not begin to bring them up to the rate of wages, as they only receive about $2.40 a day. The officers of our organization are working on this proposition, and no doubt will refuse to allow our members to work for less than the scale of wages, which is the proper course.

I am at present in Chicago negotiating a scale with the members of the publishers' association, or rather, attempting to. The scale committee of No. 2 and myself find out that after seven years the agreement that they had with the Hearst people is still in effect. We have contended from the time of the expiration of the old contract that the clause therein containing arbitration required the adjustment of our scale matter in that form, and every tribunal that we have taken the matter before has decided against us. Even the National Board of Arbitration did not concur in our contentions, and we were rather surprised to learn from the secretary of the Publishers' Association of Chicago that our contract still held good, under the clause that we had always referred to. We are now negotiating with the Hearst people in our scale matter, and expect that the results of our labors will be a signed agreement with all the members of the publishers' association, as their secretary, Mr. Cary, is acting with the publishers' committee. Our organization is looking for an increase of 75 cents a day and $1 a night, time and a half overtime, and we expect to have the matter adjusted prior to my leaving this city, unless the matter goes to arbitration.

A resolution was offered at the American Federation of Labor convention by the typographical delegation, requesting that the decision of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor regarding the jurisdiction over stencil and plate-making machines be extended to cover labor headquarters, and I have good reasons to believe that the matter will be decided in our favor, although it has not been acted upon to date, which would give us entire control of those machines.

Information reaches me that William R. Hearst has bought the Morning Advertiser in Boston, and contemplates running a morning edition in that city, which should be a great help to our members there.

There is a chance of the second-class postage matter being opened up again at the next session of congress, and I take this opportunity of requesting the secretaries of all our organizations to write their congressmen and United States senators, requesting that this matter be given another hearing, as I do not believe that the tax placed upon our employers is justified by the facts, and I believe the rates should be readjusted.

There has been a noticeable shortage of men in our craft for the past two or three months. Many requests have been made for men, and I know of cases where they have been offered transportation to the city that the request comes from, and but few have offered their services. I would suggest that if there is anybody in your city looking for employment that they write the secretaries of our organizations in Denver, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Cleveland and Toronto, as I am of the opinion they will receive some valuable information.

Efforts will be made to increase our membership in Milwaukee and at the same time strengthen our organization in the non-union offices, as we have only two newspapers there under our control, and there are about seven that are either open or non-union. No doubt the officers of that organization will have something to say regarding their efforts within a very short time, and I feel safe in saying that you will not see them on the delinquent list in the future.

Quite a few of our members have offered their services to the government, and many have been drafted, but we have no concrete plan of securing the data on this question. I ask the secretaries of our organizations to furnish me at once with the names and addresses of all our members that are now in service, and, if possible, inform me as to where they are situated. CHARLES N. SMITH.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Portland has nothing favorable as yet to report from the scale negotiations, but hopes to in the near future. We have the assistance of R. P. Coburn, our International Typographical Union representative, and he is proving an able hand.

C. A. Parker, long identified with this local, has taken a withdrawal and is working in one of the shipyards here. F. Akers has at last heard the call of Seattle so strong that he could not longer resist, and has accordingly taken a traveler. He gives up a foremanship on the Journal here, and takes a position on the Post-Intelligencer. A. Dibble, of Salt Lake, has deposited a card. He was drafted into the army, but later rejected, and is going to try working at the business here for a while. L. W. PAGET.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

F. R. McPhie, foreman of the Courier-Journal mailing department, died by his own hand November 5, 1917, ill health being the cause for his action.

Nicholas Denunzio was elected a councilman of the city of Louisville on the republican ticket, which swept the city November 6.

D. B. G. Rose, circulation manager on the Evening Post, has resigned his position. He was appointed chairman of the board of public works.

The best meeting ever held by Mailers' Union No. 16 took place last month, in which the spirit of unionism was aroused in every member's heart by grand speeches made by Mr. Skiles and Councilman Denunzio.

A big boom in the mailing trade in Louisville is about to take place. The Times has already added a man to its force, and I expect to announce some more important news in a few months.

Mailers' Union No. 16 wishes to congratulate President Charles N. Smith for the great work he has accomplished in the last few months.

EUGENE E. NORTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Robert B. McKnight has the distinction of being the first mailer to rise from the mail room to the circulation department. He has been the continuous foreman of the Morning Tribune mail room since the first issue of this paper, and is now promoted to city circulator. Judging from Bob's ability as a tireless worker, we feel confident he will make a success of handling the Tribune's city circulation. Tony Macharroli, formerly assistant foreman, has been promoted to the foremanship, while E. F. Campbell rises to the position of assistant foreman.

Work in Los Angeles is very plentiful for our present membership. In fact, it is a little too plentiful for several night men who are compelled to work one and often two afternoons. While there is not enough work to sustain more mailers, we hope conditions will adjust themselves so as to relieve the pressure on the overworked.

Now that our long-drawn-out fight with the publishers for a new working agreement is over, we thought to settle down for a peaceful year of contentment, but it seems that is not to be. We have a little grievance with the Examiner about inserting. Mailers are allowed to work only eight hours, while the "shoemakers" are kept on for several hours longer. Only one, two and sometimes three mailers work on this insert, which the Examiner refuses to pay overtime on.

E. O. Baker is the only Los Angeles mailer to pass the draft examination. He was last heard from at American Lake. Baker passed 100 per cent a perfect man. We are very proud of him, and expect to hear soon that he has been promoted from high private in the rear ranks to some nice job where he can show what a real "go-getter" he is.

Mason Hale has left us for his home town in Texas. Considering that he has taken his wife with him, we think he is going to make an indefinite stay. We miss the little agitator very much.

Some "bone-head" driving a five-ton truck had the temerity to ram Willis Claire's roadster and smash it into junk.

Joe Enright has gone to his home town for a prolonged visit and vacation. Eddie Brown is holding down his regular job on the Tribune.

J. E. Cornelson.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

An editorial in one of the daily papers of recent issue discussed the method of discharging men who are not competent in the work which they are doing, or at least are not competent insofar as the foreman can see. This editor stated that indiscriminate discharging of men was a very poor proceeding, in that although the man may not have been competent in the particular work on which he was employed he may have been competent to do other work in the place. The editorial was so nearly a statement of facts as regards the mailing business that one would have thought the editor had our trade in mind. It is often the case that a mailer comes into a strange mailing room and is about as lost as if he had never before worked at mailing. He may have, for some time, been working at machine running or some other branch of the trade and have gotten stale on the other parts of the business. Or, as in some cases, he may never have gotten a chance to learn to run a machine on account of his former foreman's dislike of teaching his men all the branches of our trade. If a foreman allows an apprentice to serve four years without giving him the advantage of learning all the branches of the trade, he is not only doing the apprentice a grave injustice, but he is also doing a harm to all other foremen for whom this man may thereafter work. But even if the first foreman did not do his duty it is not the place of the second foreman to discharge a man simply because he does not know all the things which go to make a mailer. If the man can not do the work at which he is set on the first trial, he should be given another opportunity, and then if he still fails he should be put at other kinds of work until he is in a place where he can produce suitable results. But this is not all. The man should then make every endeavor to become proficient in that part of the work on which he failed. He should spend his own time in becoming more competent and his employer should allow him the use of whatever tools he needs on which to practice. Every time a man is discharged in a mailroom the publisher is put to the expense of initiating another into the ways of his plant. Even though the new man is very competent, he has to learn the little things which go to make up his day's work, and this takes time, both his own and the foreman's, which could be used to better advantage. There have been cases where men in charge of a room have found a good man on the sublist whom they would like to have as a regular, and they have arranged things in such a way as to make the vacancy by getting rid of some one they did not like. If the actual facts of these cases were looked into it would be found that the office had lost money in the change and at least one man had been done an injustice.

President Smith's plan of standardizing mailing work as far as possible is the best proposition which has been before this organization for a long time. We all know that papers in all parts of the country can not be mailed in the same way, but we also know that the biggest part of the work can be made similar to a great extent. Then a man could come into a mailing room and not have to have a special machine bought for him, or have to learn to wrap bundles with the butts to the right or to the left, or do the number of other things in a strange way which he has been doing altogether differently in his part of the country. While it might look like favoritism, we might be able to even designate the general sort of hand mailing machines to be used in our jurisdiction. Foremen especially should take up this proposition of our president and study it. We all know he would never have proposed such a thing unless he had been very sure of his ground, and no doubt a letter addressed to him would bring information which would be welcome. We now have over fifty cities in the mailers' trade district and probably two hundred or more foremen, and if they would get together there is no doubt they would be able to give each other valuable information, if they all kept in mind the fact that it is the journeyman who makes their position as successful foremen possible.

M. R. Gray.

TORONTO, ONT.

The question that occurs to many of us, and which current events forebode a possibility, and will the effects be similar, is this: Will the war affect the position of organized labor here in a like manner as it has organized labor in Great Britain? If the preservation of our union and the hard-won rights that we have been battling for for many years are destroyed, or "diluted," as the term is used in Britain, will the recovery be as rapid, especially with the advent of women into industries which heretofore knew them not? The solution depends largely upon the caliber and stamina of those left behind to continue to exercise the most unceasing efforts to preserve and perpetuate their craft organizations and to avoid the deadly evil of a policy of "drift." We must bravely face the issue and do our best. Many prophesy and see an earthly paradise after the war and the putting into practice of the Golden Rule. I, for one, am afraid that they will be doomed to disappointment, and the world will wag on in the same old way, with the same old worship of Mammon, as it was since the beginning of time.

This local is feeling the effects of the military service act. George Webber, "Doc" Winstanley and Frank Wright did not seek exemption, but enlisted in the heavy artillery and are now three gunners.

Monk Mulock has been discharged from the army with a badly shattered foot, obtained in the Ypres salient, but with the bright optimism of youth looks forward to again being able to earn his own living.

John Walsh has deposited a traveler from Chicago, and went on a regular situation at the Globe office the next morning.

The complexion of the next Canadian parliament may be somewhat changed by the advent of labor members, a decided innovation, as there never was, to my recollection, a bona fide labor member in the Dominion house who was not a tail on some political kite.

George L. Myland, of Peterborough, secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Conference of Typographical Unions, has deposited his card in No. 91. He is a clever chap, and a right good scout, and we feel sure he will be of great value to organized labor in Toronto. J. G. GALLAGHER.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Our scale committee is endeavoring to get the publishers to grant an increase in wages for the period of the war. While our contract does not expire until January 1, 1921, the committee feels justified in asking for an increase, as the present scale, which was made before we entered the war, is not sufficient to meet the high cost of living. At this writing about half the publishers have been visited and the committee feels certain that the request will receive favorable consideration.

The magazine publishers are changing their system of routing and tagging on account of the new postal laws. Just how this will affect us is uncertain.

Negotiations are being carried on with the McGraw-Hill Publishing Company. If these end successfully it will mean much to us. This has been a non-union establishment for eleven years. Another conference was held with representatives of non-union binderies at which they submitted fourteen questions. Answers are being prepared to these questions and an agreement may be reached by our next writing.

E. Patrick deposited a traveler, having recently returned from Cleveland. H. Mahon and E. Wright took out travelers.

As a further proof of our loyalty to the government we purchased $1,000 worth of bonds of the second Liberty loan. CHARLES A. GALLAGHER.

THE SECRETARY'S LETTER.

During the month the mailers' local in Dayton, Ohio, has sent in a remittance to cover all arrearages for the period from June, 1916, to May, 1917, inclusive, with a promise that the balance will be forthcoming in the near future. It seems that where new locals are formed they entirely ignore the matter of paying per capita tax to the Mailers' Trade District Union, no matter how many communications they receive on the subject. Several new locals have been formed that have not as yet sent in their per capita tax. One local of long standing has not paid any per capita tax since May, 1916. That local is Utica, N. Y. The secretary of No. 33 has been asked repeatedly to send his remittances.

The following locals are delinquent: Utica, N. Y.; Girard, Kan.; Montreal, Can.; Tacoma, Wash.; Terre Haute, Ind., and Wichita, Kan.

FROM LOCAL UNIONS

SCRANTON, PA.

"The Electric City, 1918."

Scranton has many points of interest to the delegates and visitors who will come here next year for the big session, and it also has the warmest-hearted people in the country, a people that will give the glad hand of welcome to the visitors. The Scranton welcome is known across the country, and makes every visitor want to come back and bring the family along and settle down for a permanent residence.

One of the big natural attractions that will interest the delegates is Moosic lake. This is a broad lake of cool crystal water from mountain springs that is a delight on the hot summer days and that furnishes bathing better than that to be had in most cities. The lake is reached by an electric road that is known as the "Gateway to the Clouds." This road climbs a steep mountain and in the twelve miles from the center of Scranton it climbs 1,300 feet. The lake is 2,000 feet above sea level and the center of the city 700 feet. The view from this road as it ascends the sheer mountain is one of the most magnificent in the east and thousands of travelers say it reminds them of the climb to Pikes Peak in Colorado. At the lake there is fine fishing, with plenty of fish to catch, a big dancing pavilion, good music, and all that goes with a modern park.

Nay Aug park, Scranton's big natural municipal park, is another favored spot with home folks and visitors. Here Roaring Brook goes over the famous Nay Aug waterfalls, and the city has taken over many acres for a park. Much of the park is wild rugged mountain, but a good portion has been laid out in grass plots, flower beds, paved drives, conservatories, museums, etc. The park is only a few minutes' ride from the center of the city. There are many other lakes and parks in easy reach of Scranton, all in the cool, clean mountains where one may find pure cool air on the hottest summer day and where one may always find good-hearted, congenial folk who are glad to welcome visitors. They will be especially glad to welcome our guests because of all the good things we have been saying of the International Typographical Union membership for the past few years when we were campaigning to get the 1918 convention for Scranton.

The Detroit Fuse, a real live four-page paper, issued by the staff of the News of that city, in bidding good-by to their old home prior to occupying their handsome new quarters, made its appearance among some of the members of No. 112 during the month. The list of the employes of the composing room published in the Fuse contains 128 names. The writer is indebted to Mr. Flannagan, of the chapel, for a copy of the paper.

The International Textbook Mutual Benefit Association, a beneficial society conducted by the members of the chapel of the International Correspondence Schools printers, closed its fiscal year October 31. The society started out on its twentieth year of existence by re-electing the old officers, as follows: President, A. J. Langan; vice-president, J. S. Burke; financial secretary, Joseph Oliver. At the end of each year the society disbands, dividing the funds in the treasury pro rata among the members, and then reorganizes for the ensuing year.

The Scranton Republican celebrated its fiftieth anniversary November 1 by issuing an edition of forty-two pages. On November 5 the management of the Republican entertained its employes with a banquet at the Hotel Casey, the leading hostelry in the city. Col. L. A. Watres, the principal owner of the Republican, was the toastmaster of the occasion. In opening the festivities he paid a glowing tribute to the faithfulness of his employes, and closed by saying that "newspapers, like men, must utilize their thoughts and energies for cementing and betterment of society. The Republican has gone through fifty years and stands today as it has ever stood for civic righteousness and the things good citizenship demands." The Republican started as a weekly in August, 1856, and on November 1, 1867, the daily paper was launched. The late Hon. Joseph A. Scranton secured a half-interest in the weekly Republican in September, 1867, from F. A. Crandall, and in that same year the Daily Republican was born. In March, 1869, Mr. Scranton became sole owner of the paper. The early history of Scranton Typographical Union centers around the Republican office. Next year the Scranton Union will celebrate its golden jubilee in connection with the International Typographical Union convention. All the charter members of No. 112 were employed on the Republican in the sixties when the charter was received from the National Typographical Union, under date of January 1, 1868. The charter bears the name of H. G. Blair, S. A. Lackey, J. W. Freeman, N. W. Buckley, Thomas Wagner, A. J. Spangelberger and R. M. Keller. The only surviving charter member of the above list is R. M. Keller, who is at present employed on the Brooklyn Eagle as a proofreader. Mr. Keller will be the guest of honor at the golden jubilee of our union next August. Mr. Lackey remained in continuous employment on the Republican up to the time of his death, Mr. Wagner retiring several years previous. Mr. Blair became a Methodist minister later in life, dying at Towanda, Pa., April 18, 1914. "Nick" Buckley died at Buffalo a few years ago. There are a number of printers scattered throughout the country who worked on the Republican in the early seventies, while still others reside in this city. Of the latter, Marshall Preston, who is now in one of our hospitals; M. W. ("Commodore") Walton and George W. Weeks, at present employed on the Scranton Times; John R. Farr, present congressman from this district, and William Corless, International Typographical Union representative, are on the roster of No. 112. John H. Ross, of Syracuse, N. Y., is another "oldtimer" of the seventies who worked here. The present force of the Republican composing room is composed of the following: Joseph E. Hosie, foreman; Edward J. Golden, assistant foreman; B. F. Moore, B. J. Hosie, Edward ("Sally") Waters, William Hoadley, James Gilmartin, Frank Kilcullen, John Kilcullen, Joseph Battle, Eugene Biglin, Philip Hughes, A. J. Jennings, operators; A. J. Mahon, proofreader; Carl Lamping, machinist; Jacob Herzog, Mathias Andrews, Dennis Watson, Walter Kelley, Joseph Craig, Fred C. Hanselman, ad compositors; Joseph Lally, Robert Murray, Jerome Burke, William Kilcullen, apprentices.

Representative William Corless attended the November meeting of No. 112 and took a lively interest in the proceedings. He was returning from the western end of the state, where he succeeded in signing up two very important agreements. One was for the New Castle Union with a $4 increase for all members. The job scale will be $24 per week. The other was for Altoona Union. This agreement carries with it a $4 increase for day work and a $5 increase for night work. The job scale is also $24 per week. Representative Corless has just reason to feel proud of his work in this territory, the scales being as high as any paid in the larger cities of the state.

The silver jubilee souvenirs of the Home, issued by the executive council, are in great demand among our members. It is a very commendable publication, and our executive council is to be congratulated on the thoughtfulness of issuing the souvenir in its present shape. It should prove a source of good advertising for our organization among prominent men outside of the craft.

Charles F. O'Malley, of No. 112, has joined the aviation corps. He is now learning the flying "stunts" in Texas. Francis McLane, apprentice at the Scrantonian office, brother of Gerald McLane, of No. 112, also joined the flying squadron during the month, and is now at Fort Slocum, N. Y. James Rowe, a member of the Times chapel, was pleasantly remembered by his co-workers previous to his departure for Camp Meade, Md., where he is at present a member of the field artillery. He was the recipient of a wrist watch and a trench mirror. F. J. Rowinski also left during the month for Camp Meade. He worked at the Polyglot Press office for some time before joining the colors.

Ed Murray, formerly of the Times chapel, has gone to Chicago. Isaac Harris, of Binghamton Union, was in town recently. Leon Kistler, of our sister union, Wilkes-Barre, was circulating among friends in Scranton during the month.

The poetical effusion, "I'm Saving My Pennies for Scranton," dealing with the coming International convention, which appeared in "Colonel" Jim Bowen's Philadelphia letter in last month's JOURNAL, was an effort worthy of the author. There are those in Scranton who believe it to be the brain work of "Colonel" Bowen in collaboration with Harry Shaner, two of No. 2's most popular and well-known members.

Are you making up your mind to come to Scranton?

You'll miss a treat if you don't help us celebrate next August.

The announcement of the entertainment features will come along in due time. Watch for it.

The "resourcefulness" of Scranton printers has never been questioned. This big word with all its synonyms will be defined in every particular during the week of the convention.

And the souvenir? There have been others—ours will surely stand the acid test. Your local has received a circular letter from the Scranton souvenir committee; we'll be glad to receive an answer and mighty glad to receive your order.

Take Colonel Bowen's advice and save your pennies for "that trip to Scranton."

And don't forget Wilkes-Barre day! That's going to be a winner. A. J. LANGAN.

MISSOURI VALLEY TYPOGRAPHICAL CONFERENCE.

The fifth annual meeting of the Missouri Valley Typographical Conference will be held at Oklahoma City January 21-22. Splendid entertainment for delegates and visitors is promised by Oklahoma City Union. All those expecting to attend the meeting are urged to try to reach Oklahoma City Saturday evening preceding the opening of the convention. It is likely that an effort will be made to induce all visitors and delegates to stop at the headquarters hotel. President Scott has promised to attend and it is expected that among other notables present will be Secretary-Treasurer Hays, Charles Hertenstein and T. W. McCullough. Thirty-four unions are affiliated with the conference. Each union is entitled to three delegates. Election of delegates should be at the December meeting, although those elected at the January meeting undoubtedly will be seated. Many matters of great interest to the printing trade will be discussed at this meeting, not the least important of which will be the effect of the war upon the membership and the printing industry.

The non-union E. W. Stephens Publishing Company, of Columbia, Mo., failed to land the state university printing contract, which was awarded to the Missouri Printing and Publishing Company, of Mexico, Mo. The contract amounts to about $20,000 a year.

Representative Gadd spent ten days in Nebraska in October, visiting Fremont, Grand Island and Hastings. No success attended his efforts at organization in these towns. At Grand Island and Hastings wages are $18 to $24 a week, eight hours, and the men seem satisfied with present conditions. Being strictly an agricultural district, with few industries, organization work is difficult, Mr. Gadd says.

Printers are backing a movement for a labor temple in Hannibal, Mo.

President Frank Milhollan, of Bismarck (N. D.) Union, is grieving because he can't attend the Oklahoma City meeting. Sioux City very likely will be represented, and it's a long way from Sioux City to the Oklahoma metropolis.

St. Joseph Union is asking for an increase of $4.50 in the job scale, which now is $20 per week.

St. Joseph, Mo. CHARLES RHODE.

ROCK ISLAND, MOLINE, ILL.-DAVENPORT, IOWA.

In some ways things have picked up here, and now practically "all hands are on the job." Walter F. Driffill was in the Home for a while this fall, but was finally called to close this life's cares September 28 at the home of his father, Louis B. Driffill, in Davenport, where every comfort possible was provided for him, and he was tenderly cared for by those in the Driffill home, his devoted wife being constantly at his bedside in her brave efforts to try to relieve the sufferer, and hoping against fate that there might be an ultimate recovery. Mr. Driffill was a skilled workman as a linotype operator, and was one of the organizers of the Driffill Printing Company of Rock Island.

Thomas I. Stanley, of Moline, was called to lay aside the editor's pen, when on October 12 pneumonia of a severe type claimed him. He is one who will be missed in many ways, for years having been a live and progressive printer and newspaperman of Moline, in his time having been instrumental in starting two daily papers which were turned over to other hands in flourishing condition, even though successors on them failed to make good. His latest enterprise in the newspaper line, the Moline Sunday Press, which he had successfully conducted for several years past, is now being continued by Mrs. Stanley and Harry I. and Thomas I., jr., who are all printers, and know how to keep up the Stanley reputation for a good live newsy sheet. The daily papers of Rock Island, Moline and Davenport voluntarily advanced the scale from $23 to $24, beginning with the last week of October, and this raise is much appreciated, for the cost of living has increased several dollars per week in these patriotic times, when the man who labors must do his bit and pay much more for the necessities of life for himself and those depending upon his income for their support.

In accord with hundreds of labor unionists here, No. 107 went on record as opposing and protesting against the placing of a saloon in the Rock Island Industrial Home building, and many of those who may partake of the occasional glass of the amber believe it would be a black eye to the cause of organized labor to allow a public saloon in a temple dedicated to the advancement of labor's best interests, and chartered with the intention that it might prove only helpful and uplifting to the physical and mental well-being of the men and women who should meet within its walls to consider ways and means for progress and better conditions and higher and nobler aims for the workers of this city. No. 107 instructed its delegates to vote against the proposed desecration of the property for any such purpose.

The government arsenal here is a very active place these days; hundreds of carpenters, masons and laborers have been busy for months past constructing additional buildings to the already extensive equipment on the island located in the Mississippi here and containing about 1,000 acres of ground; they are adding to the already large force of employes who are engaged in the manufacture of munitions and army supplies. There is some talk of the federal government closing all saloons within a five-mile radius of the arsenal, together with any place of vice or evil where soldiers might be tempted to disgrace themselves or the great country which they have sworn to uphold in all that is for the uplift and betterment of mankind—the world over. JAMES A. WEED.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The most important matter transpiring in this section during the past month was the handing down by Justice Lehman of a decision in the case known as Hamilton vs. Rouse, etc., in which the decision of the union was sustained, and costs placed upon the appellant. This was the suit growing out of the consolidation of the New York Press and the New York Sun, which was taken through the various courts of our organization and then carried into the law courts.

The writer has been a neutral observer of the proceedings of the case and hopes that its termination will have a discouraging effect on others in the future to take their union grievances into the law courts.

The decision was a lengthy one, and shows that the learned justice made a thorough study of not only the case, but of union law. He left no angle of the case unexplained, and closed the decision with a very significant sentence, which said: "Since there was some evidence on which they were required to pass under the constitution, and it does not appear that they have disregarded the procedure provided in the constitution or misconstrued its provisions, their decision on the facts is final and can give rise to no cause of action for damage, even if the court might possibly have reached another conclusion." The matter of costs in the event that the union lost the case was causing much uneasiness, as it was pretty generally estimated that the damages would reach at least $50,000. This would have meant an assessment on the membership. Notwithstanding the union won its case, it will be compelled to pay $1,500 for the defense of its actions. While the court orders cost on the appellant it does not cover counsel fees for the defendant.

The regular meeting of No. 6, held on November 18, was largely attended and the hall was packed to the doors in anticipation of news on the newspaper scale and from the book and job branch to ratify the agreement recently entered into between the employers and officers of the union, whereby the former agreed to give a $2 war bonus, notwithstanding their scale contract does not expire until 1919. An endeavor was made to change the agreement somewhat, but the great majority was not in a mood to start a parley when they needed the money so badly. After much discussion the action of the officers was endorsed unanimously. On January 1 another dollar will be due on the scale.

A letter was received, signed by Mrs. Julia A. Watson and Mrs. J. J. Soffel, in which No. 6 was notified that the organization of which they were president and secretary, respectively, would hereafter be known as Big Six Auxiliary, having withdrawn from all international affiliations, and would at all times be at the service of Typographical Union No. 6. These women, with their associates, have been of much service to the union in many ways and are untiring in their efforts to assist the sick and distressed. Recently a member of the New York Sun chapel was stricken with heart trouble at his home in Hoboken. Mrs. Soffel was soon at the house, and, after death, extended every assistance, and finally visited No. 6 headquarters and notified the officers. Mrs. Soffel is the wife of the secretary of Hoboken Typographical Union, but is also very much interested in the work of Typographical Union No. 6. The meeting endorsed the action of the Big Six Auxiliary.

William H. Hughes, president of Scranton Typographical Union No. 112 and chairman of the convention committee, and A. J. Langan, chairman of the souvenir committee, were present, and the former was introduced and spoke of the 1918 convention and their plans of entertainment, and extended a cordial invitation to the members of No. 6 to be their guests at that time. It was decided that No. 6 would take two pages in the souvenir. A motion was passed in which an invitation was extended to the Printers' League of New Jersey to hold its next quarterly meeting in New York city. This league was organized back in the 1906 unpleasantness and was of much assistance to not only those unions in the state of New Jersey that composed it, but New York and other nearby unions. The meetings of this league are quite interesting and are attended by many members of No. 6 interested in the labor movement, therefore one of the reasons for extending the hospitality of the "big town" for one of its sessions.

Charles Francis, of the Francis Press, paid a visit and was given a rousing reception. He made a talk along the line of the employe and employer being partners and said that the employe was a necessity to the employer. He became reminiscent and spoke of the first meeting to form the Printers' League, a union shop employers' association, when the typothetæ started their war on the typographical union in 1906. After sending out several hundred invitations but four responded. These were Messrs. Cherouny, Willet, Meaney and Francis; but though a somewhat discouraging start, they finally reached a membership of some eighty-odd. Mr. Francis has been of much assistance to the typographical union, being in a position to iron out the wrinkles in many an unpleasantness between the employer and the union. He believes in living and let live and has demonstrated this on many occasions.

President Rouse, Representative McLoughlin, Fred N. Cornell, Michael N. Salmore, the writer, and several other members of No. 6 were in attendance at the quarterly meeting of the Printers' League of New Jersey, which met at Newark on Sunday afternoon, October 28. The writer has attended a number of these sessions in the past, but found this one the most interesting. After the delegates from the different unions throughout the state had made their reports, which were extremely interesting, the technical school question and others of vital importance were taken up and discussed. The Printers' League of New Jersey is doing good work and, as much of it reaches across the North river to New York, it would not be a bad idea for No. 6 to become affiliated, providing the laws of the league would permit it.

The honor roll of No. 6 is gradually increasing in size and the last Monthly Bulletin shows 174 full cards of those joining the colors deposited with Secretary O'Connell, and eighty-eight apprentices.

Morris Reis, an employing printer and a member of Typographical Union No. 6, whose place of business is at 24 East One Hundred and Tenth street, was recently awarded a prize of $10 by the New York printers in a cover page contest, and donated it to the Union Printers Home.

Thomas W. Brooks, well-known member of No. 6 for more than forty years and last employed on the New York American, was a recent visitor, he having come from Petersburg, Va., where he is making his home with his sister, to attend the second annual dinner of the old Star chapel. Mr. Brooks retired from the business that he has followed for the major portion of his life some twelve months ago, and, with the assistance of the benefits from the old age pension, is passing the latter years quietly in the southern city.

On October 18 last the Brooklyn Standard-Union chapel, appreciating the thoughtfulness of its proprietor in behalf of his employes, passed the following set of resolutions, which speak for themselves:

It has been announced by the management of the Brooklyn Union Publishing Company that it has insured the life of each of its employes in sums ranging from $500 to $1,500, according to length of service, without cost to the insured, the policy being made out in the employe's name, and he is designated the beneficiary; also included is a disability provision up to the age of 60 years. This wise and generous provision for the welfare and interest of its employes and their dependents calls for commendation, and the hope that it will be an incentive to other employers to adopt like measures; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Standard-Union chapel, in special meeting assembled, do express to the management of the Brooklyn Union Publishing Company our thanks and sincere appreciation of its thoughtfulness and kindness in presenting, free of cost, a life insurance policy, accompanied by a disability clause; therefore, be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the management of the Brooklyn Union Publishing Company, and the same spread in full on the minutes of the chapel.

J. Jefferson Hughes, Chairman.
John Maley, Secretary.

James J. Nolan was recently nominated to succeed himself as chairman of the New York World chapel without opposition. This speaks for itself, and is an assurance that Mr. Nolan's administration of one of the largest chapels in the city for the past year has been a successful one. Other officers elected were: First vice-chairman, Isaac Marks; second vice-chairman, Charles C. Hartley; third vice-chairman, James T. Lynch; secretary, Austin Hewson; auditors, Al Ralston, John E. Rutan, John C. Wardell.

Moss Shandel, a well-known member of No. 6, who some time back enlisted in the Canadian flying squadron, was a recent visitor at union headquarters in the World building. He was carrying the stripes of a sergeant and said he was feeling in the best of health, and his appearance bore out this statement. He said he expected shortly to be sent to some southern port, from which to be shipped to Russia to help out that disorganized people in the war against Prussianism.

The regular meeting of Typographical Union No. 6, held on October 21, admitted to its ranks five probationary members, five new members and reinstated two. It also put the stigma of rejection upon two that wished to re-affiliate. The benefit board's recommendation to admit Robert M. Jackson and James C. Harlow to the Union Printers Home was endorsed, as was the recommendation to place Nelson W. Curtis, Francis L. Eames and John F. Lonsdale on the old age pension list. The application of G. Johnson Froland for the local old age pension was passed on favorably. The privilege of the floor was granted to ex-President James F. Murphy, who thanked those who assisted in the purchase for the Union Printers Home of the Catholic Encyclopedia, which was presented previous to the recent convention held at the Home city and accepted by the board of trustees at their annual meeting. Mr. Murphy, in well-chosen words, thanked not only those who contributed the money, but also those who assisted in other ways to make the project a success.

The New York Printers' Athletic Association held its annual meeting on Sunday, October 28, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, T. Jeff Hamilton, of the Brooklyn Standard-Union; vice-president, Charles Baim, New York American; secretary, V. A. Riddiough, Journal of Commerce; treasurer, George T. Adams, New York Times; national commissioner, George E. O'Donnell, Brooklyn Citizen. It was the most largely attended meeting of the association ever held. John Koch, of the Herald, was re-elected manager, and Walter Roach, of the New York Times, assistant manager.

The Printers' Rambling club assembled at the Municipal building on Tuesday, November 13, bound for the White House, Canarsie, where Joe Hirschfield, chief rambler, had prepared a feast of excellence the boys will long remember. Rambling along the shore and an exciting bowling contest occupied the afternoon, but the real fun began when the chief rambler, heading a band of twelve pieces, made their way to the large hall, where members and guests, all wearing black high hats, joined in the parade. The party proceeded to the dining room, which was handsomely decorated with American flags and bunting, and sixty-eight sat down and did justice to an excellent meal. After appetites were satisfied, the party was entertained by Messrs. Fred Gaisel, Jack Coleman, Tom McQueen, Harry Clohissie, Jim Griffon, William Riley, Tom Chappel and J. Cahill, while Tom Hughes presided at the piano. Mr. Hirschfield received the congratulations and good wishes of those present for the excellent manner in which the affair was conducted and made the closing event of the season the greatest of all successes.

With the demise of James Haltigan, Typographical Union No. 6 lost one of its old war horses. He died at his home, Caryl, near Yonkers, on Sunday, October 28. For fifty years he was well known as a newspaper man, writer and historian, and served as chairman of the World for fifteen years. His personal character may be summed up in the following tribute to his memory: "He was an honorable man, loved and esteemed by those who knew him; one who had earnestly tried to lighten the burdens of his fellow men. James Haltigan was born in Kilkenny, Ireland, and as a boy took an active part in the Fenian movement in the early sixties, and never relinquished his efforts to obtain for his native land the fullest measure of independence. His father, John Haltigan, was one of those who was imprisoned by the British government from 1865 to 1870." "Jim," as he was known to his intimates, came to New York in 1867, having learned his trade as printer in the office of the Kilkenny Journal, and published in 1870 the first Catholic Sunday paper in this city, the Sunday Citizen. Later he published the Celtic Monthly. In 1884 Mr. Haltigan entered the employ of the World and continued with that paper until his death. A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated at St. Denis' church, Yonkers, on Wednesday, October 31, at 10 a. m., by the pastor, Rev. Richard O. Hughes, who also delivered the funeral sermon, one of the most eloquent and eulogistic ever heard in the church. Father Hughes had known Mr. Haltigan since the parish was founded, ten years ago, and the tribute he paid to his memory because of his devotion to God, country and family was profoundly impressive. The honorary pallbearers representing the World chapel were James J. Nolan, the present chairman; Joseph Gardner, William Strong, John O'Brien, Abe Firzell and Robert H. Deery. Interment was in St. Joseph's cemetery, Yonkers. Mr. Haltigan is survived by a devoted wife, two sons, a daughter, several grandchildren, four brothers and one sister. One brother, Patrick Haltigan, is reading clerk in the house of representatives at Washington. The World chapel, at its regular meeting, ordered a committee appointed to draft suitable resolutions, which will be presented to the family.

Grover S. Thompson, another oldtimer, who retired some ten years ago and for several years has been a beneficiary of the old age pension, died Saturday, October 27, at the age of 87 years. Mr. Thompson was at one time foreman of the New York Times composing room, later working on the Herald.

Jacob M. McClellan, well-known member of No. 6 and employed on the Sun, died on Thursday, November 1, at his home, 52 Newark street, Hoboken, N. J., after a short illness of heart trouble. Mr. McClellan was seldom absent from an International Typographical Union convention, and was a visitor at the recent one held at Colorado Springs. He leaves an aged mother and brother to mourn his loss.

Other deaths during the month were Patrick J. Sharkey, John P. Fogarty, J. F. Binning, Thomas B. Boylan.

The second annual reunion of surviving members of the New York Star chapel (1886-1890) was held at the Broadway Central hotel, Sunday afternoon, November 18. The committee having the matter in charge made the date and arrangements previous to the change of the union meeting from the second to the third Sunday, therefore the reason for both being held on the same day, which, no doubt, was the cause of a number being absent from the dinner. An excellent meal was provided and the coming together of old-time associates of years ago caused much reminiscence, and there was talkfest in abundance. Among those present were Joseph Mulcahey, make-up editor on the Evening Journal; Irving White, Evening World; Harry Alford, C. M. Armstrong, A. A. Benny, Edward C. Bell, Thomas W. Brooks, W. D. Caspari, M. L. Frescoln, Julius Gottlieb, John Kinney, Patrick H. Loftus, Charles Newman, Nathan Newman, Al E. Owens, Charles O'Brien, George Perry, Patrick Scanlon, A. J. Westcott, Charles M. Williams, Harry Wood and W. L. D. Wright. Letters of regret were read from Marsden G. Scott, Leon H. Rouse and John S. O'Connell. Officers selected for the 1918 reunion were: M. L. Frescoln, president; George Perry, secretary-treasurer, and W. D. Caspari, W. L. D. Wright and Edward C. Bell, as committee.

The recent demand by the pressmen brought about an unlooked for result with the printers in the Evening Post book room. During a conversation that John Nolty, the proprietor, had with his foreman, William R. Converse, relative to an offer to the pressmen of an increase of $2 a week, the former spoke of the old piece hands in the composing room and declared he would give them a war bonus of $2 above what they made at piecework, and authorized Mr. Converse to so notify them. Mr. Nolty has shown the fair spirit with his employes in many ways, and his latest move is highly commendable and, it is hoped, will have its influence on others. The Post book room has been a heaven for the old who had been released from offices on account of machinery, etc., and this $2 war bonus will affect about forty. Mr. Nolty has as a foreman one of those who are very scarce, having the faculty of retaining the respect and love of those who are employed by him, with the result that the work is a pleasure—if that term can be used. Mr. Converse, with that happy disposition, has no doubt smoothed out the rough places many a time for his employer, where another foreman would have acted differently and left a different feeling between employer and employe. If we had more of the William R. Converse type of foremen it is the belief of the writer that there would be a better feeling between the front office and the composing room.

Michael N. Salmore, for a number of years monotype operator on the World, was recently appointed instructor in the technical branch of the public school in Brownsville, Brooklyn. He has the best wishes of many friends for success in his new undertaking.

At the November meeting of the Herald-Telegram chapel a motion was adopted to appropriate $50 to buy Christmas presents for the fifteen who had joined the colors from the composing-room floor.

The representatives of the publishers and conference committee of the union met to talk over the scale recently adopted on Thursday, November 15. The session adjourned to continue its battle on Thursday, November 22.

D. D. Sullivan, deputy state printer of California, stopped off in New York on his way to the American Federation of Labor convention at Buffalo, where he was a delegate.

WILLIAM MOUNCE.

URBANA, OHIO.

Urbana is a clean, healthy, temperate little town of about 10,000 people and a good place in which to "live and have your being." No. 747 has found itself forced to put through a disciplinary law, levying a fine of $10 on any of its members found guilty of "jumping." It is hoped this will have the desired effect, as the work here (mostly pedigree catalogs) is of such a nature that the absence of even one man in the busy season may mean great delay and inconvenience.

The Gaumer Publishing Company has one of the best-lighted, best-ventilated and altogether one of the most thoroughly modern and up-to-date offices to be found anywhere. They publish the Urbana Citizen (morning), the Urbana Democrat (evening), do a general line of job work and, when forced to do so, have been known to get out four and five pedigrees in one week "on the side." They operate seven Mergenthalers. Sixteen of our present seventeen members are employed by this firm, and this is the off season. For almost nine months in the year they could use about twenty-five men if they could get them to "stick."

Our seventeenth member is the hustling Robert Dunne, who is in business here for himself.

It might be well for some of the members who desire to make a change and want to "stick" to a job to get in touch with Urbana.

WHEELING, W. VA.

During the month each member of this local received a book entitled, "Condensed History of the International Typographical Union and History of Typographical Union No. 79." This book was compiled by Edward ("Ned") Sims, president of No. 79, and will be cherished by every member of this local. In presenting the book the committee in charge of same has the following to say:

TO THE READERS.

The following history of the International Typographical Union was taken from the History of the International Typographical Union and the author's personal observations inserted with the intent of bringing out the important features in condensed form for the benefit of the younger members. The author, Mr. Ned Sims, became so interested in the work that he decided to compile the history of Local Union No. 79, International Typographical Union, and as there were no records for the local union from 1865 until it disbanded, and all records from its re-organization, August 31, 1880, up to July 1, 1884, had been destroyed, the work of compiling required a great deal of research. However, this work was completed and the data and officials, we are satisfied, are accurate. As the local history progressed the author read it at the stated meetings of Local Union No. 79, and it created so much interest that a motion was made that the history be placed in the hands of a committee for publication, which was carried unanimously. The history was written as a labor of love, and turned over to the committee of Local Union No. 79 with a belief that it will be read by the younger members of the union and influence them to take a more active part in the conduct of their union affairs.

COMMITTEE OF No. 79.

Former members of No. 79 who wish a copy of this book, please send their addresses to Secretary E. D. Conner, 640 Market street.

On October 22 the Register chapel bade farewell to another of its members, Everett Cody, who has joined the aviation signal corps and is now in Texas. Chairman McLeish, after a neat speech, introduced John Winder, the foreman, who, in behalf of the members of the chapel, presented Mr. Cody with a handsome wrist watch and smokes.

John Bierkotte, who has been working in New York for the past few years, is again with us and has landed a daylight situation on the News.

George B. Barr has announced that he will be a candidate for delegate to the next International convention, to be held at Scranton, Pa.

Carl E. Neer, foreman of the West Virginia Company plant, has resigned and is now connected with the Owl printshop.

Elmer Shafer, of the West Virginia Printing Company force, has accepted the foremanship at the Bullard printing house.

The Register has added another model 5 linotype to its battery of machines. This makes ten—all linotypes.

HARRISBURG, PA.

After solicitation from many acquaintances I again "take my pen in hand" to annoy the editor of THE JOURNAL and try to illuminate the minds of the proletariat as to what's doing in the capital city of Pennsylvania. During my abandonment of the task one letter appeared from this city which caused considerable local disturbance, for which no blame attaches to the editor of THE JOURNAL; but some misstatements of facts appearing in THE JOURNAL over the signature of one of our members were seized upon by the circulation department of the paper on which said member works and were used in its advertising columns to the disadvantage of a competitor. And yet some correspondents complain of the editor bluepenciling their effusions.

At the late election Daniel L. Kiester, foreman of Ray's printing office, was elected to the office of mayor of our city. Dan has served two terms in the state legislature, along with filling many minor city offices, and it is certain that his administration of city affairs will be as complete and systematic as his conduct of the printing office of which he is the master mind, and which has a reputation for excellent work. Incidentally, Dan bucked the bosses and the machine and won out as labor's candidate. A parade was held in his honor by his adherents on Saturday evening, November 25.

Work in this city has been very good; everybody is working. However, the outlook for the future is not so good. At the letting of the contract for state printing the Aughinbaugh plant was the lowest bidder, taking the work from the Ray plant. Many of the former employes of the Rays are now with the present contractor, Aughinbaugh, but the remainder, including about twenty printers and operators, will be out of work about the time this letter is published, and it will require an unusual amount of work to assimilate this bunch. At the same time the Aughinbaugh plant succeeded in underbidding others for the state work proper. The Telegraph succeeded in securing the contract for printing the Legislative Journal, which means work for twenty to thirty men for the first six months of odd-numbered years (biennially).

Many changes have taken place in the personnel of the several printing offices in this city. At the time the Telegraph purchased and suspended the Star-Independent about half of the latter force went to the Telegraph; the balance were given two weeks' pay in lieu of notice, and were able to draw down pay in addition thereto by the establishment of the News, where they secured employment. About twenty-five of Ray's old force are now employed at the Aughinbaugh plant. Notable changes were: Elliott Wharton, for many years machinist at the Telegraph, to the News. He was succeeded by William Sourber. Russell ("Red") Spickler, machinist on the Patriot, has gone to Philadelphia, succeeded by Mr. McCabe, of Reading.

Fourteen members of No. 14 have enlisted in the service of our country and the union has sent Christmas remembrances to each of them. Of this number three are in France, Walter Shaffer, Linwood and Edward Wanbaugh.

Miss C. P. Fincher was with us for a month, after which she returned to New York. Eddie Bamberger also is making Harrisburg his headquarters for the present, working in the state office.

Everybody wants to go to Scranton, but enough will remain at home to act as guides for and to entertain delegates and visitors to the 1918 convention who wish to stop off and look us over.

ST. ALBANS, W. VA.

St. Albans, eighteen miles from Charleston, W. Va., now has three union printing offices—two newspapers and one book and job office. Part of the force pay dues in No. 3, Cincinnati, and part in No. 146, Charleston. Business is good, with always a few days' work for the traveling members.

GEORGE K. ANGEL.

ASBURY-LONG BRANCH, N. J.

The attendance at the November meeting improved by a number of members who might be termed "strangers," and the result was a lively meeting full of "pep," with remarks from some with a "punch," and as a fitting climax "eats" were served with the necessary "wet" goods.

A semi-weekly paper has been launched at Long Branch, the Monmouth American, with a slogan "It Covers Monmouth County Like the Dew," and is to be a daily as soon as the plant can be set up. B. B. Bobbitt, formerly editor of the Record, is the Monmouth American's editor and manager. We are much concerned over the new publication, owing to the fact that it carries the "little joker." This is one step further toward the goal of our ambition, "Old Monmouth 100 per cent."

The Long Branch Record has granted a one-dollar-a-week increase, and although the shop is not signed up, Allen Dean, the foreman, has remarked that he will deal only with union men. No. 721 has a few good workers. Let's all get together and push. I know the result will surprise you.

Work on the Asbury Park Press has taken a slump, and some of the men are forced to lay off two days a week.

Harry C. Gensler was elected a member of No. 721 at our November meeting.

Florian Beseigle is now connected with the Ocean County Review.

Mengo Bridge is not very much worried over the high cost of living. Accept our congratulations and our best wishes for a happy married life.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is with pride we note that Charles Hertenstein, in addition to being president of St. Louis No. 8, chairman of the efficiency board of the city of St. Louis, and serving on numerous minor committees, was appointed one member of a committee of three who will have direct authority in this city over all matter affecting conservation of food and control of prices, by F. B. Mumford, federal food administrator of Missouri. The other members of the committee are: Prof. W. F. Gephart, dean of the school of commerce of Washington University, and S. P. Goddard, president of the Goddard Grocery Company. Each member has accepted the honor, and they will work under the supervision of the United States food administration, devoting their attention largely to stabilizing prices of food commodities, and to regulating, so far as possible, unrestricted speculation in foodstuffs. Members of No. 8 in particular and union men in general should be proud of having one of their representatives who has the confidence of business and professional men to such an extent as is evidenced by the frequent demands by them of the services of our president, Charles Hertenstein. Again we say none is more capable and willing.

At the last meeting of the Republic chapel Lou Quinn and Clyde Simpson were re-elected chairman and secretary, respectively.

Mr. Pratt, foreman of the Springfield (Ill.) Record, was a visitor on the Globe-Democrat, looking over the monotypes and other late improvements installed recently.

Motto for the month: "It is a wise man who knows his own business, and a wiser one who thoroughly attends to it."

The following letter was received by Secretary Woods from a member who is well and favorably known in local and International Typographical Union circles :

MINOOKA, ILL., November 16, 1917.

FRIEND GEORGE WOODS—Thank you very much for the cheery letter accompanying the remittance. I am unable to determine which was the most acceptable, but coming together it surely lightened the dark spots in the life of an exile. Have not yet become reconciled to the fact that I am now justly classified among the old spavs—nor can I be. Have ever taken a somewhat active part in affairs typographic and to be placed on the shelf is hard, indeed.

Was delighted with the report in THE JOURNAL of No. 8's subscription to the Liberty bond fund. It was patriotic and a great business stroke as well. The originator of the movement is certainly a wise gazabo and perhaps builded wiser than he knew, for it places No. 8 in the forefront of the industrial world and should, and doubtless will, give the union a standing such as it never possessed, though it has always stood well with the business community. Fraternally yours, O. R. LAKE.

Henry Surig, secretary Pressmen's Union No. 6, had a flag-raising on Sunday, November 18, which was attended by the allied printing trades council delegates. President Hertenstein, who was to deliver a patriotic address, was prevented from attending owing to an attack of indigestion, and J. G. Warrington, secretary of the council, took his place.

The many friends in St. Louis of Secretary-Treasurer Hays are more than pleased to learn that he has recovered from his recent illness. Quoting their expressions, "What would we do without him?"

The following is a sample of letters received by President Hertenstein as chairman of the efficiency board:

In response to the telegram sent President Woodrow Wilson notifying him that at a special meeting of No. 8 we had voted unanimously to take additional bonds to the amount of $15,000 (all the money in the sinking fund), making a total of $20,000, the following reply was received:

THE WHITE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, October 24, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR—The President very deeply appreciates the generous assurances of your letter of October 22d, and he asks me to thank you and the members of the St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 for your patriotic support.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

On Monday, October 29, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Grahl celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at the Liederkranz hall, Grand and Magnolia avenues. Both are 72 years old and were married fifty years ago in Dubuque, Iowa. Seven children (six being daughters) and eight grandchildren were present at the festivities. The Republic chapel, as a token of their esteem, sent fifty golden chrysanthemums. Mr. Grahl joined St. Louis No. 8 November 9, 1884.

The vexatious problem of distribution in the Globe-Democrat adroom has at last been solved by elimination. The installation of three monotype machines and the inauguration of the non-distribution system has lifted an enormous burden from the minds of those who permitted chaotic conditions to get upon their nerves. The complex and confused state of affairs prior to the revolution may be gleaned from a perusal of the following lines. They were written several months ago, during the acute stage, and it was considered inadvisable to give them publicity at that time, lest, perchance, some sensitive person of infirm temper should misinterpret the jocular motive of the writer and feel that he was personally, perhaps offensively, alluded to. However, as that vexatious epoch has now passed into history, and the cry of "How's distribution?" is no longer heard in the land, the writer feels that he is measurably safe in committing the following production to the press as a reminiscence of the good old hand days:

"HOW'S DISTRIBUTION?"

The shades of night were falling fast,
When through the adroom alleys passed
A wild-eyed wight with brow o'ercast,
And ever and anon he asked,
"How's distribution?"

As fierce and fiercer flamed his ire,
His face grew dark, his eyes flashed fire,
The air grew dense and then turned blue,
As he fiercely roared at the adroom crew,
"How's distribution?

"This de-dashed adroom makes me sick,
I can not find a decent stick;
There ain't a thin space in the shack,
And not a d—d lead in the rack—
"How's distribution?

"It is a fact none can deny,
This bloomin' shop is a mess of pi,
And if you ask me the reason why,
These words shall be my sole reply:
"'How's distribution?'"

L'ENVOI.

The shades of night had deepened far,
When he wildly signaled a passing car,
And as he flang himself aboard,
He to the conductor loudly roared—
"How's distribution?"
—Homer A. Danford.

Lately the secretary has been experiencing considerable inconvenience by reason of the remissness of chairmen in failing to turn in traveling cards accepted by them, promptly. The holders of the cards, as a general rule, do not confine themselves to seeking employment in one office and unless their cards are turned in promptly they lack the credentials necessary to look for work elsewhere. The law distinctly specifies that chairmen are authorized to accept traveling cards within date, but that they must turn in such cards to the secretary-treasurer within twenty-four hours, so that the secretary may have a record of the same. Failure to comply with this law is an inconvenience to the secretary and works in many cases a hardship on the holder of the card. If chairmen can not find it possible to bring a traveling card they have accepted to the secretary's office in the time specified, they can at least send it by mail or messenger. Unless the secretary has the cooperation the law guarantees him, confusion is bound to follow.

During the month a letter was received by President Hertenstein from Private Louis E. Steiner, company D, 342d infantry, Camp Grant, Ill., which in part says:

DEAR FRIEND CHARLIE—Received your letter and was mighty glad to hear from you. Things are humming up here and, if left to the boys of Camp Grant, the Unter den Linden will look like Wash street when we get through. * * * It has been snowing for the past four days and the barracks have no heat, but we are making the best of it. Several days ago we spent a day digging trenches and we are going to live in them for four days. They are working us pretty hard. It has done wonders for me, and, if I am capable, will bring you a souvenir from Berlin. * * * I wish you would arrange to have JOURNAL sent me. Would like to know what is going on in the best union in the world. Fraternally,

LOUIS E. STEINER.

The following is a part of the reply sent under date of November 1:

MY DEAR LOUIS—I was very much pleased to receive your letter of the 30th and I hope that you will remember your promise to me to bring back a souvenir from Berlin. My preference, of course, would be to have you cut off one of the medals from the coat of the kaiser, but if that is not possible, I will be content myself with anything that you may be able to secure.

We congratulate Secretary Woods on the installation of a new "baby grand" office desk. He always was a real connoisseur of art, and will be proud to show visitors.

I regret to announce the death of John N. Pearsall, of the Post-Dispatch chapel, suddenly, on November 1, at 11 p. m., death being due to acute indigestion. Mr. Pearsall was a long-time member of the union and was well and favorably known to the membership. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon, November 4, from the late residence, 7111 Virginia avenue, to Park Lawn cemetery. Deceased is survived by a widow, son and daughter.

Ed Springmeyer, well known in St. Louis typo athletic and baseball circles, celebrated his silver wedding anniversary Friday, October 16. Mercantile cigars were passed around the Republic chapel as a gift from Ed.

Fred Hofmeister and W. Cavanaugh, both formerly with the Collins Printing Company, are now showing up on the Star.

Henry Nordman, owing to the death of John W. Pearsall, was elected secretary-treasurer of the Post-Dispatch relief society.

During the Liberty parade in St. Louis complaint was made because George Nordhaus, of the Globe-Democrat, marched immediately behind Sousa's naval band, and before the sailor boys. It was afterward learned that he did so by special invitation of the leader of the band and the local committee in charge of the parade, he having two sons in the band, both cornet players. Also, later in the day, he was a specially invited guest at the banquet. Some distinction.

The work of putting new equipment on the Globe-Democrat goes merrily on. By the time the twenty-seven machines are changed around, individual motors put on each, the shafting, pulleys and platforms done away with and about seven new intertypes of the largest and latest models installed, it will be an office to which one can point with pride. We are pleased to note that Machinist Noortwick is again working with his old-time vim. Nothing like plenty of work for putting a fellow in good humor. Foreman Windegger still wears the smile which won't come off.

Billy Frickle, foreman of the Peoria Star, visited his old-time friend, George Bradley, of the Globe-Democrat, a short time ago. They worked together many years ago on the Sioux City Journal. Do doubt they talked of old Missouri river pirate days.

Frank Hill passed through St. Louis en route to Chicago from Louisville, after selling fourteen model B and C intertypes to the Herald of that city. This makes eighty-seven intertypes sold in October, forty-two through the Chicago office, the largest number for one month, according to Hill.

Ed C. McCormack, for many years at the Curran Printing Company, who for the past eight weeks has been on the sick list, went to Wabasha, Minn., during the latter part of October, thinking a sojourn among the pines of that region would relieve him, but returned after two weeks without improvement. He is now at his home, 1861 Madison street.

W. L. Hoefgen, of San Antonio, Texas, publisher of the official labor paper of that city, and one of the pioneer members of No. 172, passed through St. Louis en route to Buffalo, N. Y., as a delegate to the American Federation of Labor convention. While here he visited George Nordhaus, of the Globe-Democrat, with whom he worked some twenty years ago on the ad team of the San Antonio Express.

Just before sending these notes we sincerely regret to learn that Mr. Steenrod, foreman of the Star composing room, has tendered his resignation, to take effect December 1. He has made many friends during his brief stay in St. Louis, having the happy faculty of so doing. The writer is confident he is expressing the sentiment of the entire chapel in wishing him a full measure of success in his new sphere of labor, which will be as managing editor of a leading paper in Tulsa, Okla.

In last month's notes an unintentional "bone" was perpetrated through the misspelling of a Globe-Democrat machinist's name. It should have appeared Joe Bovery, not Bonery. It is hardly necessary to make this correction, as most newspaper operators knew who was meant, he having worked in St. Louis for many years. However, we suspicion Joe is somewhat of a joker. After working a few nights on the Globe he confided in one of the operators that he already must be popular with the boys, for the reason they all called for "Joe" when a machinist was needed, which, we admit, was far too frequently. We wonder when there are fewer calls whether it will be due to a waning or growing popularity. Incidentally, I wish to make mention that the night side now has a pair of machinists hard to beat for being willing workers and pulling together.

At the suggestion of Secretary-Treasurer Hays the union, at the last meeting, selected Dr. C. C. Emerson, 3870 Easton avenue, to make examination for all applications to the Union Printers Home in this jurisdiction. The union will pay the physician's fee.

The following have been granted the old age pension during the month: W. F. Ratcliffe and W. L. Stone.

V. J. Solari, of Nies-Keiser, has made application for admission to the Home, but at this writing has not been acted upon.

Harry E. Hamsher is a recent addition to the working force of the Globe-Democrat.

The following new offices have been added to the union's list in the last month: William Brown Embossing Company, 417 Walnut street; McGinniss Printing Company, Pontiac building; Statler Hotel, Ninth and Washington; Advance Printing Company, 804 Chestnut street; H. A. Beyer Printing Company, 208 North Thirteenth street.

Place: Globe-Democrat. Time: 8 p. m. Kelly now pinch hitting for "Fatty" Foster.

Since the inauguration of the new sick benefit law, July 1, there has been paid to members of No. 8 the sum of $928. At present writing there are only two members on the sick list, V. J. Solari and E. C. McCormack.

John Routon recently had the misfortune to have his home robbed. The thieves were disturbed by Routon's arrival home before they had completed their contemplated job. Money was the only object of value missed.

Louis Heydt also suffered from depredations of a thief, losing some valuable jewelry. However, in this case, the thief was caught and a portion of the stolen goods recovered.

Bob Hayes and Henry Walters, of the Times, spent a few days last month fishing at Kickapoo, on the Gasconade.

We learn that recently a charivari was attempted on the occasion of the marriage of Larry Riley of the Stewart-Scott chapel by the following: Walter Goerisch, Eddie Murphy, Phil Godair, Charles Chadwick, Barney Mensing, Roy Gween and a few others. Unfortunately, they lost the home address of Riley, but remembered that of Murphy, who had given the party the "slip." They proceeded to charivari him as a punishment for that offense. All enjoyed the event hugely except the next-door neighbor, who protested noisily by firing a couple of shots to attract police attention.

We would advise printer owners of automobiles that the garage is a cold place to sleep this time of the year. If you don't think so, confer with "Big Jeff."

John T. Appler, an old-time member of No. 8, who is in Hot Springs for his health, sent autumn leaf greetings to the secretary's office. At present he is on the pension list.

We unintentionally omitted the name of Mr. Piesbergen as having received a situation on the Globe-Democrat. Never too late to rectify an omission.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Carrol Cramer, an operator on the Gazette-Review, has lifted his traveler and is now a make-up on the Philadelphia North American. Alfred Davies has deposited his card here and taken a position in the adroom of the Sunday Gazette. Frank Hower has returned to this city and has a machine "sit" on the Gazette-Review, the vacancy made by Carrol Cramer leaving. William Godfrey, who has been operating on the Press for a time after being transferred from the Union, left here November 10 for Pittsburgh. John Finley deposited an Oneonta (N. Y.) card here and has a position in the adroom of the Press.

Yes, your correspondent forgot his dates last month and did not appear in print in these columns. This is the best way to learn whether these monthly letters are appreciated or not. I learned that the letter is pretty widely read in the east.

The Press has made some changes in three departments recently which might interest our readers. In the pressroom a Mr. Fisher has taken the place of Linwood Kerstetter as pressman. Mr. Clifton has taken charge of the photo-engraving plant after the sudden death of William MacLaughlin, and Ernest Smith, formerly of the Review, has taken charge of the editorial staffs of the Press-Union. Mr. Smith was recently with the Trenton Times, and is very popular in this city. The death of MacLaughlin was sudden, he having been taken ill with acute indigestion while with his family on a vacation motor trip through Pennsylvania. He died in Duncannon, Pa. He had been with the Press-Union for ten years and was well known to the printers in this city.

Theodore Simpkins, head boy on the Gazette-Review, has enlisted in the navy.

Scheerer, MacLaughlin and Haslett represented this local at the October meeting of the state printers' league in Newark. Haslett will hereafter represent the local at these meetings instead of the two first named, who have been the delegates for the past two years.

Mrs. Esther MacLaughlin, mother of Francis MacLaughlin, of the Press, made a tour from coast to coast in October. She stopped off at Colorado Springs for a few days and visited the Union Printers Home, a New York resident showing her and her companion, Mrs. Paynter, through the institution. She reports that it is a wonderful place and can't find words to describe it.

North Adams and the Mohawk Trail, 1918!

At the October meeting of No. 66 it was voted to buy two $100 Liberty bonds. Two applications for membership were presented—one a woman, and a recent arrival. That is the way No. 66 overcomes what the St. John scribe terms an "obstacle" to making an office 100 per cent union. The three newspaper offices here are closed shops and the machine operators are largely women, than whom there are no more loyal union members. To sister unions in towns where women printers are "obstacles" because non-union, we prescribe a campaign of educational organization work. Given the goods straight, it will be found that most women have the good sense to grasp the situation, and the changed conditions following the general upheaval caused by the world war make it specially desirable that we get them in, for our good as well as their own. The women printers of Lewiston have seen the light, all honor to them. Let those of other Maine cities, where unions exist, follow their example. Let every union member in the state who knows of such an "obstacle" become a self-constituted missionary to give to such a one the gospel of unionism, its benefits and advantages. Many are outside the fold through no lack of this knowledge, who never have been approached with the proper spirit and explanations. It is almost unthinkable that any woman would hold back in the fear of losing her job in these troublous times, when there is work for all and positions can not be filled. Come in, girls. Here is a way to help yourselves at the same time that you are helping your male co-workers.

Harmon Crocker, who does composition for the trade, has had two new linotypes installed—a model 14 and model 19—equipped with electric melting pots, making a battery of four machines. With new metal cabinets and furniture replacing wooden, and other improvements, there is no better plant of its kind in the country, and Mr. Crocker's many friends are congratulating him on the success which has made it possible.

What the Calgary correspondent very aptly calls "the imp of restlessness" is still busy in the local field. Fred Hardini, long in the Express-Advertiser pressroom, goes to Boston. John B. Murphy left the Argus for a machine at the Express-Advertiser. Joseph Hanlon, late of the Press, is at work on the Express-Advertiser, where he served his apprenticeship. From the Bangor Commercial comes H. J. Thibodeau to work for the Express-Advertiser. "Billy" Nickerson, after seven years in theatrical work, is back at the trade, and is working on the Argus. Mary Verge is again able to run her machine on the Express-Advertiser.

Paul Hamilton is breaking in his new flivver on a hunting trip in the Eustis region. With him is Chester Cartret. Mr. Osborne, late of the Boston Journal, is caring for the Press battery of machines during Mr. Hamilton's absence.

A. W. Melville, a Portland pensioner, with a continuous membership of fifty-one years, died October 26. Burial was at St. John, N. B. Mr. Melville was formerly employed on the Press and Argus, but had been in failing health for several years.

At the November meeting it was voted to have a suitable card inscribed with the names of members of No. 66 who have entered the service of the United States, and that it be framed and hung in the hall.

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions on the death of A. W. Melville and the charter was draped for thirty days.

One new member was obligated and two applications were presented. A. GILLIATT.

CHICAGO, ILL.

The familiar figures of Arthur S. O'Neill, soldier, is now missing from the ranks of Chicago printerdom. Like many another brave fellow of our craft, Lieut. O'Neill has gone to the front to help fight the battles of his country against the arch enemy of that democracy which America loves so well. Having lived in Chicago and wrought with the craft for over thirty years, Lieut. O'Neill's acquaintance is wide, not only in this city but far beyond its boundaries. He has successfully and cheerfully traveled the route from "devil" to journeyman, and thence to foreman, superintendent and proprietor. His manly physique, personal bravery and well-known love of democracy make of him a typical soldier in this world war for world freedom. When he departed from Chicago with his command he was first lieutenant and battalion adjutant, Seventh Illinois infantry; but his many friends expect him to return with promoted rank, since there is not a doubt he will give a good account of himself on every opportunity. Lieut. O'Neill was active in the Illinois national guard for nine years, and saw service at the race riots in Springfield, the floods of 1913 at Cairo, and on the Mexican border for seven months in 1916. In a letter recently written to a friend in Chicago he stated that he is convinced the freedom of democratic civilization is at stake; and since our forefathers fought, bled and died for the independence which we today enjoy, he feels that it is our right and duty to fight the autocrat today to perpetuate for our children the ideals for which our fathers made the supreme sacrifice. Lieut. O'Neill was born in Halifax, N. S., and he hopes to meet his gallant Canadian brothers across the seas.

Henry Dunk, of the Examiner, has received word from his son, Edward, a member of the Seventy-fifth company, Sixth regiment, United States marine corps, of his safe arrival in France, where the boys landed October 6 after an uneventful voyage.

Corporal Charles E. Embick, U. S. A., stationed at Jefferson barracks, Missouri, passed through Chicago November 1 in charge of a detachment of men on their way to Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Mich., where they are to be trained in the great bakery and cooking school recently established at that cantonment. On his way back to his station Corporal Embick was the center of many handshaking groups at the Union Printers club, where his fellow-members were unanimous in expressions of their pleasure in greeting him. It is understood that there is prospect of his further promotion soon, and good fortune will, in the opinion of friends, be well deserved.

Elmer Hess, of the Tribune, has passed the preliminary examination for admission to the aviation corps and hopes to be called soon for the further tests, which will determine his fitness for admission to this exacting branch of the service. Young men of his type are needed in large numbers to man the great fleet of airplanes which the United States is building for service abroad, and his friends are confident that he will be able to make good.

One of the few men of whom it may be truly said that "he didn't have an enemy in the world" passed away when Hugh B. Gemmill left us. His death, unexpected as it was, came as a shock to the many who knew and loved him for his sterling qualities of mind and heart. On Saturday evening, November 3, he was among his friends at the Union Printers club, but left about 8 o'clock for his home, and at 9:30 came the news that he was dead. Hugh Biddle Gemmill was born in Logansport, Ind., in 1857. He learned the printing trade in the office of the Logansport Journal, and about 1880 left his native town and spent several years on the road. During this time he visited many western cities, and in 1885 located in Chicago, where he made his home almost continuously until his death. Some few years ago, at the solicitation of relatives, he went to Toledo to live, but after a short stay returned to this city, which, as he said, was the only place that seemed like home to him. His body was taken to Logansport for burial.

Another well-known and well-liked member of No. 16 entered the great beyond when Charles G. Scudder died from the effects of a paralytic stroke November 5. Mr. Scudder had been ill for some time and his death was not unexpected, but, nevertheless, the cause of much sorrow to his numerous friends and acquaintances. Previous to his last illness Mr. Scudder was employed at Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s printing department.

Other deaths: October 10, C. J. Helmer, tuberculosis, burial at Elmwood; October 20, Charles Lee, paralysis; November 1, A. M. Anderson, tuberculosis, Elmwood; November 3, James E. Gill; November 8, M. S. Wheeler, at Colorado Springs; November 15, Zenas Morrison.

Up to the end of October No. 16 had 121 stars on its service flag, and there are many more in the service whose names have not yet been reported.

J. W. Marsh, proofreader on the night force of the Evening Post, was called to Charlotte, Mich., on a sad errand recently. He accompanied the body of his brother, who died in Chicago and was buried at their old home in the Michigan town.

Frank H. Ehlen, of the proofroom of the Evening Post, is back on the job after a siege of sickness.

John A. Foster, president of No. 16, handed in his resignation of the office to the executive officers of the union previous to the October meeting. Some there were who professed to sense the presence of a coon in the cordwood, and a demand was made that a committee be appointed to investigate. However, the committee was elected from the floor and will present its report in due course.

Friends of Fred A. Lang—and they are numerous among the members of No. 16—will be pleased to learn of his appointment as manager of the Grocers' Criterion Company. For the last eleven years Mr. Lang has been manager of the printing department of this company, and his new position comes as a well-deserved promotion.

Miss Helen Roglitz, delegate from Watertown, Wis., to the Colorado Springs convention, spent ten days during October in Chicago as the guest of friends.

The scale recently signed by the Jewish Courier, of this city, provides for a forty-five-hour week, with compensation as follows: Day work, $32.30 per week for thirty-six months, $34 per week for two years succeeding; night work, $35 and $36 for the same respective periods. All employes are allowed eight holidays a year with pay.

The printing establishment of Gunthorp & Warren has been added to the list of label offices, as has the Jeffersonian, a suburban newspaper located on Elston avenue. Other additions to the union fold are the Church Publishing Company, West Chicago avenue, and the International Printers, now located, since a recent change in ownership, at 1048 West Eighteenth street.

Frank Kipfer, "the good gray poet of the Union Printers' club," is in a fair way to acquire fame, as it is seldom that a week passes during which some metrical contribution from his prolific pen does not appear in the columns of the Herald.

A special meeting of the night chapel of the Daily News was held Friday evening, November 2, the occasion therefor being the presentation of a wrist watch to Harry Reynolds, a member of the chapel who has entered the service of Uncle Sam and is now at Camp Perry, the radio station on the north shore. Foreman Leigh was requested to take the chair, and in well-turned phrases extended the congratulations of his fellow employes to the young man who has gone forth to do his share in the work of winning the war for democracy. Mr. Reynolds is a son of Sherman Reynolds, well known to most newspaper printers in Chicago. BRYANT L. BEECHER.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.

President Burns has sent in his resignation, both to the local and to the P. B. Haber Printing Company and has accepted a "sit" as make-up on the Milwaukee Sentinel. A "stag" party was held at his home on Rose street. A general good time was reported by all the boys present. Herbert Dauterman, secretary-treasurer of the Reporter chapel, also a member of the apprenticeship committee, has sent in his resignation and accepted a position on the same paper as adman. Both will be greatly missed by the local union.

The second annual Hallowe'en banquet given by members of the Reporter chapel was one of the gay events of the season. Nearly sixty were in attendance to partake of the "goodies" furnished, while the dance program led by a harp orchestra and Count de la Vere (Emery Martin) came in for more than its share. The cartoons drawn by Mayor Hohensee's son were both entertaining and hit the mark in every instance. The event was held at the Trades and Labor hall.

The Schaar publishing house has been purchased by the P. B. Haber Printing Company.

Mrs. Louis Kinkel has a steady "sit" as operator on the Daily Reporter. Miss Lina Draves has accepted a job at Leeman Center. Work has been so heavy lately that the local authorized Secretary-Treasurer Purcell to invest in a typewriter.

At our last meeting it was voted to assess each member of the local 10 cents per month in addition to regular dues, to take care of dues of members who may be selected to serve the colors.

O. G. RÖRABACHER.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

The regular meeting was held November 4 and one application was acted upon. The job printing firm of Johnson & Winiecke has dissolved partnership, Mr. Johnson taking over the business, and it is now known as the Johnson Printing Company. Frank Winiecke is now working at Chippewa Falls. Mr. Decker, a member from Chippewa Falls, is now employed by the Johnson Printing Company.

The label committee has just had some advertising desk blotters printed to give to business firms.

A stag party was held at the hall Sunday evening, November 18, at which a great many of the members were present. GEORGE A. STEBBINS.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

The twenty-second quarterly session of the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union was held Sunday, November 11, at Hazleton. Representatives were present from Allentown, Easton, Harrisburg, Hazleton, Lancaster, Philadelphia, Pottsville, Reading, Scranton, Shamokin, Wilkes-Barre and York. The conference was opened by singing "America." After a few welcoming remarks by President Brill of Hazleton Union, President Corless took charge and opened the business session with a verbal report of the progress in the district during the previous twelve months. In conclusion, he urged greater interest in the apprentice question, suggesting discussion thereof in meetings of the several locals, that the membership in general may become better acquainted with the aims and desires of the International Typographical Union on this important question, and the benefits which must ultimately accrue.

Alfred Bieber, member of the executive council of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, was introduced and presented a statement of facts concerning the state printing office at Harrisburg, in reference to his union and the contractor for state printing being unable to agree as to conditions, which have prevented the office from being signed up by the bookbinders, and also have kept out the allied label. The matter was deferred to new business, when after a thorough discussion the executive officers of the district union were instructed to use their influence and moral support in every possible way to aid the brotherhood of bookbinders in adjusting grievances in the state printing office.

The conference took a stand in reference to political endorsements and recommendations, on the report of a committee appointed at the previous conference on the matter, "That we endorse no aspirants for political office except for a state office, and then only by unanimous consent of delegates present."

The last session of the Pennsylvania legislature having passed a bill demanding the allied label on all state printing, which bill was vetoed by Governor Brumbaugh on the excuse that it was class legislation, the conference, by resolution, instructed a committee to draw up a bill and try to have it passed by the next state legislature, eliminating the label feature, but calling for conditions and wages prescribed by the typographical and its allied unions in Harrisburg. It is hoped that such a bill will overcome the present governor's objections.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected, as follows: President, William Corless, Scranton; vice-president, M. Luther Mason, Reading; secretary, L. B. Wanbaugh, Harrisburg; treasurer, James McPherson, Philadelphia; sergeant-at-arms, Ivan D. Bair, Lancaster.

Scranton Union invited the conference to hold its August meeting in that city, which was accepted; the invitation of Wilkes-Barre was accepted for the February meeting, and after a vote of thanks to Hazleton Union for its entertainment and arrangements the convention adjourned with the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

An interesting feature of the convention was a eulogy of the Union Printers Home by John Graham, of Wilkes-Barre, who had just returned after five months' successful treatment for lead poisoning. He is very enthusiastic for the Home.

LINWOOD B. WANBAUGH, Secretary.

AUGUSTA, ME.

Work continues about the same, with all hands employed. "Husky" Thompson is in the big woods on his annual vacation. Billy Edwards has accepted a situation with the Sentinel. Howard M. Soper, of the Maine Farmer, is with Company M in France.

It is the off year with the state printing, the legislature meeting in 1919. C. G. COOMBS.

GARY, IND.

Ben Schroeder, who came here recently from Minot, N. D., to work on the Tribune, returned November 2 to Minot. C. E. Austin, recently secretary at Racine, Wis., is now operating a C intertype on the Tribune, vice Herbert L. Cramer, who moved to the Calumet Press on a combination job.

With Frank L. Mullen as machinist-operator, McCombs as foreman, Paul J. DuVall, operator, and Archie Davidson, apprentice, on the Post, Meadville, Pa., is pretty well represented in Gary.

Gary came through for $650,000 on the second Liberty loan. No. 590 now has $300 in the bonds and will buy more as soon as sufficient funds can be accumulated.

The members of the Gary Tribune chapel were accorded a raise by that firm, effective the last week in October. Operators were advanced to $30 per week, and all floormen, including apprentices, were granted a bonus of 10 per cent on the scale, journeymen being paid the local scale of $25 per week or better before the raise. The Tribune is also building an addition that will give the plant almost twice its present floor space, and is showing in every way that it is a progressive publication that does not believe in advancing its own interests to the exclusion of its employes.

Vernon Burger, local president, is taking a two-weeks' vacation and left C. W. Eastham representing him on the ad side of the Post.

Fred W. Morse, a former South Bend printer, who returned from a winter's stay at the Home at Colorado Springs recently, is at work at the Calumet Press, and states that he is in better shape than for many years, due to the beneficent care and treatment at the Home.

The secretary was recently called from the Twin City Sentinel at Indiana Harbor by phone and urged to secure a man who could take charge of the plant, "money being no object." The secretary urged a good man to go over to Indiana Harbor to go to work at 8 A. M. the next day, and when the member got there found the place no better than a livery stable and no work, as the man there had concluded to stay a while longer. The caller claimed to be a member of No. 16 and may be, but if he is, the sanitary committee should look up the plant and put the member under observation. V. E. HUDDLESTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The call for subscribers for the second Liberty loan was heard in Los Angeles among the members of No. 174, as well as by the other crafts connected with the printing industry, and a call was issued for a mass meeting of all men and women drawing pay from the newspapers to be held at the Mason Opera House the latter part of October. As a result of that meeting there was subscribed considerably over $100,000 by men and women who draw their weekly stipends from the Los Angeles newspapers, and T. D. Fennessy and Fred C. Jaegle, chairman of the Examiner chapel, are proud of the fact that members of that chapel carried off the banner for the largest amount of any chapel in the city, there being $13,500 subscribed for by the printers of that plant, while throughout the rest of the building enough of the loan was taken to bring the amount up to over $35,000.

Any one entering the Examiner composing room and seeing the beautiful silk flag (hung above the slipboard), bearing seven stars, one for each of its members who are now serving under the Stars and Stripes, immediately feels that spirit of brotherly love which is going out from that office to those boys who are "doing their bit." In an endeavor to keep the soldier boys in touch with their old comrades, the members of the chapel each week set up a few lines of gossip, etc., and it is all combined in one and run off on the proofpress, making a fine "chapel chat," which is no doubt thoroughly enjoyed by the boys in khaki. Requests for letters from the "Sammies" to be included in the "chapel chat" have been made, and in that way they can hear from each other even though they are in different cantonments and in different branches of the service. A Christmas remembrance is also being prepared for them.

After serving the Herald Publishing Company faithfully for the past twenty-four years, with an occasional rebuild, six old Baltimore Mergs., Nos. 199, 200, 201, 203, 204 and 205, were replaced by six model 18s the last of October. One model 14 was also added to the ad alley. The prospect for relief of the numerous cases of "nerves" attacking the operators working on the old wrecks is bright, and George Reed, machinist in charge, says he will have to find some other place to use his old roller skates. Let's hope so.

Harry Rocque, of the Herald chapel, who has been working under O. J. Anderson's slip since the latter was taken sick over a year ago, was given a regular "sit" the first of November, and John B. Squires, formerly of Detroit, was given the Anderson slip.

Once again is the sympathy of friends extended to Ruby L. Black, of the Herald chapel, and Charles Black, of the Tribune chapel, over the death of their brother, James W. Black, November 1, an active member of Stockton Typographical Union for more than twenty-five years, having been the owner of a job office in that city since becoming a journeyman. The death of another brother was reported in these columns only a few weeks ago.

George W. Chamberlin, make-up on the Express for the past several years, and one of the livest wires of No. 174, resigned his "sit" on the Express November 17 and is now on the San Diego Union with our old friend "Bill" Dennett. His many friends were sorry to see him go, but as he will be near good fishing waters, we know George will more than like the change.

T. D. Fennessy is once again on the board of directors of the Los Angeles Labor Temple Association, receiving by far the highest vote cast at the last stockholders' meeting. He is already working on a new scheme to raise the mortgage from the temple.

Francis Drake was unanimously elected at the October meeting of No. 174 as a delegate to the central labor council.

George W. Bowman, secretary of No. 174, now farming near Burbank, said he has read so much about making the world safe for democracy that it brought the following to his mind while following the plow:

The old magnificent, munificent I. T. U.,
Founded on principles of democracy,
Does its militant membership imbue
To make unionism safe by diplomacy.

The Express-Tribune plant started in December on the non-distribution plan. There has been cast up about forty tons of type, rules, border and slugs for the new system.

Once again has Charles T. Scott, International representative, proved his usefulness in this section by going to San Bernardino, where strike orders had been asked for from headquarters, and settled the affair satisfactorily to all concerned, securing a raise of $1.50 per week and signing up the publishers for a two-year term.

W. K. Lockwood.

RICHMOND, VA.

There was another largely attended meeting of No. 90, Sunday, November 18, in anticipation of hearing the report of the committee appointed at the October meeting to take up the matter of presenting a scale for adoption by the four newspaper publishers in Richmond and Typographical Union No. 90. The committee reported that they had been very pleasantly received by the publishers individually; that they had no association at that time; that since our proposal they have formed a local association (three of them were already members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association); that the publishers have held a conference and appointed a committee to look into the matter under consideration, and also the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and International Typographical Union contracts; that so far, while the committee would have liked to present a report concluding the matter, they were satisfied that the delay was reasonable and expressed confidence in the publishers to give the matter fair consideration and to do so as soon as possible.

Representative D. I. Campbell has been of invaluable service in these negotiations. He has made an excellent impression on the publishers and has more strongly implanted himself in the affections of the members of No. 90. We predict "big things" for D. I. in the days to come.

In my last correspondence I mentioned the fact that a good many of our older members, not regular attendants, were at the meeting. Last month they were there again. We hope to have large attendance from now on. The writer has heard many remarks to the effect that things were "brightening up" in No. 90. There are a few of our old "stand-bys" who are never absent unless sick, among them W. H. Mullen ("Billy" does not work at the trade, either), M. R. Pace, "Jack" Burroughs, J. C. Goalsby, August Meyer, and others. There is scarcely a meeting at which Messrs. Pace, Mullen and Burroughs do not add to our edification by their sensible and conservative discussion on matters before the union. Mr. Pace has the "rep" of being our most distinguished-looking member.

A legislative committee was appointed, consisting of A. L. Vonderlehr, J. Harry Lawder and J. F. Don Leavy. They will make an effort to have the label put on all state printing. We hope they may succeed. It would help No. 90 wonderfully.

William E. Woody, age 60 years, one of our most widely-known members, died Saturday, October 27, after a brief illness of pneumonia. He was in the "old hand days" a swift compositor, but for many years he had forsaken the case for the linotype. He was well liked by his employers, Messrs. Zincke and Worsham, of the Richmond Press, with whom he had been since shortly after the beginning of their business several years ago. He was senior steward of St. James Methodist Episcopal church, south, and was deeply interested in the Methodist orphanage located near this city. He was faithful to every trust imposed upon him. He leaves a widow and three children. He was a brother of our well-known and faithful secretary-treasurer, R. Lee Woody. A committee from No. 90 attended the funeral which was held at St. James church. The official board of the church and G. G. Worsham and C. A. Zincke, proprietors of the Richmond Press, were the pallbearers. He was also a Pythian, members of which order participated in burial services at the grave. Interment was in Hollywood cemetery.

"Dick" Quarles, who has been sick for some time, was at the hall at our last meeting. The boys were glad to know that he was able to return to work. Messrs. Mitchell and Southall are still on the sick list.

J. Harry Lawder called the attention of the members to the matter of poll taxes being paid. This is a matter which every member who can vote should attend to. No. 90 should have 100 per cent vote all the time.

Secretary Woody read a letter from Mrs. Finney, whose husband has been ill with typhoid fever at Hopewell, Va., thanking him for the money sent here from a collection at our October meeting. She said Mr. Finney was convalescing and would be able to return to work soon.

Now that the summer months are over and our attendance is getting better, we would like to have our musical talent (vocal as well as instrumental) get busy. Those little diversions last winter proved very entertaining and enjoyable. We hereby nominate Messrs. Clare, Burks, Harwood and East a committee to "start something."

One member obligated—D. P. Shaw. Two applications received and names ordered printed in The Journal.

George A. Jennings.

DETROIT, MICH.

Owing to change of recording secretary, caused by the necessity of Victor A. Leavy returning to Albion, Mich., no letter has appeared in THE JOURNAL for the past two months, but Detroit will be heard from in the future.

Since our last letter we have lost one good friend, Joseph Larivee, who died September 7. Many of the older members knew him as a good, true union man.

Samuel Lowry, who met with an auto accident some time ago, is now able to limp around a bit.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. George M. Grix, the wife of a member of the News chapel, and extend to him our deep sympathies.

The News now has a new home, and the employes need not fear that any other in the country can compare with it. Following is a brief description which no doubt will interest the readers of THE JOURNAL: The building has a frontage of 150 feet on Lafayette boulevard and Fort street and 280 feet on Second avenue. There are five floors, including the mezzanine, with a total area of 149,400 square feet. The content is 2,673,000 cubic feet. The building material was concrete, steel and Indiana limestone. Regular employes immediately concerned with the operation of the plant of the News number 475, and they are assisted by more than a score of part-time employes. Five thousand boys sell or carry the News in Detroit; in excess of 3,000 throughout the state. Twelve hundred news stands and ninety supply stations in Detroit, as well as 950 state agents assist in the distribution of the paper. The News owns and operates forty automobiles in the handling of its circulation. Three hundred and eighty-seven "liner" stations in the city serve News advertisers, and they are augmented by ten girls, who do nothing but take classified advertisements over the telephone. The telephone switchboard requires three operators and controls nearly 125 telephones on twenty-five trunk lines. The engraving department can produce from a photograph, by the halftone engraving process, a "cut" ready to print in twenty-one minutes. No such speed is ordinarily attempted. The presses are 205 feet long over all, and, being unified, may be considered as one press of twenty-four units. Their maximum capacity is 432,000 complete sixteen-page papers, printed, cut, folded, counted and delivered to the mailing department every hour. During the past year the News consumed a hundred rolls of paper a day. In each roll there are approximately six miles of paper. The year's total was 219,000 miles of paper. The color press, which is capable of printing four solid colors at one time and a large number of other shades and colors through blending, turns out comic supplements at the rate of 11,000 an hour. The fifteen concrete piers on which paper is stored in the basement are emptied by the presses every two days. Half a ton of ink is consumed daily, and this ink is never exposed to air from the time it is manufactured in a Detroit factory till it goes onto the white paper. No other newspaper has achieved this desirable end. The ink is conveyed to the News in an air-tight tank trailer. When the News installed its first stereotyping outfit and web press in 1880, twelve plates a day was a good record. Today 600 plates are frequently made. The composing room employs 125 men. There are thirty-seven linotype machines, twenty-four devoted to editorial matter and thirteen to advertising and job work. Two Ludlow machines cast extra large lines of type, principally for advertisements. Practically the entire equipment of the old News building has been "scrapped." The exceptions are a very few machines recently installed. Three employes of the News were with the paper when it started forty-four years ago. Many others have been employed from twenty to forty years. The hospital is perfectly equipped for any emergency not involving a large number of persons. A cafe, elaborately equipped, is operated for the employes. The kitchen has every discoverable contrivance of importance, even to automatic dishwashers and garbage incinerators. A special refrigerating system is also installed. The building contains a barber shop for employes. All air breathed in the News building has been washed. All drinking water is filtered and chilled by a chemical process not involving the use of ice. All rooms have thermostatic regulation of heat. The building is equipped fully with vacuum cleaners. Except in private suites and the conference room, desks are exclusively steel, finished with baked green enamel, trimmed with brass and topped with battleship linoleum. The conference room has a reserve supply of 250 chairs for use during lectures, musicales or other entertainments or meetings. WILBURN N. FOSDICK.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

No. 23 has bought $500 worth of Liberty bonds and Secretary Thomas reports that about $25,000 in addition was purchased by individual members.

Frank H. Stanhope and Mr. Kelly, who formerly worked on the Leader, and now touring the south, are requested to send their addresses to Chairman R. E. Milton. Something substantial awaits these gentlemen.

The Milwaukee Free Press, morning paper, has been cited by the postal authorities at Washington to defend its second-class mailing rights, which, it seems, are to be denied that paper. The case has had a hearing and has been postponed for two weeks. The Free Press was launched in 1900 as a progressive daily, supporting the progressive republican policies of United States Senator Robert M. LaFollette during the time that he was governor of Wisconsin. Later, former United States Senator Stephenson, of Wisconsin, backed the paper, and the past two years the owners have been Milwaukee citizens and business men.

Work is plentiful here at present, especially in the newspaper offices, the Sentinel and Journal having been obliged to greatly increase their working force, and the Leader, too, is again running normal, several stores again coming in with ads which a few weeks ago ceased using space. On the Sentinel men are working overtime, and every available man has been pressed into service. Former City Treasurer Joseph P. Carney, a member of No. 23, for several years absent from the trade, has been "drafted" back into the service and is reading proof with his associate, Charles Shields, on the night side of the Sentinel, while Mrs. C. Williams, formerly on the Journal, with the assistance of Lee Benson, takes care of the day work in the proofroom. Other changes recently taken place follow: George E. Lohr, who has been on the Sentinel for nearly sixteen years, where he started his trade since he "immigrated" to Milwaukee from Hartford, Wis., has severed his connections with his old home and taken a position as make-up on the Journal. Other recruits on the Sentinel are Andy Buehler, William Benseman and "Phil" Rosche. Recent additions to the Journal force are Raymond Moore, Otto Schmelling and Dell Angell.

The entertainment committee of No. 23 is desirous of organizing the musical talent by the formation of a printers' band, and Joe Reed, of the News chapel, is anxious to have all those who play musical instruments—and even those who think they can play—to get in touch with him at once, either in person or by card.

Alfred Nelson, apprentice in the Riverside chapel, left for a military camp recently, and the members of the chapel, in appreciation of his friendship as a co-worker and in remembrance to him on his departure, presented him with a token. Herbert Daum has also been called, but was back for a couple of days last week.

Vice-President Moore presided at the November meeting, President Blakely being at the American Federation of Labor convention.

Steps are being taken by the organized labor movement of this city to actively and earnestly start in the co-operative movement. No. 23 has appointed a committee—R. E. Milton, Henry Bartmen and Joe Holly—to look after and boost the printers' end. This movement is the result of years of co-operative talk between farmers and organized workers, and the organized farmers have certainly started out well by not only organizing themselves, but subscribing about $250,000 worth of stock and establishing a warehouse and produce center in Milwaukee, and now branching out all over the city with distributing centers. M. Wes Tubbs, for many years with the Wisconsin Society of Equity, is the manager of the establishment here, known as the Industrial Co-operative Union, located at Sixth and Clybourn streets, and he is addressing various unions in the city, and is meeting with good encouragement from organized labor, because the workers realize that they must bring about a direct co-operative marketing between producers on the farm and consumers in the city if they ever expect to reduce the high cost of living to themselves. Shares of stock sell for $55, payment on easy terms. We will give more space to this movement next time, and in the meantime we trust the printers will look into this matter and boost it along. The co-operative movement is doing much for workers in other communities and countries—it will do likewise in Milwaukee. True, things may not all run smooth at first, but we must acquire an understanding of the co-operative movement and take active part in it—build it up. Drop in and see J. J. Handley at the Union bank, Caswell block, secretary of the state federation of labor, or Mr. Tubbs, or Frank J. Weber, or Henry Ohl, and get further information. Active sale of stock is going on. Every member of organized labor should lend his support to this co-operative enterprise. Business co-operates—why not the workers?

Milbrath heads the list with twenty-four games and 178 points. Other scores follow: Green, 30, 177; Guse, 27, 171; Block, 27, 170; Lecher, 30, 170; Schultz, 12, 168; Brink, 30, 167; Petersen, 30, 167; Worm, 24, 166; Schoeneck, 18, 166; Lutzenberger, 27, 164; Marten, 24, 163; Pagel, 24, 162; Wendorf, 24, 162; Liebenstein, 24, 162; Apel, 27, 160; Polzin, 24, 158; Preiss, 30, 158; Schumacher, 24, 156; Lemmers, 24, 155; Eberle, 21, 150; Gies, 17, 142; Olson, 18, 141; Bennett, 9, 130.

We trust the scores will loom up better before next writing, as we note that most of the heavy fellows are at the bottom. More pep!

The Leader employes, together with the women folk, spent an evening on the alleys at Kiesel's, Folsom place. Bowling, of course, was indulged in, and goulash partaken of. The viands were good and refreshments plenty, but the scores were too low for mention. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shurr chaperoned the party. Mrs. Diegl, wife of Managing Editor Diegl, also celebrated her birthday anniversary on this occasion. A state printers' association is being formed to correlate the various unions in the state into one body for more effective work. The initial step was taken by the Fond du Lac Union. No. 23 favors the project.

At this writing we wish to call attention to the following: Several shops in the book binding business are on strike. Several hundred cigar makers are striking for an increase. We mention this so that we all may be informed to lend aid. Cliften shirts are union made and sold at Stumpf & Langhoff, Jandt & Bluenel, Bruett cloak and Zack Bros. stores.

Cards deposited: A. H. Popp, jr.; C. H. Lohmeyer, Oscar Doehring, A. F. Shafranski. Cards withdrawn: Joseph Mallinger, George M. Zickert, George A. Field, H. J. Kirk, James Sullivan, Charles C. Schuster. HERMAN O. KENT.

JACKSON, MISS.

We had another small attendance at our November meeting, only one-half the members being present, which caused the introduction of an amendment to the by-laws assessing members $2.50 instead of 50 cents for non-attendance, with a rebate of that amount for putting in an appearance, with fifteen minutes' grace.

Business has been very good in the job shops, with enough men to do the work. Four or five feeders, having joined the army, made feeders scarce in several shops, compelling them to run presses overtime.

Only one journeyman, Percy McCollum, has joined the army, and the union voted to pay his dues to date, after which his father will pay. One apprentice, Jack Kramer, has also joined.

J. L. Wimberly has gone to Baton Rouge to accept a situation in a job shop at a very remunerative salary. Ruby Taylor, who has been working at Canton lately, will step into his "sit" at the Jones Printing Company.

The central labor council has moved its rooms to West Jackson, next to the McClelland Hardware Company building. It is a much smaller apartment, but more convenient to workmen generally, being near the center of the city. But—somebody will have to buy a stove!

Notwithstanding the fact that the board of contracts had been summoned to appear before the circuit court and show cause why bids submitted by the Dixon Paul Company, a foreign concern, should not be opened, and why such contracts should not be made in accordance with the bids of foreign printing companies, the board instructed the attorney-general to prepare the necessary bonds and draw the contracts.

The successful bidders for the state's printing were: Natchez Printing and Stationery Company, classes 8, 10, 11, 12, 14 and 15; Issue Publishing Company (Jackson), classes 1 and 23; Mississippi Printing Company (Vicksburg), class 22, being all blank books used by the state; Dement Printing Company (Meridian), classes 16 and 27;

Clarion-Ledger Company (Jackson), class 21, publishing the acts and official notices; Tucker Printing House (Jackson), classes 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 13, 17, 18, 19, 20, 25, 26, 28, 29 and 30.

Special assistance from the International Typographical Union to the locked-out printers in this city came to an end when no one was reported not working.

But when I winked the other eye
He thumped his hip and said "Bone-dry."

FRANKLIN HEIMBACH.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

It is your turn now. We have set the house to rights, the latchstring hangs where it always did—on the outside—and a light is set in the window. The sign of welcome is blazing without, and the spirit of which reigns boisterously within. Bert Beals and his committee of stratègists and entertainers will greet you, pump-handle your right arm clear to the shoulder, slap you on the back and give you a cigar, and show you to the "spare" bedroom. Bert is a famous host, and serves in perfect equanimity and competence for either a federation of labor or a federation of women's clubs. Just check it up to Bert. Headquarters will be the Lee-Huckins hotel, a most capable hostelry of 450 rooms, convenient to every place in the city. It is your turn now.

A banquet is arranged, in the complement of which will be a most appetizing menu, Hooverized, perhaps, but delectable; and much epigrammatic, inspiring speech in the way of toasts, and so forth. Arrange to be hungry before you get here, and then "set in" at this table, where you can have President Scott, "Paw" McCullough and music with your meal. Secretary-Treasurer Hays may be here, but the committee will warn him against using the blue pencil on any of our didoes.

The writer has a copy of Volume 1, No. 1, of "The Line Gauge," a little journal of typographical affairs, issued by Vayne V. Van Tilburg, of Tulsa Typographical Union No. 403. It has many pleasant things to say, is full of neighborly gossip and jests, has no politics nor animosities, and leaves a taste like a wine-song.

Milton Tinney writes from Peoria that he is "bound south, and coaling up there." The newspapers reported some time ago they had quit making it in Peoria and that several of the "fuel" institutions had closed down. Some inconsistency here.

O. B. Miller, a member of No. 283, has been chosen president of the O. B. Rose Mining Company, a lead and zinc corporation. The company has leases in the Miami district of Oklahoma, and is capitalized for $125,000.

Our old friend, Jervis F. Stanley, of Kansas City Typographical Union, and a former member of No. 283, seems to be going along merrily in the Kaw river town, doing linotype composition for the trade. Acknowledgment is made of a neat pamphlet of specimen type-faces and workmanship.

A letter from John Cronin, an Oklahoma City member in the Union Printers Home, seems inclined to shout "Hooray for the Home!", "Eating like a horse!" and so on. He states that other Oklahoma City members in that great institution seem to be doing nicely. We're interested in these boys and express our pleasure in each note of improvement.

Upon invitation of Fred Tarman, of the chair of journalism in the University of Oklahoma, R. E. L. Brown, superintendent of the Oklahoman and Times, addressed the students of that department during the month. This seems to have been a sharp departure from college routine, but it is certainly prudent. There is a considerable volume of information that the printer can impart to the journalistic tyro that is not written into the college curricula; much that is relative in the two vocations has been left to speculation and immature observation.

The Oklahoma News (Scripps League) has installed a new model 5 linotype, to be used exclusively for headletter, thus making a battery of five machines.

Any one who knows Secretary Spivey is familiar with his grayed, Joe Cannon, republican whiskers. George Long, Times proofreader, was ill in bed for several days during the month, and in due time George's erstwhile smooth-shaven face became barbed in ashen fungi to such extent that a visitor inquired, "Why don't you get shaved?" George replied, "Oh, I think I'll let 'em grow and run for secretary next spring."

H. Earl Wood, regularly employed with the Oklahoman and Times for the past two years, has drawn his traveler and gone to El Paso. Other linotype operators on these papers to change affiliations recently were J. W. Utterback and Harry Snyder, both of them going to the Pointer chapel.

Roberts, Guy Hart, A. R. Blakely. Cards issued: G. E. Stephenson, Jack Saslavsky, Maurice E. Eady, E. W. Steed, P. W. Redding, Giles W. Farris, William Muelheisen, Ben F. Oliver, Strother L. A. RAYMOND MORRISON.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The first fatality to visit the ranks of No. 53, as a result of the war, occurred when Albert Bowe met an accidental death at Camp Perry, Port Clinton, Ohio. The soldiers at the camp were engaged in target practice and had just gone through the preliminary firing with blank cartridges, an exercise which is carried out to accustom the recruits to the impact that follows the discharge of a gun. The lieutenant in charge of the squad had just changed the blank shells for bullet cartridges and was loading one of the rifles preparatory to firing at one of the targets. The rifle suddenly discharged, and the bullet, after passing through the fleshy part of the arm of another soldier, struck Bowe in the heart, killing him instantly. Bowe was one of the younger members of the union, and while not actively engaged at the printing business, he always kept his card paid up to date.

Jack Mitchell, who enlisted in the Canadian forces, left Cleveland on October 29 to join his regiment, but was not able to qualify in the severe physical examinations, and he has returned, ready to do his bit as one of the home guards. He surely made the try, and it is no fault of his that he did not pass. As Jack is (?) years of age, it was hardly to be expected that he would be accepted.

Six new members were initiated at the last meeting.

On Friday evening, November 2, just two days previous to the date of the regular meeting, fire destroyed the stairway entering into the hall of the Opera House block, and it was necessary for the officers of the union to do some tall scurrying to find a place suitable for holding the regular meeting, thereby doing away with a possible postponement. The officers of the Cleveland Printers' club came to the rescue and offered the use of the clubrooms. The spacious front parlor was converted into a meeting place, and all who attended the meeting enjoyed the change. Heroic work was done by the officers of the union in notifying the membership of the change of meeting place, and the large attendance was gratifying testimony of their efforts.

E. George Lindstrom, of the Husted chapel, was one of the principal speakers at the Jamestown (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce annual banquet, November 14. Mr. Lindstrom was a member of the county legislature from Chautauqua, N. Y., for six years prior to coming to Cleveland.

The many friends of Jimmy James will be pleased to hear that he is rapidly recovering from the illness which has incapacitated him for the past three years, and that he is now able to do an occasional bit of work. Jimmy only recently returned from the south and west, where he was doing the recuperating act. He spent two years in Los Angeles and nine months at the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs, which place, he says, is responsible for his present fine physical condition. Jimmy is a great booster for Mr. and Mrs. John C. Daley, superintendent and matron of the Home, and he says the equal of the institution is not known on the face of the globe. While in the south Jimmy says he "listened so long to the real estate barkers and 'climate bugs' that he found the only prosperity for the working man is in a city where there is lots of smoke." Jimmy has served on almost every committee in No. 53 during a period of fifteen years, and he says he is "tickled foolish to be able to be back with a bunch of real live ones."

A demonstration of what the organized workers can do when they get behind a candidate for political office was manifested in the election of Robert I. Clegg to membership on the board of education, and this in the face of protests from present members of the school board. Mr. Clegg is vice-president of the Gardner Printing Company, and while not affiliated directly with any labor organization, he has always shown a disposition to deal fairly with his employes. It was mainly through the efforts of members of Cleveland Typographical Union that Mr. Clegg's name was placed on the ballot, and, once there, pressure was brought to bear upon the organized workers to support him, with the result that he received a splendid majority over his opponents.

At the last meeting of the union endorsement was given to the application for the old age pension of Ferdinand ("Patsy") Getrost. It was with a keen feeling of regret that this application was received, as "Patsy," who is past 72 years of age, has always enjoyed a vigorous constitution, and his erect carriage and natty appearance, along with his strong character, had led his companions to the belief that many more good years were still with him. "Patsy's" membership in No. 53 has been continuous for over forty-seven years, and it was the work of such pioneers as he, along with some of the older members of the union, that has blazed the way for the prosperity enjoyed by the present-day printer.

President James J. Hoban, Secretary F. W. Steffen, John B. Hogan, A. J. Harkins and Michael O'Boyle attended the meeting of Toledo Typographical Union No. 63 on Sunday, November 11, as guests of the Toledo delegation to the Ohio Typographical Conference. The Maumee typos proved very capable hosts and an exceptionally fine time was had by the boys from Cleveland. Jimmy Hoban addressed the Toledo Union on "Apprentice Training," and his remarks were well received. The importance of looking after the apprentice while serving his time was brought forcibly to the attention of the members, and a committee on the care of apprentices was fully informed as to their duties to both the boy and the union.

JOHNNY HOGAN.

LEXINGTON, KY.

Members of No. 189 forwarded a box of jam and preserves to the Kentucky boys now at Hattiesburg as a Thanksgiving treat.

One Liberty bond was purchased by the local. Members generally, though, made individual purchases, about twenty-five being taken. The union donated $5 to the Prescott memorial fund.

Major Leaming has never given up the idea of having the convention held in Lexington, and says the question is liable to pop up at any moment. If Lexington should happen to land the convention the delegation will be given a warm welcome and a royal treatment by the Bluegrass boys.

Two new members were obligated at the last meeting and one honorable withdrawal card deposited, all three coming from Richmond, Ky., thus bringing the Richmond Climax under the jurisdiction of Lexington.

Robert T. Fitch returned last month from the Union Printers Home much improved. After a short visit to his family he left for Cincinnati.

Senator Allen G. Oakley was in town recently to call on the boys and see the bright lights. He is located in dry territory.

Cards received: J. S. White, Clayton Buchanan, G. Russell Karne, J. C. Maltre. Cards issued: Grover F. Wright, B. E. Ragland, Clayton Buchanan, J. S. White, N. H. King, R. T. Fitch.

CHARLES B. CHARLESWORTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

By order of Columbia Union, Treasurer Jerome V. Johnson has taken out on the second Liberty loan bonds to the extent of $2,000, making $5,000 the union has invested in the war bonds.

Lieut. William H. Manning, of the medical reserve corps, former sanitary officer of the government printing office and a member of Columbia Typographical Union, has invented a stretcher for use in the trenches which is highly praised by experts, the invention being so constructed that a wounded man can be carried around corners without being raised from the trench. Dr. Manning has shown his inventive genius in many lines while connected with the printing office, and he will doubtless prove his worth in many ways in the service of his country.

Acquiring control of the Washington Times by Arthur Brisbane has not only been beneficial to this community in giving us a live, up-to-date newspaper, which is making itself in many ways beneficial to labor people as well as the general public, but has benefited the printing trade to the extent of a 10 per cent increase in the scale, his voluntary increase to the employes influencing the other papers to do likewise, although under their agreement with the union the scale could not have been opened for a year hence.

George G. Seibold, jr., son of the secretary of Columbia Union, a member of the aviation corps, had a narrow escape from death down in Texas recently, falling from a hight of 1,500 feet, and sustaining such slight injury that he is about ready to resume his duties as an aviator.

Placing the national capital in the dry column has put a good many famous places out of business, although some of them are still catering to the public as lunch rooms and dispensers of those beverages with fanciful names, mostly ending in "o," that cheer, but do not enthuse. One of the most frequented places by men of the printing trades was Johnny Sheehan's, opposite the government printing office, which has closed its doors for good, and which will be greatly missed, for there you were always sure of meeting good people. Johnny Sheehan quit a job in the printing office to go behind the bar over thirty years ago, and it is safe to say that few men in Washington had more friends. As he puts it: "It is not the financial end, for I have sufficient; but it is the loss of the old friends I have been meeting every day." And what is true of Sheehan is true of many more—men of national reputation, like John Hartnett ("The Bishop"), of the Hotel Raleigh, who knows as many public men as any man in America. To men of that class the Sheppard law is an awful catastrophe.

The last number of THE JOURNAL brought the first knowledge to many of their friends of the culmination which might be fitly termed "The Romance of Providence," the marriage of James D. Roberts, of Detroit, to Mrs. Minnie M. Carter, of New York. Both bride and bridegroom have an extended acquaintance throughout the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union whom I know will join me in wishing them all the good things in life, including several visits to International Typographical Union conventions.

The United States shipping board has added a valuable man to its force in the person of Fred L. Davis, who has been a proofreader in the office many years and ranks as one of the best.

Thomas A. Dougherty, whose death occurred on November 15, was one of the best-known and best-liked printers in Washington. He was a native of this city and served his time on one of the old Sunday newspapers, of which Washington had quite a number of good ones in the long ago. Though badly deformed through an accident in childhood, he was of an exceedingly happy disposition, and made friends on all sides. He was a good workman, and for thirty years held responsible positions in the government printing office, mostly in connection with the night forces. He never married and devoted his whole life to the care and support of his mother and sister—and what better can be said of any man than that? Besides his membership in Columbia Union, he was an active and useful Elk and Knight of Columbus, all of whom regret the loss of "Tommy" Dougherty.

Samuel Maurice Briscoe, after an absence of four years in Baltimore, has returned to Washington and is operating a Merg. on one of the papers.

Arthur St. Asaph Smith, whose death occurred on November 8, had been a member of Columbia Union for many years and was quite a forceful orator on the floor of the union, and had it not been for his African blood would undoubtedly have attained prominence in labor circles, for he had good abilities. He was 67 years of age, and had worked but little at the trade for some years.

Edward Hickman, whose death occurred recently, was the son of William H. Hickman, for many years foreman of the Congressional Record and one of the most popular men who ever held official position in the government printing office. and a brother of Harry Hickman, a member of the Evening Star chapel.

After a period of illness of several months, Kane Mahoney died recently at his home in Troy, N. Y. He had been an employe of the government printing office for many years and his death is regretted by a host of friends.

Timothy M. Ring, formerly of Cincinnati, one of the most useful of Columbia Union's good workers for many years, has been a patient sufferer with trouble with his eyes, which has prevented him from performng his duties of proofreader a great part of the last year.

Miss Jennie Grace Johnson, proofreader in the government printing office, was recently called to her home in Willimantic, Conn., by the death of her aged mother.

Peter Blauboer, of the monotype keyboard force, with Mrs. Blauboer, is visiting the old home town, Albany, N. Y.

E. M. ("Dusty") Miller recently spent several weeks in his old town of Cincinnati, recovering from a severe surgical operation.

John O'Hern has been absent from the office for several months on account of illness.

GEORGE M. RAMSEY.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The December meeting of No. 10 will have an entertainment feature added. It is planned to invite all the union printers in the drafted army now stationed at Camp Zachary Taylor. Rev. W. N. Briney, pastor of the Broadway Christian church, an honorary member, will deliver an address. There will be songs, recitations, talks and everything thrown in to make the soldier boys happy. Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake, lemonade, etc., will be served. William S. Heffernan, chairman of the entertainment committee, will be in charge of the social features of the meeting.

Mayor-elect G. W. Smith has announced that he will appoint D. B. G. Rose as chairman of the board of public works when the republicans take control of the city's affairs, as a result of the election on November 20. Mr. Rose is well known to newspaper and job printers who have worked in Louisville. He is president of the Standard Printing Company. It is quite an honor to the printing industry to see this choice appointment go to Mr. Rose. Connected with the Standard, also, is Edward Gottschalk, general manager, who is president of the board of education. (Ed is our property, register number 9856).

President James O. Ames has received a letter from one of our boys, J. F. Church, in the camp at Hattiesburg, Miss., telling of the joys and adventures of army life. He describes the camp down there as not being constructed much like Camp Zachary Taylor near Louisville—barracks here and tents down there.

William E. Ott died on November 15. He had a record of fifty-one years' continuous membership in No. 10 and was an active member up to the time he became ill and had to leave his place on the Herald, with which paper he had been for forty-seven years.

Joseph C. Barrett and Leon F. Schmelzer, two of our good boys, were admitted to the Home early in November. Both have a slight touch of tuberculosis, and as they went to the sanatorium at the very beginning it is not believed they will have to remain under treatment long.

Fourteen intertypes displaced the monotypes on the Herald on November 18. The Lanston company placed all the operators of their machines elsewhere. Practically enough operators were gathered locally to man the new intertypes. Three of the Herald's old men, who manned the battery of Mergs at the old plant before the fire some four years ago, and who made good on the monotype, are among the men on the new machines.

C. N. Jacques, one of our delegates to the central body and its recording secretary, has been recommended to the American Federation of Labor for appointment as organizer.

The bowling league is represented on local alleys by six five-men teams, three each from the Courier-Journal and Herald chapels. Competition is keen, with an eye to the future tourney of the tri-city contest between Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Louisville. Louisville can be counted upon to have a good delegation and representation at the three-cornered fight for glory. Leon Schmelzer, chairman of the transportation committee, whom the league claims to have "loaned" to Colorado Springs for the winter, will be missed when the boys go to Indianapolis. J. P. Bagley is one of the leading spirits of the local bunch. In all things that's bowling Bagley is right there, with Vic Dierkes, Ray Dierkes and Ralfy Weldon crowding him for all they are worth.

Gus Kroeger, one of our youngsters who learned the linotype here, is back with us and has taken a sit on the Herald's new intertype headletter machine. For a couple of years he has been working on a paper down in El Paso, Texas.

The new job scale has been signed up without a hitch and without the loss of a single office. In years past the arrangement was with the shops individually; this time a number of them are banded together under the Printers' League of America, Branch No. 11, but those which do not belong have signed up individually. An arbitration agreement was first entered into before the scale negotiations were taken up in earnest after a little hitch over the union's demands. ROBERT IRICK.

NEW ENGLAND TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have had two newspaper suspensions inside of two months in New England, and that there has been less clothing advertising this fall than usual, business still remains good in this district. Good jobbers and operators can find work, and the wages offered in most cases are higher than the prevailing scale, but still not as high as the cost of living warrants. The district secretary has a few job sits open in small towns paying $20, and would appreciate efforts made to give circulation to this statement.

A circular has been mailed from the district secretary's office, calling attention to the increased rate of initiation fees that are to prevail after January 1, 1918, and urging locals that have not organization committees, to appoint them, with the object in view of making a big drive to get as many non-members to join as possible before the new rates go into effect. We have secured the names and addresses of over 600 of the 788 non-union printers in New England and, with the proper spirit prevailing, there is no good reason why we can not induce at least 400 of these printers to affiliate with us. The time for action is short, and for that reason much must depend upon the assistance rendered by the members in general to bring about more thorough organization for the craft.

One hundred and seventy-one members of the typographical unions in New England have either enlisted or been drafted. Boston with fifty-two leads the list, and Providence with seventeen, Springfield with twelve, and Bridgeport with ten follow in order.

Representative Dallas has been exceptionally busy during the month with a discharge case in Holyoke, which was adjusted by putting the man discharged back to work, and the continuation of an attempt at organization work in Bangor. The progress made in Bangor is best described by Correspondent John F. O'Leary: "On Sunday, October 14, a special meeting of Bangor Union was held, which was the largest gathering in years. It was a banner day, for seven new members were taken in; these added to those previously initiated through the efforts of Representative Dallas, makes our total forty-three, compared with the twenty-eight we had before 'Joe' came to town. Notwithstanding the strong opposition put up by the publishers of the Commercial, we now have nine cards in that plant, and I hear that those who have not already joined have been promised a bonus of $25 at Christmas. We feel confident that before long Senator Bass will consider the typographical union a fit organization to do business with. The Daily News, under date of October 18, had a leading article on the typographical union's efforts to further the sale of the Liberty loan bonds."

The newspaper publishers in Hartford have granted a voluntary increase of $2 per week, to go into effect on the first pay day in November. This makes the day rate $26 and the night rate $29. An increase of $1 per week was also granted the proofreaders. Hartford now has a membership of 212, with several applications to be acted upon at the next meeting. We extend congratulations to the printers of Hartford, for they now have a scale that is only exceeded by one local—Boston—in this district, and the membership at the present rate of increase will soon be in a relative position with the scale.

Pawtucket newspaper printers are to receive a voluntary increase of $1 per week, making the new rate $24 per week, which is only $1 less than that paid to printers in Providence. At the November meeting of Pawtucket Union final action as to consolidating with Providence Union will be voted on.

Joseph Fitzgerald, a member of Pittsfield Union, after being twice rejected because of defective sight, appealed to the adjutant-general and has been accepted for the Twenty-fifth U. S. engineers as a member of a troop of printers who are to be sent to France.

The job printers of New Bedford have negotiated a new scale which went into effect November 1. The scale is to run one year and grants an increase of $1, making the new rate $20 per week.

There are a number of job and newspaper scales being negotiated at present and many locals are reporting that employers generally are paying above the scales in book and job offices.

By the terms of an agreement signed three years ago, the newspaper printers in Providence have received an increase of $1 per week, making the day rate $25 for a forty-eight-hour week, and the night rate $27 for a forty-five-hour week. Piece workers on the day and night shifts received an increase of one-half cent per thousand. The minimum hours for day work is thirty-nine hours and thirty-six hours for night work on machines.

The Daily News of Pittsfield suspended publication very suddenly on October 29. This leaves but one daily paper in the city of Pittsfield. There are rumors that the Eagle is to establish a morning paper.

Brockton, Hartford, Portland, Manchester and Waterbury Unions report that they have again invested in Liberty bonds.

Secretary Curran of Portland Union writes: "At the last meeting of the union it was voted that we purchase a $200 Liberty bond. A. W. Melville, one of our pensioners, passed away October 26, a continuous member for fifty-one years. The organization committee is making another drive for members. This will give the non-union printers an opportunity to affiliate with the local at the old rate of initiation fees. Business is good and the outlook for the union is most promising."

Brockton Union is busy with the negotiations for a new job scale and has purchased a $100 Liberty bond.

New London Union has appointed a live organization committee with full power to carry on a special campaign for new members. Messrs. Ham, Donovan and Driscoll have reputations for executing any order assigned them.

On November 5 Fitchburg-Leominster Union voted to change the name of the union by dropping Leominster. The union will hereafter be known as Fitchburg Union and still has jurisdiction over the city of Leominster.

Secretary Brown, of Marlboro-Hudson Union, writes: "We gained one member by card this month, and also have three applications to be acted upon at our next meeting."

The Boston Union Printers' Baseball Association has contributed $100 to the ball and bat fund for the soldiers in France. Secretary Clark C. Griffith, of Washington, in acknowledging the receipt of the donation said: "If every association throughout the country would be as patriotic as your association, we would have enough money to outfit every soldier in the country."

The executive board of the N. E. T. U. held a meeting in Boston on Sunday, October 21, with President Cahill of Lynn, Vice-President Miles of Hartford, and Secretary Murphy of Providence present. Plans for organization work were discussed, and if the program adopted can be carried out this district will be one that every printer in New England will be proud of. All that is now wanted is a little co-operation on the part of the individual member, and the best way to initiate yourself into the work required is to attend the regular meetings of your locals. The rest will be easy. Are you willing to do your bit?

Providence Central Federated Union is lending its support to a new labor paper, issued by the National Labor Press Association each month and printed by the Visitor Printing Company of Providence. The new paper has contracts covering a period of one year, and will be edited by Samuel R. Macready, a member of Providence Typographical Union.

John H. Sullivan, a member of Providence Union and delegate to the Lowell convention of the N. E. T. U., has been reappointed a member of the school board of the town of East Providence.

Bring in that non-member and we will surely make it hitting the Mohawk Trail with 5,000 members! JOHN F. MURPHY.

Providence, R. I.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

Evansville has come into the spotlight again, this time in a national way, through one of the first three American soldiers to fall in France, James B. Gresham, being a native of this city. Incidentally this was the cause of a postponed meeting of No. 35. A memorial service for young Gresham being held in this city the same afternoon on which the union meets, an adjournment was taken, and the members attended the services in a body. The Coliseum, with a seating capacity of about 4,500, was filled to overflowing, and despite the solemnity of the occasion much patriotic enthusiasm was manifest. The motion to so honor the first Evansville patriot to give his life for his country in this war was made by Joe V. Dilly. Outside of the G. A. R., the typographical union was the only organization to attend in a body and much favorable comment was heard on the action taken.

No. 35 has been doing her "bit" in the war right handsomely, both as individuals and as an organization. To the first Liberty bond loan the union subscribed $500, and one chapel in the city purchased $3,150 worth of the same issue. Other chapels were liberal subscribers. Substantial donations to the Red Cross and other war funds also have been made. Several of our members have departed for training camps, some by draft and some volunteer. Others are on the selective list and are waiting the call to duty. Taken as a whole, we believe we have a right to be proud of the showing made.

Evansville was one of the unions which was caught by the war with a five-year contract providing for a small increase each year, which in normal times would have been a fairly good proposition, but with the price of everything one has to buy advancing by leaps and bounds, we are, in the purchasing power of a dollar, getting considerably less now than when the contract was negotiated. This contract expires next February, and a new scale is now being prepared. This will provide for a substantial increase, and the committee having the matter in hand feels confident of an early and satisfactory settlement. The proprietors of the Evansville papers are friendly to the union, and we have had little or no controversy over scales here for the past twenty years and anticipate none at this time.

Being a warm personal friend of the president of No. 20, Albert E. Hill, I usually read the Nashville letter in THE JOURNAL. The November letter was of more than usual interest, as Mr. Moore mentions the possibility of the organization of a conference, either state or sectional, and seems, from the tone of his communication, to question the wisdom of the same. Without in any way desiring to influence Mr. Moore against his will, I extend a most cordial invitation to him to attend the Indiana conference, to be held at Columbus, Ind., Sunday, January 20, 1918, witness the good work we are doing, satisfy himself as to results, and if he does not return to his home in the sunny southland an enthusiastic advocate of the conference idea, I miss my guess. Space forbids going into detail on this work, but will say I know of no better method of advancing the interests of the locals in a state or specified section than by the adoption of the conference plan as worked out in this state. The Indiana conference is now in its eighth year and has grown steadily in membership, attendance and enthusiasm. Come; see, and be convinced.

A recent letter from Joe Wilson, a former attache of the Courier and Press in this city, says he is now pleasantly located in Sioux City, Iowa, holding down a machinist-operator "sit" in a small office in that city, and not worrying about the high cost of living.

We hear frequent inquiries as to the whereabouts of one Pluckebaum, erstwhile foreman of the Press. "Billie" Denzer is particularly solicitous as to his present location. Whether "Billie" is anxious to hit "Pluckie" for a job or is not taking any chances on landing in his territory, I am not prepared to say. W. H. BYINGTON.

EASTON, PA.

The Easton Daily Argus building was damaged by fire in October and caused a loss which may run into thousands of dollars. The damage to the building is about $10,000. The greatest damage was done to the new machinery, which was being installed in the basement, a great quantity of new machine parts being uncrated. The new web press was swept by the flames besides being damaged by water.

The consolidation of the Easton Express and the Argus took effect November 5 and the new paper will be known as the Easton Express, controlled by the Easton Publishing Company, of which John H. McGrath is the executive head.

The last issue of the Argus was published on November 3 under the management of O. L. Fehr, owner. He had been continually connected with this paper for upwards of thirty-eight years—since July 1, 1879. None of our members at the Express or Argus has lost his position up to the present time. CHARLES R. HAGER.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Some commotion was caused in local labor circles during the past month by the action of the central labor union at its October meeting in passing resolutions commending Senator LaFollette, and also a resolution endorsing the local socialist candidate for mayor of Bridgeport. Many of the unions of the city held special meetings and repudiated the action of the central labor union. No. 252 was one of those that denounced the action, and we also passed a resolution endorsing President Wilson for his stand on the war questions. Instead of helping the socialist candidate for mayor we believe the action taken by the central labor union was detrimental to his prospects, as, when the ballots were counted, the socialist vote was shown to be less than it has been for the past six years.

We are anxiously looking forward to the new plant of the Standard-American, which has recently changed hands. The plant will be located in the building now occupied by the American Hardware Company, on Middle street. Four new machines have been ordered. The non-distribution system will be used, and when Old Father Time brings along the new 1918 we will see one of the handsomest newspapers and one of the finest outfits in Nutmegland. The best part of the whole thing is that there will not be a non-card man from cellar to garret.

The Post is putting in a new monotype caster.

In our letter last month, we got "twisted" and gave John Broadbrook a new name. We ask him to accept our apology and we promise that we will not do it again.

Our soldier members at the front all unite in declaring they are pleased with their jobs, but would like to be where they could throw a few slugs and a little "pi" once in a while. Several of them expect to get appointments as printers in the service. We have seen or heard from every one of our boys, and all have stated that they are not sorry they are wearing the khaki of Uncle Sam. We are proud of the spirit of our boys.

Henry I. Coates, formerly of the Standard, one of our boys, has been made a corporal. He is stationed at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass.

Our president, Elward Bennetto, now has two of his sons serving Uncle Sam. One has been in the navy for about eighteen years, and the other has recently enlisted and gone to Camp Devens.

Four new applications for membership at our November meeting. We are still gaining.

The allied printing trades council granted the label to another shop in November, the Connecticut Office Supply Company. Hustle, boys, and get in a couple more of your old eyesores.

Business has been quite lively here the past month. The demand for men has been larger than the supply. ROBERT TARRING.

MOOSE JAW, SASK.

Secretary Bailey's motion providing $1 local dues having passed, henceforth 50 cents will be rebated all good and worthy attendants at our monthly assemblies.

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Clark, Crooks and Seibert, is now busy revising and bringing up to date our local constitution and by-laws, which will soon be enjoying its fifth birthday.

The names of J. Clark and A. Bell Bennett for school trustees, and the latter for labor candidate in Ward 2, in which he resides, was submitted by No. 627 to the Labor Representation League meeting. The labor stalwarts of the city are likely to run a candidate in every ward as well as for mayor. Here's hoping!

Lieutenant Laybourne, who has seen much fighting in France, is now back in England learning the gentle art of aeroplaning. Leave it to "T. W." to make good in the flying line.

HARTFORD, CONN.

At the October meeting the new wage scale was voted to be opened by the members of No. 127, and a committee was apointed to interview the employers of the different newspapers. The committee was organized immediately, and after interviewing the employers and presenting their case they were asked to give them a few days' time to think it over, which was done. After a few days the committee waited on the employers and were told that they would give the members in the composing room a $2 increase a week, the proofreaders a $1 increase and the apprentices a 50-cent increase a week. This report was brought back to the members and was accepted. This increase was given voluntarily by the employers of the different newspapers and is to run for one year. This scale went into effect the first pay day in November, and the scale committee thinks this is a record in negotiating a scale, two months before the contract expired. There was good feeling between employers and members and both sides are well pleased.

Burdette Allis, operator on the Courant (night side) has been the latest member to be called to the colors from No. 127. This makes the tenth member from our local that is doing his bit for his country.

Guy Loeffler, formerly operator on the Globe, has changed his position and is now employed on the Courant (day side).

The membership committee is busy getting new members and is meeting with great success.

The allied trades council recently removed the labels from one of our offices for not living up to the constitution. They have also located a former jobber who was using the label without authority and succeeded in getting the labels from him.

IMPERIAL VALLEY, CAL.

At its last meeting No. 707 endorsed the action of its executive committee in purchasing a Liberty bond for the union.

No. 707 has under consideration the purchase of a cemetery lot. It is probable that the proposition will be carried, as at present the body of one of our former members rests in the potter's field.

Earl F. Waugh, one of our members, has purchased the plant of the Montgomery printshop in Calexico and is reported to be doing well.

Messrs. Perrin and Oliver, publishers of the Calexico Chronicle, have recently dissolved partnership, and the former gentleman is now sole manager of the paper. Both Mr. Perrin and Mr. Oliver are members of No. 707.

Cards received: John Moussier, Thomas A. Gilbertson, John M. Nelson, Littleton Terry, D. H. Crabbs. Cards issued: C. D. Reagan, M. L. Howard, P. N. Cobb, D. H. Crabbs, Thomas A. Gilbertson.

TRENTON, N. J.

President Scott visited Trenton November 12 and assisted very materially in negotiating a new scale for No. 71. While things are progressing very swimmingly, we are not in a position to publish the entire outcome, although we are sure of an increase in both news and job shops. The boys of the union gave President Scott a hearty welcome, and were very glad to see him, it being quite an occasion, we having had the opportunity of entertaining an International president but twice in fifty-three years.

This local was represented at the State Printers' League of New Jersey, held at Newark, October 28, by President B. A. Wilson, William J. Dingethal and Leon G. Basford. The main issue before the meeting was the necessity of keeping typesetting machines out of vocational schools and keeping union men in these schools as instructors. Newark did the honors nobly to the delegates and visitors.

Harry Whitesell, of the Gazette chapel, has reported game plentiful, he having had remarkable luck gunning recently.

Warren A. Hannum, of the Times chapel, and president of the central labor union, attended as delegate the A. F. of L. convention held in Buffalo. He also attended, as vice-president of the National Publicity Organization, their convention in Buffalo the same week.

The delegate bug is already buzzing in this city as regards the convention to be held in Scranton next August. Already there are a number of aspirants in the field, among them being B. A. Wilson, Clyde Hines, J. Ewing Leigh, Harvey Hart, Davis P. Hunt, Ernest Koch, Joseph Pancoast, Paul Leary, Charlie Ogden, John Campbell, L. G. Basford, Alex Johnston, Jacob Bertolet and Abe Cooperstein, also Charlie Baldwin and Lafayette Hooper.

OTTAWA, CANADA.

The November session and a special one week later were largely concerned with the prospective new scale agreement for newspaper offices. As the current job scale, dating from July 1, 1917, is a flat scale ($24), there is a possibility of adopting a flat-scale principle for the newspaper workers as well. The executive committee has been commissioned by the local to conduct the negotiations. The present scale expires on December 31 inst.

The local will again send Christmas remembrances to all men enlisted for overseas service. In this connection, the latest enlistments at date of writing are A. E. Ward, Journal; Frank Howe and C. Botham, Printing Bureau, and William Hunter, Dominion Printing and Loose Leaf Company.

The following members of No. 102 are reported to have landed at Halifax on their way home from the front: H. H. Borthwick, A. W. Branch, William N. Austin and J. J. Paynter.

Terrance McCaddens of the monotype branch, Printing Bureau, is listed as wounded. We sincerely trust that he may have a speedy recovery.

The selective draft law is bound to take a few more of our boys for the kaiser hunt. This union has been from the first well represented in all branches of the service.

A letter received from F. J. Hartney at the Home, is full of cheer and anticipation of a trip to Canuck land next spring. There will be many a glad hand waiting him on his arrival here.

Crain Printers, Ltd., are in their new-old quarters on Spruce street, and have a splendidly equipped establishment.

A number of members who have been on the sick list have resumed work.

After a short illness, George Simmonds died at an Ottawa hospital on October 23. The late Mr. Simmonds was in his fiftieth year and resided in Ottawa for the past twelve years. He was born in England, but was a resident of Ottawa ever since he came to this country. He was employed for a number of years in the mechanical room of the Free Press and later as a linotype operator at the Government Printing Bureau, where he worked up until a few days before he was taken to the hospital. For a number of years he was a delegate from the Ottawa Typographical Union to the trades and labor council.

A. E. SHEPPARD.

COLUMBIA, S. C.

The printing business here is booming. It has never before been so good. Men who desire to work here will be prudent to come instead of writing, for, while there are no appreciable number of situations to be offered, there is ample work for a half dozen men—on the ground. So, it is best to come, not write, because ability and salary are best agreed upon in that way.

At the October meeting a resolution was adopted against the use of the labor movement for the financial gain of transient advertising schemes, generally by strangers whose propositions are without merit, who wittingly or unwittingly often send printing away from here for execution and otherwise injure the labor movement. Merchants patronize these enterprises under the mistaken impression that they are directly helping the labor movement. Generally speaking, this is not the fact; and, besides, it is really taking an unfair, unkind and most unreasonable advantage of business men who are honestly and favorably impressed with the dignity and potential influence for good of the labor movement—hence the bestowal of patronge that at times can not really be afforded. The merchants will, no doubt, appreciate the action of our union.

The allied printing trades council here will probably be soon dissolved, because of the failure of its membership to meet, be active and measure up to the standard of a business institution. The printers have been bearing their burden uncomplainingly, but patience has ceased to be a virtue now, when, with a population of 70,000 people, instead of 30,000 people, the printing business has grown and will continue to grow, with no sentinels on guard to announce the advance of the enemy. New members will be appointed, and, if the right men are then selected, an increase will soon be noticeable, both in union men and union products.

On October 9, John Ashley Bourke, 71 years old, died in this city after an illness of a week. He had lived in Columbia for years. His sons, W. W. Bourke, of the State; John J. Bourke, of the R. L. Bryan Company, and Marion Bourke, of the Charleston American, survive him. The deceased was a gentleman of the old school of the south, kind, considerate of the views and feelings of others, well read, a brave survivor of Company C, First South Carolina volunteers, of Gregg's brigade. He served in Stonewall Jackson's army, under Capt. James M. Mayhorn, of this city. Interment occurred in the Presbyterian cemetery on October 10. Knowing him so well and favorably in life, when we viewed him in death he seemed to have wrapped himself in the drapery of his couch and lain down to pleasant dreams. Peace to his soul.

In Jacksonville, Fla., on the afternoon of October 18, Walter Bernard Cormack and Blanche Onie Millershan were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The bride, a native of Charlotte, N. C., was visiting relatives in Florida; hence the announcement of the marriage came as a surprise, although it was known that the couple were engaged. They are living at the home of the parents of the bridegroom. His father, J. J. Cormack, has been foreman of the State for twenty-five years. The bridegroom is an operator on that paper, vice-president of our union, chairman of the local sick committee and a cheerful and enthusiastic worker in our midst. His bride is a graduate of Elizabeth College, North Carolina, charming in manner, and has already made many warm and lasting friendships in her new home. Recently she has delighted audiences with her singing at Camp Jackson. May their path through life be strewn with flowers.

The clerks of the Atlantic Coast Line here and at about twenty other points in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida are out on strike because of the dismissal of a Richmond employe of the company for soliciting memberships into the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. They declare it to be their intention not to return to work until he is reinstated. They are right. Organized labor in this section will sustain them in every honorable way. The presumption of this great system to prevent free thought and free acts is only surpassed by its heartlessness, and its un-American and untenable attitude. It would do that which no man or body of men have ever done—deprive an American citizen of his constitutional rights. It would be court and judge and jury and do that which no court has ever done, or ever will do—abridge the rights of any citizen. Coming as it does in the midst of our war, when we are fighting for democracy in its broadest sense and union labor in its true meaning, it is but little amiss of a vicious stab—a blow below the belt. This idea, conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, means that the future of this great system will be seriously menaced, because the love of the American people for fairness and equity will arouse them against this autocratic railroad corporation. This dogma of the Atlantic Coast Line must be strangled into a painless death, leaving behind the best legacy possible from such a nefarious and reprehensible "order."

On November 18, John Lee Davis, former president of our union, secretary of the city federation of trades, secretary-treasurer of the South Carolina Federation of Labor and a member of the Board of Conciliation of South Carolina, was appointed organizer of unskilled labor of the United States government in South Carolina. W. W. Long, head of Clemson Agricultural College, of this state, suggested Mr. Davis to the head of the department of agriculture of the government. Congressman Lever, of this district, who is chairman of the agricultural committee of congress, promptly endorsed Mr. Davis. He did not seek this appointment, therefore it is a decided compliment. He will discharge his new duties as he has discharged every previous duty—with certainty, celerity and candor—and he will also render a valuable and patriotic service. He has the best wishes of TOM F. MACNALLEY.

WESTERN CANADA CONFERENCE.

Swift Current Typographical Union No. 726 has presented a new agreement and scale contract to the employers for consideration. The old agreement expires at the end of the year.

Private James Quinn, who left Swift Current last year with the 209th battalion, has been invalided home as physically unfit, and is now employed with the Wolseley (Sask.) News.

B. W. Bellamy has declined to become a candidate for the position of International delegate to the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, elections for which take place next May. The movement to have his name go on the ballot emanated from "somewhere in the United States."

The Winnipeg Telegram Chapel News will issue its second annual edition de luxe in time to catch the Christmas mails overseas. Charlie Ryan is actively engaged in the production. Nuff sed!

It is anticipated that a new compensation act will be enacted in the province of Alberta shortly. A commission was recently appointed by the government, and at sittings held in Edmonton and Medicine Hat, President Knott and Secretary Bellamy, of the conference, appeared on behalf of the typographical interests. They urged strongly for the introduction of provisions covering industrial or occupational diseases, as provided by the Manitoba and British Columbia acts. They urged that the industries should bear the cost of operation, that common law rights should be waived and all cases administered by an independent commission of three, representing employers, employes and government.

Saskatoon Union has signed up a new agreement with the employers of that city. Dating from the first of November the new wage figures to March next are $28 days flat and $30 nights flat, job and news. From March the figures will be $29 days and $31 nights. This affects many employes to the extent of $5 per week.

Lethbridge Union has signed up a new scale agreement on a flat basis for news and job of $25 days and $27 nights.

In Medicine Hat the old agreement expired at the end of October, but at time of writing, November 12, no success had attended the efforts of the union to secure a new agreement providing for a flat scale of $27 days and $29 nights, job and news. The employers are prepared to grant $25 and $27, but this the union turned down flat.

E. M. Stirton resigned the secretaryship of Brandon Union, removing to Winnipeg. William Murray is his successor.

Swift Current Union is negotiating a new agreement. The demand is for $25 and $27, day and night, flat, news and job. The prevailing agreement expires at the end of the year.

Strenuous efforts have been made during the past few weeks to obtain the consent of Secretary Bellamy to allow his name to appear on the ballot papers in the forthcoming dominion elections in opposition to Hon. A. L. Sifton, union government candidate, who is to hold a position in the new cabinet, if elected, as minister of customs, and who resigned the premiership of the province of Alberta to enter dominion politics. . Nothin' doin'.

Arthur ("Scotty") Woods, of Edmonton, died of wounds in France recently.

Vice-President McCreath will be the new secretary for Edmonton local, Guy Deeton having definitely given up the duties.

Stanley ("Cap") Urquhart, of Medicine Hat, has enlisted with the militia in camp at Calgary.

George E. Price, formerly of Port Arthur, is now foreman of the job department of the Saskatoon Star, E. Richards, formerly foreman, and Mr. Dawson, superintendent, resigning, the former going to the States and the latter to Regina.

B. W. Bellamy.

ABOLISH CONVENTIONS.

In the matter of progress the International Typographical Union has always cleared the path for other labor organizations to follow, after experience had demonstrated it was the right one. As an organization we point to the fact with pride that we were the first tradesmen in America to organize and work for the betterment of our craft. Other trade organizations have followed us. But in one respect we are trailing behind other unions in progress, and that is in the matter of our convention system, for a number of our large unions have abolished it because it was expensive and unrepresentative. Forty years ago, when our membership was small, the convention system was a good thing because it brought together members from different sections of the country for a conference on primary questions of unity and expediency. We were then in our swaddling clothes and groping in the dark. That era has passed, for today we are an invincible army of workers prepared for peace or war. We hold in our hands the olive branch for all disputes, but, like Banquo's ghost, the sword of Damocles hangs over the heads of all who will not listen to argument, reason and justice, and we no longer kneel in supplication. To preserve this status we should abolish the convention system. It is unrepresentative, expensive and a menace to our further progress. Let us take our last convention at Colorado Springs as a criterion. That convention was composed of less than three hundred delegates and nearly four hundred unions were unrepresented. The sending of most of these delegates depleted the treasuries of small unions without any benefit to the unions. They met and devoted three days to convention work and three days to festivities, and most of their convention work was voted down at our recent referendum. The money spent by the local unions and by headquarters was a useless expense, so why pursue such a course?

The question here arises, What system shall we adopt in lieu of the convention system? I say, let us elect a board of governors for a term of two years, each governor to represent an equal number of members, as near as possible. As an illustration, let us divide the United States and Canada up into eleven districts and elect governors from each district on the same day, each district to elect its own governor and have no voice in the election of the other governors. Under this arrangement New York city would be entitled to one governor, New York state and New England states one governor, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia one governor, and so on throughout our jurisdiction let there be a grouping of states to make at least six thousand members. Let these governors meet once a year at headquarters and do the work now allotted to conventions and each governor be the organizer for his district; abolish the present system of organizers and auditors, all accounts to be audited by the executive council and approved by the governors; pay the governors an annual salary of $3,500 per year and mileage for organizing work, but no hotel bills, as they have to pay to live at home as well as abroad. The cost of the board of governors should come out of the general fund.

This change would save the organization thousands of dollars and give the membership an equal voice in all matters affecting the organization and eliminate all factions. It would give us a business organization and we would retain the referendum to decide all vital questions.

Let us march in the front rank of progress, and not trail behind as now. C. W. Straughan.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

Announcement of the unexpected death of A. H. England, which occurred October 2, caused a profound shock to his many friends in typographical union ranks as well as in and around Vancouver. A post-mortem examination disclosed pontine hemorrhage as the immediate cause of death. He was born at Hereford, England, April 14, 1880, arrived in Canada about twelve years ago, and after spending a short while on the prairies came on to Vancouver. For upward of ten years the late Mr. England was an employe of the Province composing room. Always taking a keen interest and active part in typographical union matters, he served in various official positions in the organizations to which he belonged. From 1910 to 1912 he was delegate to the allied printing trades council, serving as secretary for two out of the three years. He represented Vancouver Typographical Union at the 1912 convention of the International Typographical Union held at Cleveland, Ohio, was vice-president of the local union in 1913, and also at one time was a delegate to the trades and labor council. The sincere sympathy of the officers and members of No. 226 is extended to the widow who survives him. Harry Neelands.

EL PASO, TEXAS.

Delegate-President Hoffman, of No. 370, returned from the convention at Colorado Springs, as well as an extended vacation in Colorado. His report from the convention was very interesting and was accepted by the union with a rising vote of thanks. While at the convention he reports he met a number of residents of the Home, and all those known by El Paso members wished to be remembered, and that they are well pleased with their treatment at the Home.

Something was brought to light in the last meeting of No. 370 that may exist in a number of unions throughout the country, and that is, that the bank checks used by all local unions may not show by the label that the work was done in its entirety by union labor. The central labor union submitted a bank check which is union throughout, and will receive the endorsement of El Paso printers in the label campaign that will be inaugurated this winter. How many unions use bank checks that are absolutely union throughout?

Sam Montgomery and F. E. Greene were elected delegates to the central labor body.

Frank Strothers arrived from the coast and is slipped up on the Times. Sam Montgomery and Walter Morrow came in from Douglas and both have sits on the Times. H. P. Greene, who came in from the south and held a sit on the Times, left for Phœnix, Ariz. W. E. Boynton was an "in-and-outer." L. C. Bahls is subbing on the Times. Dick Pulis left the Herald and is now in Albuquerque, N. M. "Shorty" Stephens is in from the coast and is holding a sit on the Times. Jim Driscoll, who, with a party of New York printers, went to Panama and returned by the way of San Francisco, has a sit on the Times.

Walter McCoun, operator on the Herald, has been on the sick list the past month.

Several of the printers here are planning a week's visit to the Sierre Blanca district, where they expect to secure enough ducks and other game for the balance of the year.

Jack Price has sold his newspaper interests in Patagonia, Ariz., to Howard Keener, of Tucson, Ariz., and Jack, with his family and Ford, is now in El Paso and has a sit on the Labor Advocate.

"Major" Bridges, of the Times chapel, has arrived from San Antonio, where he was in training for the army. He claims it is strenuous work crawling for a mile or two on one's stomach.

Chris B. Callan, a member of the Austin Typographical Union, is an applicant for appointment to a position on the state industrial accident board.

Bob Vernor, vice-president of No. 370, was married to Miss Grace Gallup, who holds a situation on the Herald. It came as an absolute surprise and the many friends of the couple wish them success in their matrimonial venture.

Doesn't it seem strange, now, that most correspondents of THE JOURNAL are saying that work is good and that they could use a few operators or hand men? It used to be "stay away, plenty of subs to take care of all the extra work." Right now in El Paso, November 10, we are short of operators. The hand side is pretty well balanced, but neither the Herald nor the Times have any subs on the operators' side.

The scale in El Paso now is $5.25 for day work and $5.75 for night work.

Robert A. Houston was a new member obligated at our last meeting.

Sam Montgomery is the "daddy" of a new by-law: "A foreman can not discipline a regular for refusing to work on his night off. Provided, that this will not prevent a member from working on his night off, if he so desires." The amendment carried and Foreman Cocke, of the Times, appealed from the union's decision.

The Labor Advocate, edited by W. J. Moran, is El Paso's representative in the labor field in the southwest, and can compare with the best of them. Recently a three-year contract was signed with this paper. Hand men, first year, $27; second year, $30; third year, $31.50. The operator receives the day newspaper scale.

E. E. Halstead, who was make-up on the Times, left for Douglas to take a sit on the International.

H. M. Stanley, from Kentucky, and S. C. Taggert, from Los Angeles, Cal., but who recently worked in Bisbee, have sits on the Times.

Cards received: W. H. Seaberry, Frank K. Strothers, W. E. Boynton, L. C. Bahls, Boyd A. Barnes. Cards issued: W. E. Boynton, J. D. Pulis, F. H. Chase, Ward Harrington, F. B. Mackin, W. H. Seaberry, W. J. Hanhart, Boyd A. Barnes. W. R. CRAFT.

MOBILE, ALA.

Mobile Union No. 27 reached an agreement on November 4 with the publishers, and the new scale under contract became effective on November 1 and continues in force for three years. Differentials were abolished, and now all composing room members are on equality as to compensation. In these disturbed times, when activity and work and trouble and sorrow are so much in evidence, it is gratifying to get our affairs adjusted.

Mobile Union contributed two members to the great national army, and several more will be available under the operation of the selective draft law. The two alluded to enlisted early in the summer—Edward V. Murray, jr., and Theodore Calcina, both natives and local printing office graduates. As indicative of the wholesome and patriotic spirit which animates these young American soldiers from the south, I give a portion of a letter just received by the undersigned from one of them:

SCHOFIELD, H. T., October 22, 1917.

DEAR FRIEND—I will seat myself and drop you a few lines to let you know that I am still in the land of the living. I am doing fine with my new duty and I am going to try hard to make good as a Sammy.

I am going to ask you to send me THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL every month, and get the boys to send me a paper, for I would love to have one once a week.

I was separated from "Dodo" Calcina. He was left at Fort Sill, Okla., and he surely did want to come out here with me. I am sorry he had to stay, for here we do have some times. Tell all the "boys" I would like to be remembered by them.

I guess my dues are being taken care of by the best people in the world—that is, the International Typographical Union. I would love to hear from some of the old boys that I have stood side by side at work and "pulled out" with so many times. Put my address up on the chapel bulletin board, so they can write to me.

Well, I am going to help to end this war, and then things will be better all over the world.

As ever, your friend, E. V. MURRAY, JR.
Battery F, Ninth field artillery, Schofield barracks, Honolulu, Hawaii.

No. 27 recently purchased a handsome American flag, and its first use was at the head of the farewell parade of the first contingent of men selected for service under the draft law. The flag was loaned for the occasion.

Work in the newspaper line has been good, but a dulness prevails in the job line. The White-Eckert Bookbinding Company has acquired the plant belonging formerly to the Commercial Printing Company, whose career ceased because of the death of the proprietor, Edward E. Colburn. P. Gibson DeWitt has been placed in charge of the printing department.

Work in industrial lines, particularly in shipbuilding, has received considerable impetus. As a consequence the local central body has gained several additional affiliations.

Among recent arrivals: C. S. Hoyt, E. P. Preston, W. S. Kelly, Tyler D. Philpott. Recent departures: C. A. Kelley, Arthur H. Pratt, Lawrence Burt, George V. Schmitz. By honorable withdrawal card, Sam R. Crockett.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Business fair. Had a slump during the past month, but it's picking up now.

Representative Hanson was with us at the last meeting and, at the request of the president, made a very interesting and optimistic talk. He said conditions generally were excellent in the southern jurisdiction, and gave promise of being even better in the near future. Some employers in the south who have heretofore refused to consider unionizing their plants are beginning to see a light.

F. R. Hanson, after about a year spent in Arizona, is back at S. C. Toof & Co. as superintendent of the composing and press rooms.

ALBERT STARRETT.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.

A cheery letter came along recently from Ernie Woodworth, which, fortunately, killed a rumor which had got around that he was totally blind. "Woodie," who was operating at the News-Telegram, enlisted in the Thirteenth mounted rifles, but his spell of active service was of short duration, as he was shot in the eye by a sniper while on, we understand, his first turn of sentry duty. The chapel was just getting busy to locate him when his welcome letter came to hand, saying that he is at his home at Niagara Falls, that he has one good eye, and that he hopes to be around again.

The ladies have just completed a task which will receive its full appreciation on or about December 25. They have sent to our members at the front twenty-seven fine, fat Christmas parcels. We think the packages are entitled to those adjectives, seeing that the ladies have squeezed $100 worth of Christmas fare into them. May all the twenty-seven boys be hovering around the mail bag when it arrives!

We stopped envying E. G. Quick when he left his broad acres and became "one of us" again, but now he has put it over us properly. He has become the proprietor of the Youngstown (Alta.) Plain Dealer. Good luck to him!

Arthur Farnsworth, who lifted a take of typhoid off the hook, is now well on the way to recovery.

Under the military service act, employers have had to ascertain the ages of their employes, and if the office we are most intimately acquainted with is a fair sample, foremen generally must rejoice that Professor Osler, the "too-old-at-forty" merchant, did not get his suggestion adopted when he said that at 40 years of age men were past their usefulness and should be put into the lethal chamber. Why, the whole bloomin' works would have stopped last month. In this instance the foreman would have been left with a "devil" and a babbling, swaddling-clothed youngster of 30 or thereabouts. But, oh, let's batter the figures that had to be recorded!

It is understood that the food controller has a fine staff of assistants, etc., he and they have a great line of talk, and the staff pull down nice big-figured salaries, and—H. C. L. takes a heavier-faced "H" after each chunk of advice sent out.

By the way, when one of those food profiteers said "To h— with profits," perhaps he was placing 'em so he'd know where to find 'em!

All of which moves us to remark that if the working people want their interests looked after they must send representatives to parliament from their own end, and refuse to be "kidded" by lawyers.

Arrivals: F. Wood, H. B. Howe, J. J. Randolph, T. G. Millar, W. H. Stebbing, H. E. Ferguson, A. R. Shields, N. G. Milligan, H. MacLeod, A. F. Hickey. Departures: E. G. Quick, H. A. Brown, R. A. Duncan, J. L. Pepper.

IVOR CURTIS.

HAMILTON, ONT.

A BOY OF THE OLD BRIGADE.

I'd like to join the army, but I hardly think I'm fit,
For well-nigh thirty years I have been holding down a "sit"
That may have exercised the brain, but added naught to muscle,
Till now I'd stand a d—— poor show in bomb or bay'net tussle.

I've tickled keys on linotypes until I'm nearly blind,
And though not strong in body, I am healthy in my mind;
But, if my country needs me, you can bet your life I'll go—
A loyal British subject to his king can't answer "No!"

Since the introduction of conscription there has been a tremendous clamoring among young men who beg to be excused from participating in anything resembling bloody warfare, and, for the purpose of considering appeals for exemption, tribunals have been established throughout the land, about a dozen such courts being in session in this city. Two members of Hamilton Typographical Union, George R. Allan, of the Spectator, and Philip Obermeyer, of the Herald, have the distinction of acting in judicial capacities at these courts, the honor being conferred by the federal government. The duties, however, are not likely to prove the pleasantest these gentlemen were ever called upon to perform.

G. L. Sprague, the capable principal of the Hamilton technical and art school, is deserving of the highest commendation for the exceptional interest he is taking in the welfare of printers' apprentices. In addition to the valuable instruction in typographical art given them by Fred Atkinson, the principal has established a Wednesday evening class in spelling and grammar, taught by the regular teacher of English in the day school. In a letter to the undersigned, Principal Sprague states that any journeymen members of No. 129 who feel they need a little brushing up in these subjects will be cordially welcomed. While not wishing to impose on the generosity of Mr. Sprague, I can not refrain from mentioning the fact that there are not a few young men in this city drawing salaries as reporters who would be hugely benefited if they could be induced to take a course in the subjects mentioned.

W. H. McKay is the latest member of No. 129 to don the king's active service uniform. J. C. Knowles is in training here for overseas service. Mr. Knowles is of English birth, but worked at the printing trade in Danville, Ill., and Tampa, Fla.

"To avoid expulsion, I beg to withdraw as a member of the union." This was the concluding sentence of a letter read from William J. Cooper at the November meeting of No. 129. Mr. Cooper had not wilfully done anything wrong; in fact, he was merely following a custom that has been in vogue as long as the oldest craftsman can remember. But the pressmen's union has raised a strenuous objection to the old way of doing things, and three of our members are affected. There are three knitting mills in this city and in each one a union printer is employed setting up and running off on a small press stock cards and labels. These men contend that presswork takes up but a small fraction of their time, and that the firms would not think of employing two men to do what can easily be accomplished by one. Notwithstanding this, the pressmen insist that members of the typographical union have no right to touch a press. A committee from No. 129 endeavored to arrive at an amicable settlement of the matter with the pressmen, but without success. No. 129 considers that more harm than good would be done unionism by interfering and will take no action. The pressmen, however, threaten to appeal to higher authorities. Mr. Cooper, who had been a member of the union for nearly a quarter of a century, tendered his resignation after being advised that a typographical union man had no right to do presswork.

During the past month traveling cards were deposited by J. P. Crees, W. O. Smith and W. A. Gordon, and similar documents withdrawn by L. F. Robertson, W. J. Westcott, Stanley Thompson and J. P. Crees.

The more about this war I set,
And note the much-increasing debt,
The more I want to make a bet
We'll lick the German war-dogs yet!

ALBANY, N. Y.

Albany, 1919!

At the November meeting a lot of important business was transacted, most of the time being taken up by the consideration of three constitutional amendments. Ex-President Souder read a very interesting report of the expenses incurred by the convention committee. Ex-President Riferenberick emphasized the fact that if this organization resolves itself into a 100 per cent body of boosters for the 1919 convention that we will not face a deficit, but a surplus in our treasury. A resolution referred to the constitutional committee and which comes up for debate at the December meeting purports to reward every member 25 cents who attends meetings and fine every member who is absent. It is known as a rebate system.

James J. Wall, who was a candidate for president of the common council in this city at the recent election, has an envious labor record. In 1884 he was a delegate to the state workmen's convention held in Utica, N. Y.; in 1887, a delegate to the International convention; in 1888, president of this local; in 1891, a delegate to the central federation of labor, and has been in the Argus chapel for nearly forty years.

Norman Sandridge is conducting a series of talks on religion at the North Albany Baptist Mission.

Pte. George G. Welnhofer, stationed at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., visited his relatives and friends here recently.

Elmer Irving, jr., son of Elmer Irving, of the Lyon book chapel, has successfully passed an examination for the aviation service in Uncle Sam's flying corps.

Mark Gauntlett, an employing printer, took a short cut to the unknown recently by shooting himself.

The following men and boys compose our honor roll: Journeymen—Patrick J. Clifford, James A. Flanagan, George H. Kahn, Leo LaGoy, Harry Pedlow, Charles W. Pier, Carl J. Schweizer, Timothy J. TULSA, OKLA.

Tulsa printing fraternity is fast falling into city ways and is discarding "the small town stuff." One of the members of No. 403 has come to the conclusion that this city is large enough to need a publication devoted exclusively to printorial news, and on November 3 the first issue of The Line Gauge made its appearance. V. V. Van Tilburg is the editor. Of course, "there's a reason," and Van gives his reason as follows:

With the launching of this, the first issue of The Line Gauge, the editor is only following the example of a number of other members of printer locals throughout the country, in an endeavor to publish news items particularly pertinent to the craft in general.

The editor will, at all times, try to fill the columns of The Line Gauge with interesting printorial facts and pleasantries. The columns will at all times be open to the membership, in fact, contributions will be solicited. Personalities will at no time be permitted, although a harmless pun or "kid" at the expense of another member will not be "blue-penciled."

The price per year will be $1, payable quarterly, semi-annually or annually, in advance, as the editor finds it impossible during this terrific high-priced period, to stand the gaff of solely supporting such a luxury, if so it may be termed.

The Ben Franklin club of Tulsa has jumped into the limelight and also into the good graces of the job printer of this city by volunteering an advance in the scale of $3 per week. That branch of the industry now receives $27 per.

Curiosity does not always end disastrously, as is proved conclusively by George T. Watkins, of Boston, in his book, "Fishing for Suckers." The correspondent has just received a copy of this unique book, which affords as many laughs to the page as any of Mark Twain's writings and at the same time having the double purpose of "wising" up the unsuspecting ones to the fact that all they see in print is not just what it seems.

The two newspaper concerns of Tulsa, the World and the Democrat and Times, are running a race to see which will be the first to get into their new quarters. The Democrat and Times have received the first car shipment of the new press and it is being put in position at this writing. The World's new building is nearing completion and there are some of the knowing ones that are still "betting dollars to doughnuts" that the World will be the first to issue a paper from their new quarters. Here's hopin'—hopin' they're wrong, for the "bunch" on the Democrat and Times are deserving the fulfilment of the long-promised move to more sanitary quarters, while the World's move is only occasioned by the lack of room.

Ex-President Si Hall, of No. 403, has become one of the partners in a law brief printing firm, formerly Cockrell & Cockrell, now Cockrell & Hall.

Thomas R. McCabe, late superintendent of the Palace Stationery Company, had the misfortune of having his position burned up when the Palace company lost its plant by fire last month. Tom holds about the oldest membership in No. 403 and has filled satisfactorily many important positions in the various shops of Tulsa.

Some of the ambitious ones are talking up the idea of a printers' club. Good plan. Fine idea. But what about the rent? Rent in Tulsa now is equivalent to the purchase price in most any city in the country. But let's have the clubroom anyway. What's the difference? U. G. TUTTLE.

OAKLAND, CAL.

Glory in Excelsis Dei!

Oakland got an increase in salary with back pay from August 1.

When Oakland first asked for an increase, their demands were for a seven-hour day with a pro-rata increase of $4 a week. The publishers, upon receiving the scale committee of the union, offered a counter proposition which was accepted by the union. This proposition was that the publishers would pay the same as San Francisco was awarded in its arbitration proceedings at Indianapolis. When the award was made Oakland gained an increase of $2 a week and a seven-and-one-half-hour day. This new scale was accomplished without the cost of a penny, as Joe Rickard, chairman of the scale committee, upon whom most of the burden lay, devoted his time thoroughly to the interests of the union, without charge, though he was compelled to visit San Francisco at different times. It is unselfish acts of this kind that are worthy of recognition by the union.

The result of the award is by no means satisfactory to the membership at large, as more was expected.

San Francisco receives the same as Oakland in wages, though the award in their case was a "camouflage" increase. They enjoyed the seven-hour day prior to the award. The increase in wages San Francisco receives is $2 a week, but they have to work three hours a week longer for the $2. To those who analyze the award it appears they were buncoed—especially as they got no back pay.

The writer has been an ardent advocate of arbitration all his life, but his faith has been a wee bit shaken since the award in the San Francisco case. In all arbitration cases that come up in future it should be insisted that any award rendered should be retroactive and any increase in scale should date from when the proposed scale was originally put in effect.

An increase in wages for the job members of the union was to become effective November 19. The scale committee has the affair in hand and at late reports is optimistic. The proposed scale is a gradual decrease in hours from eight to seven and one-half per day, with a three-dollar increase in wages.

Oliver Weakley, of the Oakland Tribune, initiated a tobacco fund for the boys "over there." The response was instantaneous. The members of the Tribune chapel contributed freely and a substantial package of tobacco was forwarded to France for the American soldiers, where it will reach them by Christmas. This action of Oliver's was followed by the Enquirer boys and another fund was taken up in the latter chapel. The object being so worthy, the editorial and business offices and all mechanical departments insisted on coming in on it and another big package has been forwarded to those who are fighting the cause of humanity. Oliver Weakley insisted that only tobacco bearing the union label be forwarded and the Enquirer boys have done the same.

JOE A. MULHALL.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.

J. Lee Werst, who has been foremanizing the San Angelo Standard, has accepted a like position on the Telegram.

Our executive committee has been busy getting the contracts renewed for another year.

State Labor Commissioner T. C. Jennings addressed the central trades council recently on the defects in the workmen's compensation act.

Ex-Governor James E. Ferguson has started a new paper called the Ferguson Forum, and the Telegram does the printing.

No. 688 subscribed for a government bond of the second issue. STUART SHAW.

KEENE, N. H.

The last regular convention of No. 771 was held at the home of Mr. Stone, 48 Franklin street, where the order of business was ably transacted amid the pleasant surroundings of a jovial gathering. Next month the boys will meet at the home of Irving W. Staples, where a musical treat is arranged by the host as an inducement to get them to come.

The subscriptions to the community Christmas fund, to furnish gift boxes for the Keene boys in various branches of the service, have finally come in, and the total is nearly up to the $1,500 mark. The committee considered this a good showing for subscriptions unsolicited. The total raised in the Martell plant was $21.50.

Secretary-Treasurer Henning Youngdahl and wife have returned to Keene after a few days "down on the farm."

A card from John Hudson, at the front, states his excellent good health and a strong desire to see us once again and be enrolled under the same old number.

No. 771 had the pleasure of enrolling a new member last month in the person of F. W. Penny, whose stay was of short duration, owing to the fact that he received a call from his home town in Attleboro, Mass.

The news of the death of Edward C. Osborne, recently of this union, was received with much regret. For the last eight years, up until a few months before his death, Mr. Osborne had been a faithful member of the Keene Sentinel staff, where he severed his connection to accept a position in Middleboro, Mass. He was a native of South Arlington, Mass., and leaves a widow and four children to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and father. Mr. Osborne was well known in musical circles, having the distinction as a pianist. The loss of our brother is sadly felt.

What next? In one of Keene's printing establishments a house painter is running a job press. Some of his work looks as though it had been printed with a paint brush.

AUBREY E. MACWHA.

MIAMI, FLA.

Judging from the answers received from our appeal for helpers in last month's JOURNAL there are numerous printers desirous of spending the winter in Miami. Telegrams, letters and printers began to arrive, some even before copies of THE JOURNAL were received. To those who wired or wrote and have received no reply I wish to state that their communications were handed to the foremen of the different shops for future use.

W. B. Blakey, lately linotype operator on the Metropolis, is now subbing on the Herald, and "Dummy" Erwin quietly glided over from the Herald and accepted a situation pounding the ivories on the Metropolis.

Traveling cards have been received from the following members: John Keenan, Leland Wallace, Albert C. Clark and Charles Leidy.

Three applications for membership were received last month.

Another great improvement has taken place in the Metropolis office. Two new No. 19 linotype machines have just been installed, and the latest acquisition to the mechanical department has been the installation of a sixteen-page duplex tubular press having a reputed speed of 30,000 an hour. Wonderful improvements have taken place in the Metropolis office during the present year and it is fast becoming metropolitan in its equipment.

W. E. Glenn, who, up to a few weeks ago, was foreman on the Metropolis, has been stricken with a serious attack of nervous prostration and was obliged to go north for recuperation and treatment. His mother and wife are at present with him, and hopes are entertained for his ultimate recovery. His sudden illness was a shock to his many friends.

J. W. WITTY.

GENEVA, N. Y.

Geneva has at last put itself on the map, at present in small letters, but it is our hope as time passes it will increase. When Geneva applied for a charter in August there were nineteen members. Now No. 789 has twenty-six, and before we see the light of the new year we expect to have about forty members. We feel proud of the fact that every printing office in Geneva has signed up, thus making us a 100 per cent city.

The printing industry in Geneva, since the entrance of unionism, has undergone a wonderful change, for a printer has but to walk to the next printing office up the line to get all the work he wants. One of our employers recently sent an ad to the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle for two compositors. A day later his ad was returned to him with a polite note, saying that the Democrat and Chronicle could use any compositors that were out of a job.

The press of W. F. Humphrey has just issued its biennial city directory, which gave a lot of extra work to a number of our members.

The new afternoon daily, the Geneva Daily News, made its appearance a month ago and is a very good-looking sheet. It gives employment to seven of our members. William G. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, is foreman, and Robert C. Stone, of No. 6, has charge of four of the latest model Mergs.

The Goodwin Press, which is one of the best-equipped job offices in central New York, has taken from Rochester their Vice-President Allen. Mr. Allen is slated to be our recording secretary, owing to Earl Cranston leaving for Oklahoma last month.

Your humble scribe, as presiding officer of this local, is going to combat the non-attendance at meetings, which appears to be so common in other locals. To do this, I have in mind a plan to have a prominent local labor man speak on labor topics at each meeting, the first speaker being Mike Tracy, secretary of the local labor body.

Members of No. 789 have subscribed very liberally to the second Liberty loan, thus doing their "bit" in these times of strife.

Thanks are due to the Ithaca local for sending President F. E. McCray, C. C. Testerman and George Rundle to aid us at our first meeting.

The following cards were received: Robert C. Stone, William G. Mitchell, Emma Hennessy, Frank Myles Naylor, Elvin P. Miller. Travelers issued: William G. Falconer, Fred M. Thomsen, Earl Cranston.

Business is very good at this writing, with no extra help on hand.

ARTHUR J. COWAN.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

The employes of both local papers received a pleasant surprise on October 27, when Samuel G. McClure, owner of the Telegram, and William F. Maag, manager of the Vindicator, announced that all employes would be granted an increase in wages of $2 per week. The raise given is purely voluntary, no solicitation whatever having been made, the managers of the respective papers stating that they realized the increase in the cost of living had been a rather large one, and having the best interests of their workmen at heart, had concluded to give the voluntary increase. It is hardly necessary to say that the employes are very grateful, as this increase will aid materially in battling old "hi costa."

Within the past month the Telegram has replaced seven of its linotype machines with similar machines of the very latest models. The Telegram now has a battery of eleven machines, and it is possible to utilize each one as an ad machine if the occasion demands. All of the new models are double-deckers and some are equipped with auxiliary magazines. We venture to say the Telegram's composing room is as up to date as any in the state.

The Vindicator is now operating under its new non-distribution system, monotype casters having been installed. Two new late model ad machines have also recently been added to the composing room, replacing older linotypes. The wide-awake management of the "Vindy" never overlooks an opportunity to increase the efficiency of its plant. H. V. Curry is in charge of the monotypes.

Charles F. Etter, of the Vindicator composing room, won a warm spot in the hearts of the children of the west side when he arranged a Hallowe'en celebration for them October 30. Every kid in the neighborhood took part in the parade, and Etter himself, as their leader, looked and acted as frisky as the youngest. Ask any kid on the west side who the greatest man in the world is and the youngsters will reply, "Charley Etter." Prizes were awarded and the kids had a glorious time.

Dr. Frank Wells, head of the health conservation department of the Equitable Life Assurance Company, addressed the employes of the Telegram on November 1 on "The Care of the Human Machine."

James Sullivan, at one time a machinist on the Telegram, was in the city briefly on October 31, among old friends. He is now traveling for an automobile concern.

William Curtis, former Telegram apprentice, now in the regular army, has been transferred from Columbus, Ohio, to Washington, D. C., and is now in the government's X-ray department.

Corp. Paul E. Nixon, of the national army, located at Chillicothe, was in the city on a furlough November 10 and 11. Nixon looks the picture of health and is making good as a soldier.

Thomas Clark, for years make-up man on the Telegram, is now a member of the Vindicator force in a similar capacity. Clarence Shindledecker, of the Vindicator force, is now holding down a "sit" on the Telegram.

Stanley Ault recently drew a traveler and left for Parkersburg, W. Va.

Among the arrivals are A. K. Dietzman, of Louisville, Ky., and Ernest Wilson, of Richmond, Va.

Beil & Evans' new home is rapidly nearing completion, though it will hardly be ready for occupancy before the first of the year.

C. F. McCarty.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Since a letter from this local last appeared there have been quite a number of matters of interest to the printers to come up. Of course, the one of greatest interest, here as well as in all parts of the country, was the flotation of the second Liberty loan. Every member of No. 263 except a very, very few who could not see their way clear to help their country in its time of need, came forward liberally in support of Uncle Sam, and the total amount subscribed individually by Asheville printers was over $2,750. This may seem to be a small sum to some of the larger unions, but it must be remembered that No. 263 has only about forty members.

On one of the committees that solicited subscriptions to this loan were several of our members, and it makes every man proud to have such members in our ranks when they are appointed to such positions by the leading men of the community. James F. Barrett was chairman of one of the committees and H. W. Hogoboom was on his committee. This team came out third, when they were in a field of eleven other teams. Mr. Hogoboom made a splendid showing on his own account, and he and Mr. Barrett sure deserved all the liberal credit that was bestowed upon them by everybody.

One of the sidelights on the campaign was when Paul J. Johnson, of the Times chapel, who was on one of the other committees, went to see E. W. Whitesides, of the Whitesides Printing Company. Mr. Whitesides has carried a typographical union card for lo! these many years, and when approached by Mr. Johnson he immediately said "yes," and told Mr. Johnson to wait a minute until he could get his money. When he returned he carried an old sock which was filled with 100 silver dollars, and together these two veterans went to the bank and had the money converted into Liberty bonds.

Of the Citizen force, every man in the building, from the porter up to the owner and managing editor and editor-in-chief, subscribed liberally. Jack Harville, "devil" extraordinary, also came in for one.

No. 263 has subscribed to two bonds of the new loan.

During the last month James F. Barrett, editor of the Asheville Labor Advocate and orator for the Asheville labor folks, made two addresses, one at Goldsboro, to the Equal Suffrage League, and the other at Tryon, to a fraternal gathering. At Goldsboro Mr. Barrett was sandwiched in between some of the most prominent men of the Old North state and, as usual, he made good with a vengeance.

New arrivals in town include Messrs. Thoren, of Indianapolis, and Rice, both of whom are working on the Times.

Sidney Scott, formerly apprentice on the Times, who recently got his card and then went to Fayetteville, has returned to Asheville and will in the future be on the make-up at the Times.

Glenn H. Williams, better known as the "Missouri River Pirate," or "Kid," arrived in town and is subbing on the Citizen. Irl T. Sell.

PEORIA, ILL.

The new job scale goes into effect on January 1 next, when the Peoria scale will be $21.60.

D. B. Clark has returned from the Union Printers Home. He is a very sick man. Charles O. Kothe, who has been sick for several years, is still ill at his home and not improving any. Glenn L. Taylor, who is now at Fort Dodge, Iowa, was back on a short furlough recently. Bill Mercer has been working on the Journal. Fritz Ritter's son, William, who is also a member of No. 29, is now in France.

Seventy-three members of No. 29 subscribed for Liberty bonds, making a total subscription of $6,650 among the members. This does not include the subscriptions of members working in country towns. Walter S. Bush.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

A committee was elected at the last meeting of the union to formulate a newspaper scale of prices. The present agreement expires March 31, 1918. The members of this committee, who declared themselves in favor of a time scale in all departments, are as follows: C. M. Hecker, ex-officio chairman; F. E. Morris, secretary; A. P. Goodmanson, A. F. Moore, Bernard Cash, W. H. West and Will Doolittle.

The Herald-Republican chapel, which consists of nineteen members, subscribed for $3,300 worth of Liberty bonds of the second issue and $1,800 of the first. Is there a chapel of similar size in the country that can equal this?

An increase in wages up to $2 a week has been granted the job printers of this city, due to the high cost of living.

C. M. Hecker, who entered the race for city commissioner, did not qualify at the primaries.

C. W. Rhodes, for many years a proofreader on the San Francisco Chronicle, is now working on the Tribune in a similar capacity, taking the place made vacant by the resignation of E. V. Viles.

William Collins, copy chopper on the Denver

Post, has been enjoying a six-weeks' vacation in Salt Lake, the guest of his son, grandson and great-grandson. Mr. Collins is an oldtimer at the printing business, having worked on Bill Nye's Laramie (Wyo.) Boomerang before the civil war.

Salt Lake has had more extra ad men and operators this summer and fall than for a number of years. One tourist printer from the east, who dropped off here for a few days, said he found more idle printers in Salt Lake than any place to the east and south. O. WILSON.

BANGOR, ME.

North Adams and 5,000 members—1918.

On Sunday, October 24, a special meeting of Bangor Typographical Union was called, at which the largest attendance was had of any meeting in a number of years. Representative Dallas was present and directed the meeting. Seven new members were obligated. Bangor has made vast progress in the past few weeks. At the present time we have forty-two members, after hanging around the twenty-eight mark for four or five years.

Everybody is working and the holiday rush is about to start.

Two withdrawal cards were taken out the past month, James L. Friend leaving for Hartford, Conn., and Henry J. Thibodeau going to Portland.

Herbert S. Rand, a former member of Bangor Union, has been transferred from the selected draft army to the Twenty-fifth engineers, known as the "Dependable Twenty-fifth, Uncle Sam's Specialists." William M. Dunroe, a member of No. 446, left for Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., November 7, with the Brewer signal corps.

What has become of the Waterville correspondent? JOHN F. O'LEARY.

MADISON, WIS.

All union offices in the city have signed the new scale granting a $2-a-week increase to all printers. Handmen now receive $20 and operators $22, and $2 a week extra for night work. The Wisconsin State Journal gave its printers back pay from October 1, when the old scale expired.

The Capital Times, an afternoon daily to make its initial appearance about December 10, has signed a union contract. About twelve printers will be employed in the new office. Herman C. Strauss, president of the Madison local, has been made foreman.

Fred G. Straber, for many years one of the most active union men in Madison, left for Menasha, Wis., where he is foreman of the Bancka Publishing Company.

Miss Lena Anderson, linotype operator on the Wisconsin State Journal, gave an excellent talk on the "History of the Madison Typographical Union" at its last meeting. Five new applications for membership were received.

Believing that members of the International Union will be interested, I will here give a short summary of Miss Anderson's talk on the history of the Madison Typographical Union.

Madison Typographical Union was first organized in 1856 by an act of the state legislature, and reorganized in 1861. At this time printers were paid on orders from stores that advertised in the papers. It was this abuse that the members of the union had to combat, and it took a hard fight to force employers to pay in cash.

John Lemmon was made president of the organization. The union was active until the outbreak of the civil war, when the officers and most of the members enlisted in the struggle. The Madison local at this time was affiliated with the National Union as No. 25. Meetings were held in a local lumber yard.

In 1875 an unsuccessful attempt was made to reorganize the local. With the establishment of the Madison Times, the printers' union was given an impetus, and another local was formed in 1891. Opposition to the union was very strong, and men with cards had to work under cover.

The Madison Democrat, still operating a scab shop, learning that a number of its members had joined the union, locked out its entire force on January 13, 1893, just as the men were about to strike. Thirty men were thrown out of work.

On September 17, 1900, the union was again organized as No. 106, with a membership of thirty-four. Three years later the local forfeited its charter, owing to a disagreement among its members. In 1912, at the establishment of the Wisconsin State Journal, the union was reorganized, that office employing only union men.

Since then No. 106 has had its ups and downs, and on more than one occasion it was threatened with disruption. But at each critical time some member came to the front and saved the local. At present there is a total membership of forty-one, all in good standing. DAVID WEISS.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The Bryan brothers, Mark and Joe, are now located in Casper, Wyo., where Mark is running a newspaper and speculating in oil stocks, and Joe is working at the trade. F. B. Fletcher, well known on the coast and in the northwest, has gone to Arizona, where he expects to regain his health. E. B. Young, for many years an operator at the state printing office, has gone to southern California for the benefit of his daughter's health. B. D. Morris, at one time located in Sacramento, who has been conducting a weekly newspaper in Arizona for a few years, has returned to the capital city. H. H. Eads, operator on the Morning Union, has purchased a ten-acre fruit ranch near Riverside, and expects to engage in that occupation shortly. Mr. Eads is compelled to leave the printing trade on account of lead poisoning. George Mitchell, International representative, was in Sacramento a few hours the middle of November on his way home from a business trip to Eugene, Ore. Thomas F. Barnes, for many years foreman of the H. S. Crocker Company, has resigned to accept a position as superintendent of a printing plant in Los Angeles. He is succeeded by W. N. McArthur. J. R. Beaubiah, formerly of Syracuse, N. Y., who has been holding a situation on the Morning Union, has left for the southern part of the state. G. H. Godfrey, proofreader, is in Sacramento from the northwest. Mrs. Ida M. Carroll has returned from Portland, Ore., and is again operating a machine at the state office. Big Ben Ferguson, of San Francisco, is subbing in the Bee adroom. Frank E. Fithian and L. A. Bickell, former San Francisco printers, are in Sacramento, working on the Bee. Charles G. Cline, formerly machinist on the San Francisco Bulletin, is now filling a similar position on the Bee. H. C. Malon is now located here, having come down from Eugene, Ore. R. H. Morrell, until a year ago a member of No. 46, is now in the government military service, located at Spartanburg, S. C.

mailers, G. M. Livingston and C. M. Friburg, all that is left of the mailers' union which was organized a year ago. The union was compelled to surrender its charter on account of most of its members entering the military service of the government.

R. F. Pendleton, a member of No. 46, who is located in Colusa, and Miss Agnes B. Horgan, of Woodland, were married in the latter place on October 6.

W. M. L. Rigsbee, of the state office, and Mrs. Violet Mae Unholz were united in marriage in San Francisco in September, and spent their honeymoon in Klamath Falls, Ore.

No. 46 purchased a $200 bond of the second Liberty loan, and the individual members of the union subscribed to the amount of $6,000, making a total for the printers of $6,200.

At the last meeting of No. 46 a newspaper scale was adopted to take the place of the one expiring January 3, 1918. The new scale calls for a rate of $6.25 per day for all journeymen on morning newspapers, and $5.75 per day on evening newspapers. Overtime, time and one-half for the first hour, and double time for each hour or fraction thereof thereafter. The scale has many other good features regarding working conditions.

GREEN BAY, WIS.

The local has raised the scale $1 per week, with another $1 increase the first of December. Every office in the town has been signed up.

This union has co-operated with the other workingmen of the city to establish a municipal coal and wood yard, and plans are now under way through the help of the mayor. This will benefit the non-union people as well as union.

Our charter has been draped in memory of George Call, who was drowned while duck hunting on Green bay, September 9, 1917.

A committee was named at our last meeting to interview the Brown County Fair Association on the matter of getting them to put the label on all printing that is used during fair week. This will tend to have a few shops of DePere come into the union.

Maurice E. Cartier.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

Coincident with the coming of the raw, chilly evenings of fall and winter, the union rooms are finding favor with the boys of No. 85 on the first Saturday night of the month. Particularly was this noticeable at our last meeting, when the hall was quite comfortably filled. And those who came were amply rewarded for their attendance, for occupying a seat of honor on the right of President McCafferty was no less a personage than Representative Drury, of Montreal, whose peregrinations through the eastern section of his jurisdiction landed him in St. John in time to be present at our regular meeting and to spend Sunday in the city of loyalists. Under "good and welfare" Mr. Drury addressed the members in a free and easy style, telling us of the progress of the unions in the western section of his patrol and incidentally remarking that we were rather slow in this neck of the woods. We took the shot kindly, for we realize the truth of the remark. He had been in Fredericton, where matters were running along in the usual groove, and was going on to Moncton, and from there down through Nova Scotia with the intention of stirring up things in the Cape Breton district, as well as to see if something could be done in the Amherst and Truro sections in the matter of organizing a union. He dealt with the matter of a provincial conference, but thought that, owing to the great distance from Fredericton to Halifax, that an organization of that kind would be a rather difficult proposition. However, after hearing considerable label talk, in which Moncton was closely identified, he was going to that city with the hope of arousing sufficient interest among the printers there to warrant the organization of a good union in the railway city. Mr. Drury is a good man on the job. He is no silver-tongued orator, but what he has to say has a kick behind it and there is no mistaking his meaning. He is fruitful of information regarding union matters and spills it freely when questioned on any subject pertaining to the welfare of the craft. No. 85 will always extend the glad hand to Representative Drury when he finds it convenient to pay us a visit.

That the members of No. 85 are interested in the war and have the welfare of its members who are at the front, or going, at heart was evident by the heartiness of their action at the last meeting in passing a substantial money vote to the soldiers' comfort association and ordering the printing of a suitable Christmas greeting to those now overseas.

As mentioned in the last Journal, Frank Magee paid a visit to Toronto recently; but since returning the sound of the keyboard in the Times seems continually to spell "T-o-r-o-n-t-o," and the infatuation has been so great that ere this reaches the eyes of Journal readers Frank will be a resident of the Queen City, pounding a keyboard on the Telegram.

HALIFAX, N. S.

Interest in the monthly meetings remains unabated, the attendance at the November session being the largest for years. A few absent ones said they would have been on deck, too, but are waiting for No. 130 to move into more up-to-date quarters. There was so much business and so many debaters that it was 11:45 before the meeting adjourned. Accessions of new members continue; the roll now stands at eighty-eight. The executive hopes to reach the century mark some day. The interest in the new scale is sustained. While the job men seem content with the proposed increase, the machine men are far from being satisfied, claiming that in many cases they will not get a proportionate advance. It is expected that the operators will make a bid for a substantial increase. The scale committee was empowered to carry on negotiations for a new scale. Business is reported good in all shops.

Jack Mackay, of the Recorder chapel, was stricken with paralysis and is in the hospital. "Steve" Kennedy is slowly improving. All the members are reported at work. Alexander Martineau, monotyper, has gone to the Sydney Post.

There will be about five or six members of No. 130 affected by the first call of the military service act. Among those placed in class A-2 are Billie Welsh, Recorder; Ned O'Callaghan and Ben Wallace, Herald and Mail; A. P. Dakin, Allen's; John McDonald, Ross Print. Vice-President O'Callaghan received a certificate of "perfect physical condition."

Bill Prescott, operator on the Chronicle before going overseas, has been wounded and is now in a hospital. Bill was at one time a member of Saskatoon Union, and also worked on the Halifax Mail. He went over with the heavy siege battery.

Pat Doherty, head ad man on the Mail, who was placed in class B, has registered for service overseas. A number of the boys drew places in the C and E classes.

Charles W. Robertson, of No. 6, proofreader on the New York Times, was in the city last month visiting friends. A. W. Hinsperger, Eleventh battalion, C. F. A., passed through Halifax on his way home to Toronto. He was wounded in the eye. He worked on the Toronto World before going to the front. He tells some thrilling stories of the battles in which the Canadians figured prominently.

Representative Drury was in the city last month on an organization tour. His counsel was sought by the executives of No. 130 on the new scale, and also some tips as to the straightening of the kink that keeps the printers and pressmen from co-operative team work. He addressed the November meeting of the trades and labor council.

The marriage is announced of Mariner Ripley, operator on the Herald, to Miss Addemore, of Halifax.

The labor temple committee is making a strenuous effort to raise $1,000 by January 1. Two new labor unions have been added to the labor council affiliation. A labor temple is urgently needed to properly house all the unions.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.

Three members of No. 304 are now "with the colors"—Roy Kirkpatrick, of the Evening Herald chapel, is a member of Battery A, field artillery, stationed in the east; Jesse Wooten, of the Morning Journal, is with the National army at Camp Kearney, Linda Vista, Cal.; and Ray Wilson, former make-up on the Herald, is in Company A, Twenty-third engineers, stationed at Camp Meade, Md. All three write that they are well satisfied with army life, and are anxiously waiting for a chance to "do their bit" at the front. Their cards are being kept up by the union during their absence.

Members of this union so far have subscribed individually for between $2,500 and $3,000 worth of Liberty bonds.

R. T. Voll, for the past two years with Albright & Anderson, has drawn his card and headed for the Pacific coast.

The scale committee, consisting of Harry Gordon, Ed Torrey and John Mehers, is negotiating with the proprietors for a new contract to take the place of the old one, which expires December 31. The proposed new scale carries a substantial increase all around.

Recent arrivals include E. F. Kennedy, A. D. Pulis, Albert F. Moore (who "re-arrived" after a short stay in Salt Lake City), W. H. Bingaman and A. D. Holcomb.

Myron Bates, who has been working on a permit at the Journal, was obligated at the November meeting.

Fred Kirkpatrick, formerly with the Evening Herald, has quit the printing business and gone to work in the postoffice.

Work has been about as good as usual at this season of the year, with prospects of a slight decrease in the amount of holiday advertising.

Frank H. Lowe.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The members of No. 118 have been liberal contributors to all the activities occasioned by the world war, and the second Liberty bond campaign still found a number ready to subscribe. George Goldsmith, of the Capital chapel, stood at the head of the list, taking a bond for $1,000, for which he paid cash.

The News recently installed a new machine, making eight for that office.

Terrence Cavenaugh was called to Atlantic on November 8 on account of the death of his brother, H. J. Cavenaugh.

Frank L. Garrett, foreman of the Herald at Eldora, visited friends here recently.

Holley & Son have purchased the Richards & Cassel office, which had been closed for several weeks following the death of Mr. Cassel.

W. G. Waters.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Work has been good in all branches, but a slump in the demand for operators occurred during the month. However, many calls from country towns for operators were sent to the secretary.

The outlook for the new job scale is good.

The Christmas number of the Printers' Bulletin, published by President Traylor, is to be a very elaborate affair this year—twenty-four to forty pages—with pictures of the Home, International officers and local celebrities, and, to be up-to-date, the subscription price has been raised. It will appear November 2.

"Make contracts for only one year," is now the opinion of many newspaper printers here.

I. R. Burton, for seven years a linotype operator for the Star, has been appointed representative of the E. W. Blatchford Company, of Chicago, in Kansas City and the southwest. The company manufactures typesetting machine and stereotyping metals.

READING, PA.

"The Home of the Pretzel."

No, the pretzel is not a newspaper or magazine (although the local transit company calls its weekly circular distributed in trolley cars by that name), but a mixture of flour and water, rolled into a knot, dipped in lye and salted. This is then baked to a crisp brown, when it is ready for consumption. To visitors they are a treat and in great demand, and we hope that, next August, when the International Typographical Union meets in Scranton, delegates and visitors will be sure to stop off here and sample some of our pretzels and other good things. No. 86's delegates to International conventions in past years nearly always featured a cut of a pretzel on their cards, and these boosters of the pretzel have now formed the Ex-Delegates' Association of No. 86, to entertain any pilgrims that lay over on their way to Scranton in 1918. (No, we guarantee that Mr. Hoover will not interfere with the pretzel bakers in Reading, but that they will be bigger and crisper when the printers arrive.)

Messrs. Mason, Marcks and Sherman were the successful candidates for delegates to the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union. They attended the quarterly session in Hazleton and at the December meeting of No. 86 gave an excellent report of the progress made by that organization in the five years of its existence. The old officers were unanimously re-elected. Wilkes-Barre will do the honors at the next meeting, in February, 1918.

Joe Gruber arrived in town, after spending almost a year in Peoria, Ill. He expects to depart for Camp Meade, Maryland, in the near future.

Charles Bastain and Samuel Rapp invested in a $2,000 and $1,000 Liberty bond, respectively. Next we expect to hear of them being in the income tax class. This helps to swell the sum total of No. 86's subscriptions considerably.

Joe Benz and Malcolm McCabe, machinist at the Telegram, took out travelers.

The Telegram had its monotype thoroughly overhauled. Lawrence Geiringer is operating the caster at present.

The members of No. 86 shipped a lot of tobacco to Henry J. Weand, our only resident of the Home at Colorado Springs. We know "Mickey" will display his Reading hospitality and share some of it with his cronies.

John Graham, of Wilkes-Barre, who only recently returned from the Home, made an address at the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union meeting, talking from experience. Mr. Graham's speech was very interesting and much appreciated, besides being a big hit.

Our meeting was of such rapid-fire action that election for delegates to the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union was over before late-comers had a chance to get there. The organization committee has two shops in view in one of out-lying towns, where they will concentrate their efforts to unionize them. Quite a few local industries are establishing small printing plants for their own work, in every instance manning them with non-union men. This will also be looked after by the organization committee.

HARRY W. SHERMAN.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

L. K. Wells, who has been correspondent of THE JOURNAL for the last fifteen months, has returned to San Antonio, on account of the bad condition of his wife's health. Mr. Wells made many friends while in Dallas, particularly among the boys in the News adroom, where he was employed, Mr. Wells had the distinction of owning more Liberty bonds than any other printer in Dallas, but W. M. Cornett, of the Times-Herald, is a close second. With the permission of the blue pencil artist at Indianapolis, the undersigned will endeavor to keep Dallas on the map in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

No. 173 now has two representatives with the American forces in France. These are Earl Broaddus and L. L. Daniels, jr. When they joined the colors some months ago they went in almost opposite directions, but the fortunes of war landed them in France together. It is generally believed they reached there the same day the first three Americans killed in battle were buried. J. A. Comstock has a son already there, and J. F. Wright's brother has been there for some time. J. D. Allen, another member of No. 173, is with the navy at Newport, R. I. Jay Loomis is stationed at Camp Bowie (Fort Worth), as is also Charles Hunter, an apprentice member. These boys expect to leave for France in the early spring. W. H. Hall, R. R. Gilham and F. B. Richmond have sons in the service at Camp Bowie. These boys are making good soldiers, and their fathers and friends are proud of them. Herman Sundstrum, of Houston, also has a son at Camp Bowie, who paid the News-Journal office a visit recently. John Tarpley, son of J. R. Tarpley, of the Times-Herald, enlisted last week, and is also at Camp Bowie. Johnny had tried to enlist before, but on account of light weight could not be taken. He put on more flesh or clothes or something, and tried again, with the result that he is now a journeyman soldier.

Secretary Duckworth has a son in the navy, at present stationed at New Orleans. He had seen service before the present war, and soon after the United States took part he again enlisted. On account of his previous experience and knowledge of the work he landed in a pretty good berth.

Some of the boys are saying "How Dry I Am," but it is remarkable what a small number are complaining. Recently Dallas county went bone dry. The nearest place is Fort Worth, and very few will risk a trip over there for even a large bottle. Former Dallas men will likely want to know what effect it had on business, etc. One place 25 x 100 formerly rented for a saloon at $200 per month has since been rented for $400 per month. Another place, across the street from the News-Journal office, was leased at an advance of $75 per month, while several other places have already been rented at the same rent the saloons were paying. It did not even put the bartenders' union out of business, as they recently decided to hold their charter and dispense soft drinks. It was to be expected there would be much hard feeling and bitterness, but for some reason there was but little, and the city is growing as never before.

Your correspondent recently mentioned the opening of an elegant hotel in Dallas, capable of furnishing a hall, rooming and feeding the entire International convention. In doing this he stated the exact facts. But since that time another hotel has been opened that really deserves mention. It is almost as big as the Emerson at Baltimore, and every bit as fine, having the very latest of everything. These, with four other first-class hotels, puts Dallas in a position to elaborately entertain the printers in 1919, and it is about time they were coming this way. A trip to Texas would be a treat long remembered by those who come. Why not give it serious consideration?

No. 173 is going to raise the job scale. W. M. Reilly, Frank White and Charles F. Johnson were elected as a special committee to do the work, and it is not necessary to say that they are attending to their job with neatness and dispatch. When the matter is finally over the scale will doubtless be $5 for eight hours and some other improvements we are in need of. Dallas has never yet failed to raise after the ante was up, and the jobmen need a raise now more than ever before.

By moving almost everything in the building except the main pillars, Foreman Maxwell has succeeded in making sufficient room for the operators to kick and the proofreaders to change their minds. Ever since the birth of the Evening Journal the composing room has been badly crowded, but with the present arrangement of the machines, make-up stones, etc., it seems like the room had been enlarged at least 25 per cent, and there is now room to spare.

Frank Snodgrass, member of the Bradfield chapel, while hunting ducks, was shot accidentally, and so badly injured that he died a few days later. Mr. Snodgrass was one of our younger members, but had worked all over the city, and was quite well known, having a large number of friends who were shocked at his untimely death. He is survived by his widow, mother and father and several brothers and sisters.

F. L. Brunts, operator on the News, had the misfortune some weeks ago of being thrown with an automobile off a bridge to the creek bottom some twenty-five feet below. He suffered a very severe shakeup, but is again up and around. The balance of the party suffered much more, one of the occupants of the car dying about a week after the accident.

Clint Tullis has about recovered from his recent encounter with the shock brigade and trench stormers at Colorado Springs. When Clint left Dallas he was certain he could hold one trench alone, but after looking at the snow on the mountains for a week he came to the conclusion it would take much reinforcement to make any impression on the breastworks of the opposition.

Harvey Stephenson is rejoicing over the arrival of an additional exemption certificate, the same being in the form of a beautiful daughter. "Grandfather Steve" "ain't sayin' nuthin'," but we all know he is tickled to death. L. L. DANIELS.

At the last meeting of No. 173 the job scale committee made its report and was granted further time. The work of the committee is varied and will require considerable time to straighten things out in this city. The minimum wage scale for job printers has been fixed at $30 per week. Under existing circumstances this is barely a living wage for those working at the business.

It was decided to pay 10 cents per capita for 100 weeks toward the labor temple debt.

Floyd Brunts, member of No. 173, and one of the most popular machine operators, had the misfortune recently to meet with a bad accident while returning in his big Hudson car from Fort Worth, one of the occupants being killed and Mr. Brunts being considerably bruised, but not seriously injured.

The following cards were received during the month: C. C. Travis, E. F. Dumon, E. G. White, C. W. Cunningham, J. T. Pryor, R. E. Fischer, Arch M. Culmore, K. J. Dollarhite. Cards issued: E. W. Comstock, E. T. Neville, F. O. Dailey, C. A. Shutt, Arch M. Culmore, K. J. Dollarhite, J. E. Doyle, R. E. Fischer, J. B. Howard, C. C. Travis.

C. A. Shutt, who has been a member of the News-Journal chapel for several years, has drawn his card and expects to go into business for himself as soon as he can find a location.

Frank Snodgrass, a linotype operator on the Times-Herald, died during the month from injuries received from an accidental discharge of his shotgun while hunting ducks at Bachman's reservoir. The deceased was 24 years old and married. Mr. Snodgrass was formerly of Nashville, Tenn., where his parents still reside. He was laid to rest under the auspices of the union.

The Mergenthaler Linotype Company was well represented at the Dallas state fair during the month of October by Fred Bott, manager of the New Orleans agency; Mr. Bewarder, special representative, and Messrs. "Doc" Young, Perry, Von Tiercks, Bernard and Ira Bacon, the latter being the west Texas and New Mexico representative, who formerly was connected with the Albuquerque (N. M.) Journal. The above company exhibited a model 14, 16 and an "L." They report as being well pleased with the business that the exhibits brought them, they having sold machines to the following concerns: Model 14 to Bradfield Bros., Dallas, Texas; model 14 to the Courier-Times, Longview, Texas; model 14 to the Van Alstyne (Texas) Leader; model "L" to the Glenrose (Texas) Reporter, and a model 5 was shipped to La Grange, Texas.

The Intertype Corporation exhibition at the state fair consisted of a model C, with the A and B units, and a side auxiliary magazine, which can be attached without drilling a hole or removing a bolt. The latter is a new invention attached to this machine. This is the first time this machine has been on exhibition in this territory. C. D. Montgomery, manager of the New Orleans agency, spent some time here during the exhibit. Messrs. Charles Berryman, Charles Breckon, Arch Culmore, G. W. Greer, C. M. Venney and Eugene ("Carrie") Nation spent some time about the exhibit. Mr. Breckon erected the exhibit and Mr. Nation made his debut as a demonstrator. The above concern reports as being well pleased with the results of the exhibit.

George ("Intertype") Bading's presence was missed this year at the state fair, but we are informed he is "somewhere in Mississippi" talking intertype.

While in San Marcos during the past month we had the pleasure of meeting Claude V. Lancaster, who for many years was connected with the San Antonio Express and at one time president of No. 172. He is now in business for himself and is well pleased with the change.

With this letter will close our correspondence from Dallas, having found it necessary, on account of health, to return to San Antonio, where the climate is better. In this connection we want to say that the twenty months spent with the boys in Dallas were among the most pleasant of our life. A more congenial lot, from President Bading on down, were never banded together, and we can truthfully say that any one that connects himself with that great metropolitan newspaper, the Dallas News, and does what any member of the union should do, will be treated equal or better than in any place in the country. L. K. WELLS.

STREATOR, ILL.

Patriotic quotations of bards and sages peal and thunder down the ages, rekindling the flames of liberty, in this great land of brave and free; but no spectacular, inspired sage of this present day and age can thrill and tickle me like "Chubby," my baby, not two years old, who, in spite of his mother's pretended frown, stands erect, at attention, rigid, bold, and shouts "Hell with the kaiser," does this little clown—without being prompted and without being told.

Considerable price-regulating discussion developed at the central body meeting recently, which resulted in the appointment of a committee whose duty it will be to co-operate with those who are contemplating or may contemplate the formation of a patriotic consumers' league. "Huns within our gates" are a national danger indeed, but the greatest menace to our nation today is the unpatriotic citizen who dishonestly boosts prices and robs the people. A consumers' league that will aid our government in its efforts to reduce prices is necessary here, and one formed along the lines discussed and under the patriotic and respectable auspices contemplated would be a very desirable organization. In order to win the war the patriotism of our people must be preserved, and the best way to preserve that patriotism is to satisfy our people, and the only way to satisfy our people is to keep the price of living necessities within their reach. The writer is one of those who believe that if men can not buy the necessities of life because of dishonest prices and yet must have them, that they will be driven to strikes, to violence, to desperation, and will increase the ranks of criminals by the addition of many who would have remained peaceable and square had prices been maintained on an honest basis. This being an accepted theory by almost all of the thoughtful people of our nation, it becomes our duty as citizens of this, the largest and oldest republic in the world, to create the machinery necessary to develop a spirit of national consciousness that will press home upon food dealers and speculators, big and little, the need for square dealing in their now recognized national responsibility of distributing living necessities at honest prices. Three printers were appointed on this committee, all having expressed themselves as willing to serve, in the belief that the development of local machinery to aid the government in its effort to regulate prices is something that must take place as sure as the war continues. No wise man, be he rich or poor, will contend against a development that is inevitable. Rather, he will seek, to the limit of his ability, to get into line and co-operate with it—to the end that this swinging stride toward democracy may not become exhausted and tumble into reaction, but that it may go thundering on to that freedom which must result in a wider justice and a closer approach to that great American, aye, almost universal ideal of human brotherhood.

Among the important social events in the local labor movement will be a get-together meeting of Streator printers which will be called as a special tribute to George P. Lischer, president of the Illinois Typographical Union. The date on which this meeting will occur can not be decided upon until such time as the committee can get in touch with President Lischer, but it will probably be held directly after Thanksgiving. R. G. SODERSTROM.

HARRISBURG, ILL.

Roy L. Seright, formerly publisher of the Louisville Republican, is the new managing editor of the Daily Register. J. J. Pickett, founder of the paper, sold out his interests here September 1 and is now in Deming, N. M., in charge of a weekly paper. J. E. Mulkey, associate with Mr. Pickett here and president of our local, is now located in St. Louis. Gustav Oehm, who succeeded Mr. Pickett as managing editor, resigned after two weeks' work on the job to accept a position with the United Press people. He is stationed in the Chicago office. Mr. Seright is starting off on the right foot and has made application to become a member of No. 562. He is a splendid printer, but has always worked in unorganized towns. Members of the Register chapel have already observed that his heart is in the right place.

The last meeting of our union resulted in more stringent action regarding the monthly cards. Some of the members have caused Secretary Charley Richardson too much exercise running after the dues. To do away with this and to compel every member to have his working card before he shucks his coat following our monthly meetings, Henry Davenport was elected chairman of the Chronicle chapel and Roy Dixon presides over the Register bunch. Mr. Richardson is at the Steege jobshop and does his own collecting. The new plan is working fine.

Work was never better than it is at the present time in Harrisburg, and, in fact, all neighboring southern Illinois towns. The Register is two men short, one vacancy occurring last month when the second-shift machine man, Walter Rose, died.

Edward S. Vance, an old tourist, died in the Harrisburg sanatorium October 20. He dropped in here on his semi-annual visit, worked a week on the Register and was stricken sick. The boys of our local did the right thing. Several operations were necessary, as he was afflicted with a bladder trouble. We called a meeting, slapped on a special assessment, secured a nurse, physician, and did everything in our power for the old man. We took the matter up with his relatives in Little Rock, Ark., but they were unable to help him any. He died and was given one of the best funerals ever held here. We enlisted other union men to attend and he was laid away in an impressive manner.

Following this, Walter Rose was stricken and, he having a large family, we were again called into service. Again did we do what any printer would do—hurried to his home and put needed things therein. He died November 9 and his body was shipped to Mount Vernon, Ill., for burial. Both these printers had long been in the service and valued their trade and their cards above everything else.

The following news item appeared in the Harrisburg Daily Register under date of Saturday, October 27, 1917, and bears on the death of Ed S. Vance:

There is no better union in America than the International Typographical Union, composed of printers and linotype operators. It is one of the oldest unions in existence, having been organized in 1851.

Readers of the Daily Register are familiar with the incidents connected with the illness and death of Edward S. Vance, an old tourist printer, who happened into Harrisburg a few months ago and was stricken sick here. He was without money and friends. He was taken charge of by the small group of union printers here, members of No. 562, removed to the Harrisburg sanatorium, where everything needed was rendered him—a surgeon, several operations, nurse, medicines, flowers and anything that could be done for the old man was quickly rendered.

The Harrisburg local is small in membership, but that loyalty to unionism characteristic in the breast of every union printer exerted itself and the boys stayed with the old man until he died. He was given a funeral of which any man could well be proud. A beautiful floral wreath, with the figures "30" embossed, marked the expensive casket. He was laid to rest tenderly and with much respect. The printers left the grave of this old man with the knowledge that they had rendered every possible effort in his behalf.

Secretary Charles Richardson mailed to Secretary-Treasurer Hays at Indianapolis, Ind., the death certificate, the same leaving Harrisburg Tuesday morning. The same could not possibly have reached Mr. Hays before Wednesday morning. Before 10 o'clock Thursday morning, Mr. Richardson had received a draft for $400, in payment of the Vance death claim. That's the way the International Typographical Union does business.

The following editorial appeared in the Daily Register Saturday, November 3, 1917, with reference to the union's action in behalf of the family of Walter Rose:

The printers' union has always been recognized as one of the strongest, if not the strongest. And the Harrisburg local has always been recognized as one of the unions that always works in harmony and supports the principles for which unionism stands. Twice within the last month they have been called upon to extend aid to a worthy brother, and although the local is not strong in membership they have assumed the financial obligations as though they had a membership of a thousand. At their meeting Friday night they voted to aid a member who is on the sick list and the aid is to continue as long as needed. It will cost each member a neat sum from his pay—but that is what makes the act the more laudable.

Will H. Parish, a leading business man of this city, has recently returned home from Colorado Springs, Colo., where he and his family had been on a pleasure trip. While there he and his family visited the Union Printers Home. He has been profuse in his praise of that institution since returning home and says it is one of the grandest institutions in this country. MARK SMITH.

ATLANTA, GA.

Charles P. Bedingfield has gone to his reward. At the November meeting of Atlanta Union resolutions on his recent death were read, and the members stood at the sound of the gavel in reverence to their departed brother. Charles Bedingfield's absolute devotion to his invalid wife through the many years of her illness was characteristic of the man. His life on this earth was spent doing good for others; always with a smile and apparently in a good humor, he would greet his fellow workers and extend to them what assistance and encouragement he could. He grew into old age reflecting the same courageous Christian spirit that had identified him in his young manhood. The faithful performance of his daily tasks, the regularity and consistency of his worship to God, gave Charles Bedingfield an identity unsurpassed in any community. Mr. Bedingfield was a steward of the Trinity Methodist church for several years prior to his death. He had served the union in various capacities and was a member of the board of trustees. He was a delegate to the Baltimore convention in 1916. Atlanta Typographical Union attended the funeral in a body.

Fred J. Terry was elected trustee to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Bedingfield.

President Ed L. Sutton has been drafted out of the printshop, though not out of the printing business. He has been chosen by the school board as instructor in the art of printing in the boys' high school department of the state school of technology. This is a new branch instituted by the school and is for the purpose of giving the young men students a rudimentary knowledge of the printing industry. Ed Sutton has ably filled every office in the gift of the union during his thirty years of active membership; always earnestly and unremittingly. The recent financial recovery of No. 48 is due to the reconstructive work of President Sutton and his committees. Mr. Sutton is a college man and is otherwise well qualified to fill the position given him. He is a member of the Southern Greek letter societies and was a delegate to San Francisco in 1915 at a convention of these college alumni fraternities.

J. L. ("Cos") Rodier, who has been editorial writer for the Journal of Labor for the past four years, has resigned that position, to the general regret of organized labor of Atlanta. Mr. Rodier's various campaigns in the Journal of Labor, backed up by Jerome Jones and the powerful influence of the paper, have had great and lasting results. The fight waged by Messrs. Jones and Rodier for cheaper coal had the effect of halting a buying panic in June at exorbitant prices, and Mr. Rodier's visit to Washington to protest against the extortion of the local dealers brought about quick and effective action which has materially lowered prices. For several months Mr. Rodier fought for the labeling of each loaf of bread with its proper weight, in the course of which he prepared an ordinance to that effect which was introduced in council but defeated. It is regarded here as a victory for the old man nevertheless, as the national government has made it obligatory to label bread with its weight, using the same arguments set forth in the Journal of Labor by Mr. Rodier, who upon defeat of his ordinance by city council took the matter up with authorities in Washington.

Howard Sutton, son of President Sutton, and Johnnie Wieffer, both members of No. 48, have landed safely in France. They are members of the Seventeenth railway engineers' corps. They were members of the Journal chapel and were the first to volunteer.

Louis H. Cleveland, of the Journal chapel, is stationed at Fort Screven, he having enlisted in the quartermasters' corps.

H. R. Bonney, Willie Smith and George Knabe, jr., of the Hearst Georgian-American chapel, are volunteers in the Seventeenth regulars and are on their way to France.

J. H. Abercrombie volunteered in Company H, Georgia field artillery, but owing to an operation is detained at the hospital at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta, while his comrades have proceeded to Camp Harris, at Macon.

Earle E. Griggs, former vice-president of No. 48, was one of the four-minute bond "boosters" for the second Liberty loan, speaking in the various movie theaters nightly. Mr. Griggs, who is a fluent and convincing speaker, has been engaged by the Keith circuit to boost the tobacco fund for the soldiers at the Lyric theater here, speaking three times a week.

W. G. Gredig, who severed his connection with the Atlanta Constitution about four years ago to take charge of a daily in Athens, Ga., has returned to Atlanta and is now foreman of the Constitution, replacing C. R. Bruce, who has taken a position with the Lanston Monotype Company.

WALKER T. LEE.

PHŒNIX, ARIZ.

The November meeting of No. 352 was well attended and proved lively as well as lengthy. Most members of the International are familiar with the position of Phœnix in the matter of caring for those in poor health. With the sick fund depleted there was immediate need of additional aid in worthy cases. All who have resided here for any length of time know the spirit of generosity that prevails, and it was a question only as to the best method of securing relief. Alan Hoge was obligated a two-thirds member and applications for full membership were received from Howard A. Miller and W. R. Allison. Nominations for officers of the local to serve the coming year were made and will be voted on at the December meeting.

On complaint of Sheriff Armer, of Gila County, Secretary C. E. Tracy, editor of the Arizona Labor Journal, was arrested on a charge of criminal libel. Bail in the sum of $1,000 was promptly furnished and trial will be had some time this month. The action is an outgrowth of the labor trouble in the copper district and only one of the many methods of attack. Mr. Tracy has the united support of all organizations in combating the attempt to throttle their organ.

The Gazette chapel, through Foreman Hinds, presented a request for an increase in pay to meet the advance in all commodities and was rewarded promptly with 50 cents a shift. The Republican followed, including those in the job department, and there is reason to believe all other shops will do the same.

Those who missed hearing the remarkable sermon on labor conditions in this state, delivered by the Rev. William Scarlett, dean of the Episcopal Church in Arizona, were pleased to read a good report furnished the Labor Journal by a member of the typographical union. Using as a subject, "Making the World Safe for Democracy in Arizona," the minister spoke on the situation in a manner showing he had made careful, personal and impartial investigation, and was in a position to defend his statements. He declared the democracy for which America is fighting abroad is the antithesis of that form of democracy being practiced in this state, and made a strong plea for encouragement and justice for organized labor.

C. A. King, many years a continuous member of this local, an expert machinist-operator, and well liked by every one, has made application to enter the Union Printers Home. J. Q. Hern, another true-blue, has been compelled to forsake the keyboard on account of poor health, and at this time is improving somewhat. Another heir has appeared to share in the dividends of the G. G. Morgan Printing Company. Harvey P. Greene, at one time president of No. 352 and later publisher of a paper at Patagonia, arrived via El Paso from Florida and will spend the winter here. F. J. Moyer, machinist at the Republican, is operating the new monotype caster and turning out some dandy faces in display type. The boys in the ad alley say he's liberal with "sorts," and if anybody doubts his knowledge as to which letters in the English language are used most frequently they have only to consult the upper portion of the cap case. The local now pays dues for three members who joined the colors. Several who did not purchase bonds the first time got in on the second Liberty loan. Ray McDonald is a mineralogist as well as an operator, being in charge of the Yavapai mineral exhibit at the state fair.

Business has improved with cooler weather and everybody is working, including a number of newcomers. Recent arrivals are E. G. Coan and Frank Kierman. Departures: F. K. Strothers, G. C. Isaacs and G. A. Corbus. W. S. Swenson.

TACOMA, WASH.

"Tacoma—the home of Uncle Sam's newest and largest cantonment—Camp Lewis, 70,000 acres."

Washington, the Evergreen state, bearing the name of our first and most beloved president, the state of big trees, beautiful mountains, lakes and rivers, and the home of many a vanishing Indian tribe, on November 11, 1889, just twenty-eight years ago, left its territorial stage and was admitted to the union, placing the forty-second star in Old Glory.

Tacoma Typographical Union No. 170 turned down all proposed amendments to the laws of the International Typographical Union with the exception of plan A of the fourth proposition, which leaves this local to keep in good standing those of its members who engage in the world war, in a manner most acceptable to the membership, should they so decide. It would seem that the least we could do for them would be to keep their dues paid while they make sacrifices unrealized by most of us.

Owing to resignations on various committees, the following were duly elected or appointed at the last regular meeting: Delegate to the allied printing trades council, W. W. Halbert; laws revision committee, Messrs. Hagen, Taylor, Bonney and Noonan; scale committee, Messrs. Travaglio and Browne; apprentice committee, Messrs. Derby, Morse and Wheeler.

It is encouraging to learn that our membership is on the increase, at present standing at 151, the largest number on our records for some time. Work continues good, with plenty of subs to care for it. Numerous travelers come and go during the course of each month, picking up an occasional day, or are directed to places calling for help.

Owing to ill health, President Jennings has handed in his resignation, asking that it be acted upon at once, but as it was received at an adjourned meeting, it was decided to lay it over until the next regular meeting. President Jennings has a difficult position to fill; however, he has handled the various situations in a capable manner and the members dislike to accept his resignation after serving so short a term.

Numerous situations have been given out on the Tribune of late. Those in line for the "sits" were Miss Walsh, F. C. Gibson, H. S. Hagen and C. T. Moore, three of which were given out in one day. The sublist continues to remain at normal with all working.

N. R. Meserly, formerly foreman of the Tacoma Times, is again in the city and working on the same paper, this time in the capacity of superintendent.

R. O. Clark, formerly of Vancouver, and B. E. West, of Kent, were given the obligation at the October meeting. William H. Spencer, monotype operator, now located in Fresno, Cal., was elected to membership, he being the first monotype operator to come before this local.

Paul Findeison, machinist-operator of the Bell Press, is the latest of No. 170's members to join the ranks of those who are engaged in the noble work of keeping the wolf from John D.'s door, having recently purchased a new Overland car.

During the campaign for the second Liberty loan bonds, Tacoma's four-minute men were kept busy with their little speeches at the various places of amusement. Charles Perry Taylor, of No. 170, was a member in the ranks. Tacoma again oversubscribed this loan.

While work was rather quiet, John Johnson made a trip to the Yakima valley and assisted in harvesting the peach crop. He was picking from a ladder which was of frail construction, when it gave way and precipitated him to the ground, with the result that two ribs were fractured.

W. E. Noonan, who has been on the sick list recently, is now much improved. Walter Ross has been holding down his situation during his illness.

Winston Williams has been registered as an apprentice and is now employed at the Quality Press, one of the shops which was recently put on No. 170's list. This makes a total of ten apprentices working in union shops in Tacoma.

The arbitration board which has been working on the street railway men's case for several weeks, due to the strike in Tacoma and Seattle, has rendered a decision granting the men 4 cents an hour increase, to date from August 1, 1917. While this is a small amount, the men can feel that they have laid the foundation for future work—the right to organize—which was well worth fighting for.

Fay Demeree, formerly of the News force, now on the U. S. S. Rambler, was generously remembered by the members of the News chapel recently in the form of a large package containing cigars, cigarettes, tobacco and chewing gum. Each member also wrote him a letter, which certainly ought to bring him back to the days he spent as a "devil" on the News. The members of the Ledger chapel are not forgetting George Bullion, apprentice, who gave up his trade in order that he might enlist. They have contributed generously and are sending the money to George in order that he may purchase that which appeals most strongly to him. During the trouble in Mexico, George did his "bit" on the border. L. G. WHEELER.

SHARON, PA.

Sharon, the Convention City, January 13, 1918.

With the convention of the Western Pennsylvania Typographical Union Conference less than a month away, this will be our last opportunity, through THE JOURNAL, to urge our sister unions to be represented. This convention will be one of the most important of the conference, as many new and important matters will come up for discussion. It may not be generally known, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that there are enough non-union printers and operators employed in the smaller towns of western Pennsylvania to fill every union position in the organized towns. This is only one of the items the conference has been working on, but it is an important one, when one considers what could happen unless some action is taken to unionize these small towns. The writer just recently received a letter from a printer in Mercer, an unorganized town, asking for an application blank, stating it was his desire to be a union man, even though working in an unorganized town. This only goes to show that the sentiment of the printers of the small towns is for unionism, and with but a little urging there is no doubt but that the majority could be brought within the fold. While the convention will be the main feature, there will also be the social side, and, with Elmo Childs as chairman of the entertainment committee, every one can rest assured of a good time. "We Need You; You Need Us"—so come to the City of Happiness on January 13, 1918.

Short of breath and with his pockets full of cigars, Merrill Alderman, assistant make-up on the Telegraph, came rushing into the office recently, an hour late, but when he started handing out the cigars and proudly exclaimed it was a new baby girl—and the first, too—the boys were enlightened as to the haste and cigars.

Harry Cross, operator at the Farrell News, pulled a "scoop" on the boys about two weeks ago by getting married without their consent. "Slim" was forgiven when he passed the "Girards" around. Mr. and Mrs. Cross have been guests of honor at several parties, which also served as a farewell to Mr. Cross, who left for training camp, having been drafted from this district.

For the first time in years the Typos are represented in the City Bowling League, and at the present time tie for first place. The Typos have set a pace that will be hard to overcome, and it is the general opinion among the boys that they will be in first place when the season ends. Up to date the Typos have won fourteen and lost four, with a percentage of .778. Following is the individual average of the team:

	G.	H. G.	T. P.	Ave.
Vanderslice	12	198	1,679	139
Hart	8	173	1,116	139
Bradley	12	157	1,618	134
Steines	12	148	1,552	129
Lavine	9	159	1,112	123

Will T. Baines, who for a number of years has been manager of the Telegraph, has resigned and gone into the real estate business. Stephen Dorgan, of Mount Vernon, Ohio, succeeds Mr. Baines.

It can be truthfully said that if any one ever believed in efficiency and production, it is William Organ, manager of the Daily Herald, and also a printer of merit himself. In the job department Mr. Organ has already installed new motors of the latest type, new power cutter, and is putting in a new press capable of printing eight pages at one impression with an automatic feeder attached, a new job press with feeder, besides other improvements. This department of the Herald has the contract of printing 110,000 P. H. C. Gazettes each month.

A. C. Dickinson, of the Telegraph, has purchased a new model 19 linotype, replacing an old machine that the boys had named "Dynamite," which still gives them a battery of five machines. Many other improvements are also contemplated in the office of this live daily.

Thomas Westlund, who has been an operator on the News at Farrell for some time, has resigned and will rest up for a while before taking another position. Ernest Bohn has accepted the position as machinist-operator on the Herald.

M. C. Connor has moved his job department from Vine street to State street, where he now occupies the entire building, the job end being on the second floor and an up-to-date stationery store on the first floor. Mr. Connor now has one of the best concerns in the valley, and is a thorough union man.

The meetings of No. 351 are not as well attended at they should be, and it is the opinion of the writer that if more suitable meeting quarters could be secured the attendance would increase.

Work is good and every one working full time, but at present there are no vacancies.

CLOUD C. RUTTER.

NEWARK, OHIO.

Recent events in the political arena give rise to the belief that the members of No. 69 are very much alive and for the next two years, at least, will have a word or two in the government of the city and township. That stalwart union printer, Simeon O. Riggs, was elected councilman in the Fifth ward by a handsome majority. The newly-elected mayor has appointed Col. Lee S. Pemberton, well known throughout the south, director of public safety. The latter, in turn, appointed as his secretary John S. Gilcrest, foreman of the American Tribune composing room. The writer was elected township treasurer.

A labor paper, backed by the trades and labor assembly, is an assured fact. The central body guarantees the publisher 1,000 subscriptions at $1 per year. The paper, which will be issued weekly, will make its initial bow Thanksgiving week. Julius Juch, a member of this union, who discontinued the German Express a short time ago, will be the publisher. Edward Franklin, another member of No. 69, is soliciting ads for the new paper. The central body will control the policy of the new paper, which is expected to be a successful venture.

Since the organization of a pressmen's union here a short time ago there has been much talk regarding the allied label, the pressmen being exceedingly busy in this respect, while the printers do not take favorably to the plan. The matter is at present in the hands of the local executive committee.

The apprentice proposition is also causing considerable talk lately, the one-man shop proprietors being more or less disturbed over the matter.

Two propositions for the remitting of part of the dues for attendance at union meetings have been voted down by the membership. Those who are active in the matter say they will keep at it until they are successful.

No. 69 has two members in the government service at present, both volunteers. George Morrison and Edgar Albright are at present stationed at Camp Sheridan in the artillery service. Andrew Callahan, an apprentice, is with the Rainbow artillery division which recently landed in France.

The members have contributed liberally to the Red Cross and Liberty bond calls.

JAMES MCGOUGH.

WATERBURY, CONN.

Secretary-Treasurer Patrick J. Lynch has sprung a great surprise on his many friends by the announcement of his marriage to Miss Anna Thompson, of Staten Island, N. Y. After a wedding trip to Old Point Comfort, Washington and other points Mr. Lynch and his bride have located in Waterbury, where they are receiving the congratulations of their many friends.

At this time we have to record the death of John Phelan, of the Democrat chapel, a young man well known throughout the east.

During the quarter ending October 31 there was paid by Waterbury Typographical Union $95 in local sick benefits, also one $400 International Typographical Union mortuary benefit and $60 from the pension fund; and despite these fraternal features and facts we have members who persistently keep behind in their dues, thereby barring themselves from the privileges and protection of these funds.

The second Liberty loan was even more popular than the first among our members, the American chapel alone subscribing to $700 worth of bonds and the union $100.

Gus Heyer, of the Republican, has enlisted and been sent to Fort Slocum. Harold Laird has returned from Camp Devens and resumed his position on the Republican, an injury to his feet causing his discharge from the service.

F. S. GORHAM.

BOSTON, MASS.

At the October meeting of the union applications for the old age pension were read and approved from William H. Andrew, Allen W. Hovey and John McGoogan, all well-known former Journal employes. International Representative Bert G. Brady made a lengthy report for the organization committee, which was enthusiastically received, and by vote of the union Mr. Brady was given a rising vote of thanks for his work in Boston. Sylvester J. McBride reported in detail for the delegates to the Massachusetts State Branch American Federation of Labor, and George Gray reported for the trustees. Also five applications for membership were received and referred to the inquiry committee.

Hats off to the president of the United States, to Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, to Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, to the heads of the army and navy; and don't forget to take your hats off and let your voices sound in praises for the men who serve the guns in the navy and the soldiers who do or die in the trenches or on the firing line in France; also hats off to the Red Cross nurses and the sisters of charity who are doing so much good in ministering to the wants of the soldiers who are wounded. God bless and help them all!

John F. Murphy, secretary-treasurer of New England Typographical Union, is to be complimented on his circular of November 1 to the officers and members of that branch of the organization. The executive board's report to the Manchester convention called attention to the information that had been gathered relative to the number of non-members in New England, and also gave the number of members and non-members in each local jurisdiction, which showed there are 788 non-union printers in New England; and it is safe to assume that at least 400 of them are competent printers. The names and addresses of over 600 non-union printers have been secured and local secretaries are being urged to call the attention of these non-members to the increased registration fees which are going into effect on January 1, 1918, and are as follows: Less than twenty-five years at next birthday, $3; more than twenty-five years and less than thirty-five years, $5; more than thirty-five years and less than forty-five years, $10; forty-five years and over, $20. This is A-1 organization work and is bound to bring good results.

Earle Gould, of the Advertiser-Record, enlisted in the United States army, Company A, Twenty-ninth engineers, in October, and the chapel presented him with a bag containing a soldier's complete outfit. Mr. Gould states that he "has met union printers from all over the country at Ayer, which makes him feel very much at home." On the resignation of Edward A. Boyle from the night foremanship, just as the edition had gone to press, time was called and a complimentary set of resolutions were presented to him, showing the good will of the men who worked with him. R. Kenneth McLean, formerly on the day side, succeeded Edward A. Boyle as night foreman. Clement N. Gardner, of the make-up force, after being drafted and sent to Camp Devens, Ayer, said "he could not reach the trenches too soon." George H. Fullerton is back on the machines. Clarence L. Smith enlisted in the regular army, November 6.

Members of the Boston Club of Printing House Craftsmen, at its meeting Thursday evening, November 8, were fortunate to have with them Corporal Auger, of the British army, who narrated his experiences at the front and held his hearers spellbound in a one-hour-and-a-half talk on the many phases of fighting at the front. Among the large attendance were Fred Zeigler, of the municipal printing plant; Herbert Steed, of the Rapid Service Press; Ed May, superintendent of the Barta Press; Frank Atchinson, of Smith & Porter, and Secretary John O. Battis, of Boston Typographical Union No. 13. The success of the whole affair was due to the efforts of George A. Rhoades, president; Fred A. William, secretary of the club, and A. A. Stewart, teacher of printing at the Wentworth Institute.

Joseph Fitzgerald, former president of the Pittsfield Typographical Union and secretary of the allied trades council there, is a great believer in persistency. His application was twice rejected in the army on account of his eyes, and so eager was he to join that he finally wrote to the adjutant-general and has been accepted in the Twenty-fifth United States engineers as a printer.

William H. ("Dad") Weeks died suddenly on Saturday, November 10, at his home in Dorchester. He was born in Cooperstown, N. Y., May 22, 1842, and was an International pensioner. After learning the printing business he founded the Cobleskill Index, which celebrated its fiftieth anniversary only a short time ago. He came to Boston thirty years ago and was employed for a number of years on the Boston Journal, Boston Post, Boston directory and Boston Herald. He leaves a widow, three daughters and three sons.

Lawrence E. Devlin, of the Cotton and Wool Reporter, was presented with a wrist watch by the chapel on his enlistment in the navy. The presentation was made by Joseph Cogan, the well-known printer-baritone, who, with Patrick Foley and others, spent a very pleasant evening at Mr. Devlin's home with musical, vocal and oratorical numbers in abundance, including the following appropriate verses written by one of his shopmates:

WHEN LARRY GOES OVER THE TOP.

A call has come from Uncle Sam—for boys both stanch and true,
A call that may take you,
Before this war is through.
Our boys are all a-swarming, at the front to take their place,
Just one desire—to set the Yankee pace.
Our Larry he has answered, for Germans he has no fear,
So up now, boys, and we'll give him a cheer.

As he leaves us to fight, for a cause that is right,
Larry, we bid you good-by,
For he leaves us tonight, oh, what a beautiful sight,
Without a tear or sigh.
And I'll wager my hat—'tis a good one at that,
That Larry, the kaiser sure will get.
And we're happy at home, though our thoughts they may roam,
For Larry is off to fight.

Gilbert M. Smith, of the Banker and Tradesman, died Friday, November 16. He was well known as a stanch union man all his life and was chairman of the church committee of No. 13 for several years. He had been in poor health for several months and died of a complication of diseases. He was a devout member of the Union Square Baptist church, where his funeral services were held, Sunday, November 18.

Bert G. Brady, International representative, left Boston early in November and went to Philadelphia, where he will assist the officers of Philadelphia Union on special organization work. He expects to be absent a couple of months or more.

Willard Small, publisher of the Union Label Bulletin of Newark, N. J., was in Boston in October renewing old acquaintances.

Robert Woodburn, who has been chairman at the Plimpton Press for two years, has taken a position at J. J. Little's in New York, and is succeeded by Thomas Kelley.

Sylvester J. McBride, of the American chapel, was a candidate for lieutenant-governor on the socialist ticket in the November election this year.

Charles H. Weinhold, sick for several years, died Tuesday, November 13. He was 44 years of age, learned his trade in Lawrence, came to the Boston Globe about eleven years ago, when he deposited his card. He was a resident of the Home in 1914 and came back much improved in health. He had an amiable disposition, was highly respected, and was past chancellor commander of Horace Greeley (daylight lodge) Knights of Pythias. He leaves a widow and an aged mother. His funeral took place Friday, November 16, and his remains were interred in the family lot at Lawrence. The Globe relief association was represented by P. B. McHugh and Charles A. Ramsden, and M. A. Knock, E. B. Edgerton, M. R. Stubbs and W. C. Trump were present from Horace Greeley Lodge.

Having met Newton D. Baker, secretary of war, in Cleveland some years ago, I took the liberty of writing to him a short message to our gallant boys who are fighting in the army and navy for my December letter, and the following is his courteous reply:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON,
November 12, 1917.

DEAR MR. STEPHENSON—I thank you for your note of November 10 and am happy to send through you a message to the members of the International Typographical Union who are serving in our army.

The army which we are assembling to be our champion and representative in the fields where liberty is being fought for is made up of men of all occupations and professions, and is truly representative of the intense industrial life of our great nation. The presence in it of craftsmen who are members of the typographical union is another evidence of the completeness with which our whole life is reflected in this aggregate, and I am happy through you to send to all of our soldiers who are members of the typographical union a message of greeting and of good cheer. The cause in which they are engaged is worthy of the best that men can do who love liberty and justice.

Cordially yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Through the efforts of Representative Bert G. Brady and President E. M. Martin, a voluntary increase of $1 per week to book and job printers, monotype and linotype operators, was granted by all the typothetæ offices and offices not members of the typothetæ in Boston and vicinity the first full week in November, which makes the scale $23 for hand compositors and monotype keyboard operators, and $25 for linotype operators.

THOMAS C. STEPHENSON.

OMAHA, NEB.

John Pugner, who has spent the past month or two visiting his mother here, and who helped out on the News part of the time, has returned to his home in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Morris Firsht, who learned his trade on the News, and who moved with his parents to Detroit, Mich., several months ago, has returned to Omaha and is again working on the News.

Leonard Lightell, who is at the Great Lakes naval training station, was at home on a short furlough this month, looking and "feeling fine, thank you."

President J. H. Martin and John Smith made a business trip to Oklahoma in August.

It gives me pleasure to note the renewed activity of the women. The boosters are at work, and when they start there's always something doing. I predict much joy among the fraternity in Omaha now that the women are again active.

As yet Omaha printers have not declared that an emergency exists. The four-six-bits scale still sticks.

Failing health caused Archie Wiggins to resign as night foreman on the Bee. He has been replaced by Harry Thacker, who was formerly assistant foreman on the day side of the Bee.

The past month has been "movin' month" among Omaha printers. Brodedorf, from the Bee to the News day side; Earl Shaw, from Bee day side to Elrod's; Gene Lyman, from News day side to Tryon's; Avery and Jenkins from News to Chicago and St. Louis, respectively; Earl Lander, from Bee night side to World-Herald.

TECHNICAL PRESS BUYS LIBERTY BONDS.

Two hundred and fifty employes of the Technical Press, 238 William street, New York city, assembled at noon on October 24 to celebrate Liberty day in honor of the second Liberty loan, and, incidentally, pledged themselves to over $16,000 worth of Liberty bonds, in addition to a $10,000 subscription to the first loan.

When Spokesman Fred Edgar introduced Mr. Morton, of the second Liberty loan campaign committee, the shop presented a most pleasing sight, with its service flag with six stars and its decorations of flags and bunting. Mr. Norton made a patriotic appeal and outlined the details of the loan, its purposes and advantages, and its effect on the war.

It didn't require any persuasion to enlist the support of these Americans to help "make the world safe for democracy." Eagerness was manifested in the faces of every one. From the start, at a pledge of $500, down to the last $50 of an apprentice, their willingness to do their bit was outdone only by their enthusiasm in the demonstration.

Mr. Edgar spoke eloquently of the need at this time for financial support of our government, emphasizing the importance of the moral effect of such assistance. Several others made speeches along the same lines. The committee was composed of Fred Edgar, Charles Mullens and Allan Messeder. The following resolutions were adopted and a copy ordered sent to President Wilson:

Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America:

Honorable Sir—In true accord with the spirit of Americanism that should permeate the soul of every true American, whether native or alien born, in this crisis that our beloved country is passing through, the undersigned employes of the Technical Press, 238 William street, New York, in meeting duly assembled, passed the following resolution:

Whereas, We recognize the crisis through which the United States of America is passing; and,

Whereas, We do appreciate the wise and humane cause for which our beloved country finds itself involved; and,

Whereas, Wednesday, October 24, 1917, has been set apart as Second Liberty Bond day; be it

Resolved, That we, American employes of the Technical Press, do hereby pledge to subscribe for second Liberty loan bonds; and, further, to pledge our moral and unswerving loyalty to you, Mr. President, as head of our great republic.

TRINIDAD, COLO.

Owing to many changes made in the personnel of the local union, due to the fact that many members have resigned their positions in Trinidad and moved to other places, a new line-up might be in order.

O. E. Erickson, who for the past five years has been foreman of the Robinson-Wright shop, resigned last month and accepted a position in Denver. Vice-President Ernie Brame assumed the presidential chair and appointed the writer vice-president. A few days afterward Ernie caught the wanderlust and departed for Santa Fe, N. M., and the writer became president of the local for the unexpired term of Erickson. At a regular meeting held the last Monday of October, Joseph Ramey was appointed vice-president.

At the regular meeting of No. 434, held the last Monday of September, it was decided to demand of the employing printers of the city an increase in wages represented by a flat 10 per cent advance over the present scale. The increase brings the scale here to $27.50 for night foreman and $25.30 for day foreman. Journeymen $24.20 for day work and $26.40 for night work. Linotype machinist-operators will receive $2.20 per week over the scale for care of machines. The agreement also establishes a minimum wage of $6 per week for apprentices in the last half of their first year and fixes apprentice pay throughout all the time of indenture. The label agreement is a part of each wage contract.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

George Howard, the Telegram's champion chess exponent, has just successfully concluded a game of chess which he started in October, 1913. This game was played by mail with a friend in England. George has won matches on previous occasions over distances covering three to three and a half years, but has eclipsed all his records with this final exhibition of stamina. It would be highly interesting to the chess fans to keep track of his next game, but life's allotted span is only three score years and ten.

Pte. P. J. Stowe, who left Winnipeg with the army medical corps, has been transferred to the Eleventh Canadian reserve infantry battalion. This is surprising, as Dick has defective eyesight. He reports having met Tom Chadwick and Jack Birnie, who are both in the pink of condition. Dick's brother, Jack Stowe, has now recovered from his wounds and is expecting to go back to France soon.

The fund in aid of A. P. Gaudette was the richer by $50 as a result of a concert held by the ladies Saturday, October 20.

NOTES FROM UNION PRINTERS HOME.

Isaac C. Finch, nephew of Resident Oscar Langford, and Mrs. May Finch Thomas, a grand niece, both of Los Angeles, Cal., visited Mr. Langford at the Home October 19. Mr. Finch is 82 years old—one year older than his uncle—and the two had not met since they were young men, nearly sixty years ago. It was a happy reunion, and many hours were spent in recalling events and experiences of the distant past. Mrs. Thomas, who is about 45 years old, had never before met her great uncle, having been born in a later generation.

Mrs. E. Hardin was admitted a resident of the Home, October 16, from Birmingham Union No. 104. She is a daughter of J. H. Garrison, member of the aforesaid union, who was a former resident here for a short time, vacating last April. There are now five women residents of the Home, two of whom are tubercular patients.

Thomas F. Crowley, a former trustee of the Union Printers Home and an old member of Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, was seriously injured by an automobile last month while crossing a street in the southern Ohio city. He was at once taken to a hospital, where it was found that his injuries were internal, as well as having sustained, besides, a number of bad bruises. It was expected, however, that with careful treatment he would eventually recover.

The Denver Labor Bulletin recently announced that Charles Deacon, former superintendent of the Union Printers Home, who has been sales agent for the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, with headquarters at Kansas City, has moved to Chicago and become associated with the branch office in that city.

Jack Humphrey, Utica Union No. 62, and Nathan Bergman, Butte Union No. 126, visited the Home early in the month of November.

W. A. Nickson, resident from Kansas City Union No. 83, has returned from a brief vacation spent with friends and relatives in Missouri's western metropolis.

Harry E. Englehardt, printer-lawyer and member of Typographical Union No. 3, is serving his third term as mayor of the town of Norwood, an important suburb of the city of Cincinnati. Mr. Englehardt is a brother of our George H. Englehardt, who has been a resident of the home for the past six years from No. 3, troubled with defective eyesight.

The Sunday night entertainments at the Home are occasionally varied, with numbers contributed by outside local talent. Sunday evening, October 25, Mrs. Bessie Hodge favored us with a couple of vocal solos, and James Cosgrove, a resident from New York No. 6, and a former member of "Big Six" band, augmented the music of the Fink orchestra with flute and piccolo accompaniments. Mr. Cosgrove is a finished player of those instruments.

Hallowe'en was appropriately celebrated at the Home this year. Ghosts walked and bogies gamboled, and the spirit of mischief seemed to prevail where decorum is wont to have dominion. But it is ever thus—

A little jollity now and then
Is relished by the best of men, and women, as well as by girls and boys.

A new summer house has been erected between the two croquet courts in front of the main building, to take the place of the old rustic affair which had really outlasted its usefulness. The new pavilion thoroughly harmonizes with its surroundings.

The crop of beans harvested on the Home farm this year amounted to 4,750 pounds, which is considered in this region an average yield.

The state food commission, after due process of patriotic reasoning, came to the conclusion that the bunch at the Union Printers Home, including residents and employes, were growing altogether too sweet. Therefore, on the first of October—or thereabouts—he proceeded to issue his mandate to Superintendent Daley to cut down our supply of sugar to less than one-half the amount we had been using. For quite a number of months past the consumption of this article at the Home has been 2,200 pounds monthly; the commissioner thinks we ought to worry along on a thousand pounds, owing to its scarcity or its hoarding by food speculators. The new rule now in vogue at this great institution limits one to a single cube of sugar to each cup of coffee, and to eat one's breakfast food in the morning without sweetening. The new order is accepted cheerfully, and humorously, by everybody on the hill, except, perhaps, by those persons who have been in the extravagant habit of shoveling three or four spoonfuls of sugar into every cup of coffee or glass of sweet milk drank, and smothering their pastry dessert and stewed prunes in white pulverized sweetness. Indeed, I have seen one person in particular cover his beefsteak with sugar before he proceeded to eat it. But such habits are now things of the past under prevailing conditions at the Home. It is understood that meatless days, and days when white bread will not be found on the dining table will be inaugurated, when butter will be served on individual patty plates, besides the elimination of some of the familiar condiments that ordinarily grace the festive board. Well, "let her come;" the economic and bellicose spirit prevailing all over the world and the huge expense attached to the keeping of millions of soldiers fighting on land and water and in the air must be met by every loyal American in every walk and condition of life. If we are too old or too young, or in any other way incapacitated to fight for human rights and democracy, we ought certainly to be willing to do our "little bit" toward obtaining the object sought by denying ourselves of the luxuries of life which, in less stressful times, we were permitted freely to enjoy.

Misses Mary E. and Katherine Bernhardy, of Pittsburgh, Pa., nieces of Thomas E. Sherratt, resident from Typographical Union No. 7, enjoyed a pleasant visit with their uncle here the latter part of October.

Paul Lauber, a young man from this city, recently broke the usual set program of our customary Sunday evening entertainments by reciting Parson Brown's humorous sermon on "Apples." His rendition was altogether faultless and brought the house down with great gobs of laughter and applause.

The Cincinnati Union Bulletin, the official publication of Typographical Union No. 3, urges its membership not to forget, during the coming Christmastide, its sick and superannuated members domiciled at the Home. At the present time No. 3 has six residents in this institution, and every year, just before December 25, that local organization sends them liberal Christmas greetings both in money and other valuable remembrances. A great many other unions are guilty of displaying the same fraternal spirit; and then again there are a few others, I am sorry to say, that seem to forget entirely their former old comrades in the industrial harness and drop them along the great highway without giving them further thought than that which might be given to a faithful old horse turned out to pasture as one who had outlived his usefulness. It is a pleasure, however, to know that these latter unions are greatly in the minority.

At our Sunday night entertainment, November 4, Mrs. Alice G. Foor, state district deputy of the Knights and Ladies of Security, favored us with a patriotic recitation entitled "Old Glory," which was enthusiastically received. In her introductory remarks she paid a glowing tribute to the International Typographical Union for its manifest work in behalf of its membership and for humanity at large, and for its patriotic spirit in encouraging so many of its loyal members to meet the exigencies of the times by joining the ranks of those fighting for freedom and democracy. And, by the way, Mrs. Foor is the mother of two union printers, or the mother of only one now living, the eldest, M. D. Foor, occupying a soldier's grave at Camp Grant, near Rockford, Ill. He was a member of Multnomah (Portland, Ore.) Union No. 58. The other son was a member of Kansas City Union No. 80, but recently withdrew his card and is now traveling "somewhere in America."

A circular letter received from the executive council of the International Typographical Union announces that a final drive is now being made to raise the balance of the Prescott memorial fund. Only a few hundred dollars more are needed and the membership will undoubtedly cheerfully contribute the amount. The delay in the matter has been caused by the difference of opinion existing over the location of the memorial shaft. The shaft should be erected at the Union Printers Home burial plot, where it may be seen by the thousands of visitors who make the pilgrimage to Colorado Springs annually.—San Francisco Labor Clarion.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

From north, south, east and west came the query "Why?" by mail, telephone and vocally; said query having reference to the omission of the Springfield letter from the November issue of THE JOURNAL. I can only cry "Peccavi," and endeavor not to offend again. My apology must be the fact that, together with the president and a live committee, I was kept so busy on organization work that a last-minute resolution to write a JOURNAL letter had to be rescinded for lack of time. The committee in question is at the time of writing busier than ever interviewing every non-union eligible printer in the district in an endeavor to round them up before the new registration rates go into effect with the new year; failure to get them now means good-by, for few will voluntarily come into the fold after the age of 30, the price being, like everything else we buy these times, somewhat inflated. Opinion locally seems in entire accord with the rest of the International in fixing the registration fees at such marks as will in a measure safeguard our splendid benefits; the problem was a hard one, the solution simple.

The campaign referred to above is a vigorous one, and we are hopeful of boosting our membership up to the 250 mark; it can be done and I trust in my next letter to be able to record a full measure of success. Our friends in Hartford are pluming themselves, according to their correspondent, on a slight increase in their roll of members. They are to be congratulated, but so far as catching up to their neighbor, Springfield, they will have to go some. The race between Springfield, Hartford and Providence is a good one, with this local first at present and the rest trailing, thus: Springfield, 236; Providence, 224; Hartford, 212. As we have three or four more to initiate at the November meeting—these figures are for the end of October—we seem to have a commanding lead for the moment.

Who said Samble, jr., was a confirmed young bachelor? Whisper it not in Gath. William Edward hath taken unto himself a wife. Miss Flora Mather, of this city, consented to preside over the dining table of his home, and the Republican chapel sent along a handsome cut-glass set to assist in adorning said table. And while on the subject of weddings, Jimmy Driscoll, of the Daily News ad force, has joined the ranks of the benedicts, the chapel suitably recognizing the event, which was celebrated about the same time as the Samble nuptials, Miss Mary Veronica Fleming being the bride.

Shadow ever accompanies sunshine, and it is with deep regret that I have to chronicle the death, after a summer of illness, of Miss Rose G. Grenier, for nine years a trustee of this local and one of the most regular of attendants at the monthly meeting. In her young days Miss Grenier had the distinction for a long time of being the only woman job printer in Springfield. She had held situations as proofreader on the Springfield Union, Daily News and Daily News job print at different times, and five years ago was granted the International pension. Members of the union who acted as pallbearers were James F. Wright, Charles P. Hughes, John Conlin, John Hennessey and G. F. McAnanama, the writer assisting them. Miss Grenier was 68 years of age and her genial presence will be sadly missed by all. Silent tribute was paid by the local at its November meeting.

A cablegram from France announces that Kerwin Coughlin, a former member, had yielded up the supreme sacrifice "over there" somewhere in No Man's Land. Mr. Coughlin left Springfield early in the year for Montreal, and it was not known that he had gone across until the receipt of news of his death. Kerwin was with the Republican and Daily News while in Springfield. He leaves a widow and two children.

After nearly half a century of active service with the Republican, Charles E. Willard has retired. "Jack," as he was familiarly known, joined the paper when it was literally a "baby" and had assisted in its growth from the old hand-set days through the advent of the machines without ever migrating. His application for the International pension was acted on at the November meeting. Thus we lose one pensioner and another takes her place. May he live long to enjoy his well-earned rest.

Westfield has finally been licked into shape so far as the scale is concerned, an agreement having been reached with the management of the Westfield Journal whereby the Springfield newspaper scale will prevail for one year, with $3.50 over the scale for the machinist-operator. The paper started in less than two years ago with one machine; there are now three, and a $12,000 press has been installed in a handsome new office that has been engaged on Elm street.

The first draft being almost out of the way, several of our boys are getting into condition so that they will be able to pass the army tests, "Larry" Divily being certain that he will be wearing a brand new suit of khaki ere many moons have passed. "Larry's" chief concern is that he will not be able to tote his super-six over there when it comes his turn to go. Well, we have ten soldier members in the service at present, and with the defeat of the International scheme of a 10 cents a month assessment to care for their cards, it is up to the local; something will have to be done early in the new year, for the local dues will not stand the strain for the duration of the war. The local assented to the action of the officers in purchasing a couple of Liberty bonds of the second issue.

We are in want of a correspondent for the year 1918. Will any of our members volunteer? It is a difficult matter for one man to write interestingly all the time; his ideas get stale, and a new man may be able to put some ginger into this column, which must not be allowed to disappear. Who will come forward and so relieve?

A. F. HARDWICK.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The attendance at the November meeting of No. 15 was smaller than for a number of months, caused undoubtedly by the extremely fine weather for this time of year, the members availing themselves of the opportunity to enjoy the day in outdoor exercise rather than in attending the meeting. Among the reports was one from the central trades delegates to the effect that the Brighton Place Dairy Company was selling milk to members of unions who could show a paid-up working card for 1 cent less a quart than they were charging other customers. A communication was received from Secretary-Treasurer Hays in regard to one A. C. Reis (4567), who has been traveling about the country soliciting money. The register number is a forgery and is held by a member of No. 6, who has been a member for the past thirty years. If any member is approached by said Reis he should notify either President Burns or Secretary Dooley immediately.

The members present voted unanimously to contribute $10 to the Prescott memorial. Secretary Dooley was instructed to procure a service flag and honor roll for the members of No. 15 who are now, or shall later, serve the country in the present war, and at the December meeting a flag raising will be held and several able speakers are to address the members. The following are now in the services of the United States: Abe Brovitz, George Brown, Albert Willey, Theodore Makowski and Charles Schroth. Several more are likely to be drawn in the new draft.

Vice-President Good spoke on the label campaign now being conducted by No. 15 and urged all members to either send or bring all printed matter not bearing the label to the label committee and use every effort to make the campaign a success.

Messrs. Anderson, Chapman, Kolb, Dooley, Pepper and Shumway were appointed a committee to solicit Christmas donations for the sick and worthy members of No. 15. This is an annual work of No. 15 and in the past has been very successful; it is hoped to make it more so this year and every member should give as liberally as possible. The money collected is judiciously spent and affords the true spirit of brotherhood to be shown.

Cards received: Leo Werstine. Cards issued: Edward F. Stoller, Robert C. Stone, Byron W. Allen, Leo Werstine.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

State of trade has been uniformly good, with everybody working.

Ed Davies returned recently from a wagon trip through Oklahoma and Texas, arriving in a regular old-time prairie schooner, drawn by a pair of Texas burros. He is now located on a houseboat on the banks of the Calcasieu river.

The government is building an aviation camp here, with the prospect of several hundred fliers by the end of the year. Your Uncle Sam knows a good site when he sees it, for the "glorious climate of California" has nothing on the Louisiana rialto. Here where roses bloom the year round, with mocking birds nesting in fig and orange groves, where snow is practically unknown, and summer heat tempered by cool gulf zephyrs, would be an ideal location for the much-mooted tuberculosis home, and we submit the unexcelled advantages of imperial Calcasieu to the consideration of the next International Typographical Union convention.

The American-Press recently installed a Ludlow typograph and we are now approaching the nondistribution stage. But the day of sending the embryo printer for italic spaces and sticks must be relegated to bygone days, for he'll bring them to you.

With the opening of the hunting season the boys hie themselves to the woods on Sunday after the frisky squirrel, ducks and geese and other wildfowl, which seem to be plentiful this season.

Out of a membership of sixteen, four are enlisted in the navy or army, and the local is keeping them on the paid-up roll. This is a 100-per-cent town.

AL SYKES.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

The writer was reinvested, at the last regular meeting, with the honorable title of official correspondent of No. 180 to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. Our splendid craft publication has managed to struggle along for some time past without the assistance of his more or less facile pen, but it was stated that the best town on the Missouri river is entitled to representation therein, if only that friends of the yesteryear may know that we still live and thrive in this growing city on the Sioux—and so it was gently hinted that the correspondent get busy immediately. And this in the face of an increased postage rate! The Craftsman, a local labor paper, mentions the writer's reputation in connection with "bovine" matters, so it seems to be up to him to live up to this proud record—and spread it.

The Craftsman is a six-month-old venture on the sea of union journalism, and is a quite lusty appearing infant. It is owned, edited and managed by two veteran members of the local typographical union, Henry Michelstetter and John H. Jones. This makes two union labor papers for Sioux City, as the Union Advocate, now in its twenty-third year, still flourishes under the management of William H. Bastian and the editorship of Harry H. Adair. Two union papers would be about one too many for most towns, but not for so good a union town as Sioux City. Organization has made remarkable growth in this city during the past two or three years, nearly all lines of labor being represented by good, active unions. The central labor body is a live institution, with a splendid attendance of earnest delegates at every meeting—in sharp contrast to the conditions existing a few years ago, when a handful of faithful printers and cigar makers had difficulty in keeping the trades assembly from dying of inertia.

Did THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL ever record the elevation of one of Sioux City's best known printers to the post of secretary-treasurer of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, which occurred at the annual gathering of that body in Dubuque last June? Harry Strief, first secretary-treasurer, then president, of the state labor body, resigned the latter post to accept a place on the state board of control, and was succeeded by Secretary-Treasurer Fred A. Canfield, of Cedar Rapids, a former Sioux City stereotyper. Earl C. Willey, treasurer of the Sioux City Trades and Labor Assembly, and recording secretary of No. 180, was chosen by unanimous vote to the position vacated by Mr. Canfield. Earl is a union worker with a punch, and has already demonstrated that he will make splendidly good in state federation work. One wonders how the cause of labor could succeed in Iowa without Sioux City printers to guide it.

Harry Strief is now a resident of Des Moines, made necessary by his state job, but he drops in to see the folks in the old home town every now and then, and his presence is as a ray of sunshine on a foggy day. Of course, he'll return to stay some day.

Another former Sioux City printer who just simply can't keep away from the town is Charley Allen, foreman of the Sioux Falls Journal. He happens in on his friends here oftener than semi-occasionally.

No. 180 is doing her bit to help win the world war. All the available funds, in the sum of $500, have been invested in Liberty bonds, and several members are at the front preparing to make any sacrifice necessary for the cause of liberty. Those in the service are: Lieut. Mark Bigelow, Company C, 127th machine gun battalion, now stationed at Camp Cody, Deming, N. M.; Pte. J. B. Glasgow, also at Camp Cody. Apprentice members: Samuel A. Haislet, corporal in Company M, Forty-ninth United States infantry, now at Tenafly, N. J.; Dave Roberts, Company B, 126th machine gun battalion, Deming; George D. Haislet, Company C, 127th machine gun battalion, Deming, and Dick Verstegen, aviation corps, Fort Sam Houston, Tex. Our union is proud of her soldier boys, and perhaps the writer is just a little more proud than the rest of 'em, as two of the volunteers named are sons of his. Walter Ward and Frank Hutchinson, of the Journal force, each has a son in the service.

Vice-President Paul Lindenmeyer is expecting a summons to the colors any day, as he was among the early ones called to the national army, has been accepted, and did not claim exemption. Paul has for years contributed largely to the support of his mother and widowed sister and children, but stands ready to respond to his country's call to duty.

Arnold J. Herz (better known as "Heine"), member of the executive board, has gone and done it. He was married October 30 to a popular young lady of Sioux City—Miss Oakleaf. With the present price of pork chops Arnold will have to pound the keys harder than ever now.

Walter Whitehead, for a number of years a fixture at the Star printery, has gone to Des Moines, where a sister lives, and will remain there if he can stand it.

A. A. ("Mush") Allburn, veteran Journal printer, is again in Montana—this time at Miles City—and will work there until he gets lonesome for home again.

No. 180 endorsed the proposition to change the law relating to seven-day situations. The Morning Journal crowd is strong for it.

The Live Stock Record chapel has recently undergone a transformation. Foreman Lloyd Marousek and Operator Charles ("Stock Yards") Wilson both retired to engage in farming—the former in Colorado and the latter near Leeds, a Sioux City suburb. Will Shreiner succeeds to the foremanship, President J. L. Wilson becomes the machinist-operator, and the undersigned is "rassling" with the paper—a daily publication.

Work is good, everybody employed, and lots of overtime on the hook about town.

George R. Protsch, for many years an employe of the Union Advocate, has taken a position with the Hogan & Campbell job office.

And we are all anxiously watching to see what will happen to that new newspaper scale next June. O. M. HAISLET.

CONCORD, N. H.

North Adams and 5,000 members!

Jacob Federman, of Medford, Mass., has deposited a Boston traveler and accepted a position at the Dartmouth Press at Hanover.

President Brusa has been removed from the hospital to his home, where he is gaining strength very rapidly, and expects to be on the job again very shortly.

Attention of the members is called to the fact that after January 1, 1918, the initiation fee will be as follows: Less than twenty-five years at next birthday, $3; more than twenty-five years and less than thirty-five years, $5; more than thirty-five years and less than forty-five years, $10; forty-five years and over, $20. In addition to the above a local fee of $5 will be collected. Now is the time for the members of No. 297 to get busy and bring in the applications of the non-union printers here, and there are a lot of them. The secretary has just mailed notices to all the non-union printers in Concord, explaining about the increased cost of initiation on January 1. If this is followed up by a few personal talks by our members who are working side by side with them, a whole lot of good can be accomplished.

Our November meeting was very short; only about fifteen minutes was taken up from the time of opening until the close. I am not going to say any more about the members attending meetings. I have written something on this subject every month for about a year. When the right time comes, and I feel it will be very soon now, the members will realize that they have got to come and help out the few that are trying to hold this union together. The members that are working fifty-five hours every week should be the ones that should work the hardest to better their condition, but they seem to be content to watch and let the other fellow do the work. I feel that the forty-eight-hour week will be forced upon them in the very near future, whether they want it or not. The sooner it comes depends upon them; the sooner they really want it, just so soon will they get it.

Nomination for officers will be in order at the December meeting.

Business in all branches of the trade is still good, with good, competent union men hard to find. Every one should try and get the applications of the good union printers at this time.

E. B. McCauley.

PATERSON, N. J.

On November 10 the local members were each assessed 25 cents, which was used in getting up packages to be sent to "our boys" who have joined the colors. The executive committee had charge of putting up the packages.

The result in the cases of our members who were seeking political jobs at the last election was as follows: Morris S. Grossman and Charles Albonica, who ran for alderman in their respective wards on the democratic ticket, defeated. George Graebner, who ran for township collector of West Park Borough, and Harry A. Templeman, justice of the peace, were elected. The last two ran on the republican ticket.

While in New York on November 10 I met Eugene Wells, of Wilmington, Del., who had just returned from the Union Printers Home. He had nothing but the warmest praise for our grand institution and the greatest respects to pay to Mr. and Mrs. John C. Daley, who he says are always looking after the welfare of those in the Home.

Among the recent arrivals have been Tommy ("Kid") Horan and "Bill" Gleason.

H. L. Vanderveld.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Routine business occupied most of the time of the October meeting. Several new members were initiated, giving further evidence that we are still on the trail of those not yet affiliated with the union. Those members who are habitual absentees from meetings will meet many new faces when next they grace the gatherings of the union, and it is not now so much a problem of getting new members as it is of having those present to help carry the burden who for years past were valuable in the activities of No. 33. The committee in charge of the sixtieth anniversary of the union made its final report, showing a balance on hand after all bills had been paid. The committee was given a vote of thanks, which all agree was deserved.

The Providence Visitor Printing Company has added an up-to-date stereotype outfit to its plant, having purchased a latest design flat-casting equipment for a seven-column page. It consists of a jig saw and drill, saw and trimmer, casting box, shaver equipped with micrometer gauges and an automatic stop-lowering device.

Howard E. Branch, who made his debut as a newspaper cartoonist and photographer on the Providence Tribune, has been appointed an efficiency expert in the ordnance bureau of the war department at Washington. Mr. Branch has been associated with the Stevens Optical Company, which firm runs a printing office on the side.

There are members of No. 33 who are beyond the age when they can be of service to their country as soldiers or sailors, but have sons enlisted in some branch of the government service and are either here or overseas. Here is an incident, and every word of it is true: "Some one ought to explain the meaning of the service flag to the people of Providence. I have one hung out in front of my house for a son who is somewhere across the water. Yesterday an auction was advertised for some place on my street and, seeing my flag, people came there looking for the auction. Two junk peddlers even went up into the attic looking for it. It seems that some people are not very patriotic or they would know a service flag when they see one."

M. A. Donahue, for two years employed in the composing room of the Providence Evening Bulletin, has withdrawn his card and left for the Pacific coast, San Francisco being his destination, making the journey by visiting different points on the way.

John Edward O'Connor, born in Manchester, N. H., March 11, 1849, died in this city October 27. Mr. O'Connor began his apprenticeship in the office of the Providence Journal in 1867 and worked on that paper and at his trade in Boston, Mass. Deceased was not a member of the union at his death nor had he worked at the printing business for twenty years. Mr. O'Connor was well known by oldtimers.

To the members of Providence Union who have not yet contributed to the Prescott memorial fund is given an opportunity to do so at this time. The total amount raised so far is $1,613.70 and about $800 more is needed to meet the amount required for this purpose. The local union, by personal subscription, has given $21.95, an average of about 10 cents a member. The secretary will forward any further donations to this fund to headquarters should any one care to contribute.

The latest reports regarding the condition of Frank Livingston, a member of this union, now a resident of the Union Printers Home, is that he has added eighteen pounds to his weight and his general health is greatly improved. This will be welcome information to Mr. Livingston's friends, who sincerely hope for his speedy recovery and his return to this city in the near future.

Thomas Harrison has left the employ of the Providence Bulletin to accept a position in the ad department of the Pawtucket Evening Times.

Howard Cram, a linotype operator, pleaded nolo to twenty-one indictments when arraigned in the superior court in this city November 14. He was sentenced on but one of the indictments, that of receiving a stolen automobile, the property of Judge Rathbun, of the superior court. Cram was given five years in jail. We congratulate the court in doing what the local typographical union would have been glad to have done several years ago. The opinion is general in local printing circles that at last justice has been meted out to a man who evidently has long been a crook, not through misfortune, but through design. Cram was excluded from membership in No. 33 a few years ago.

Viola, eight-year-old daughter of John G. Lombard, was run over and so badly injured by an automobile that she died at the Rhode Island hospital a few minutes after an ambulance had taken her there on November 3. Mr. Lombard had left the printing business for the winter and was about to start on a tour behind the footlights.

The Providence Journal's tobacco fund, started to supply the Rhode Island soldiers with "smokes" and the use of the weed in other manner, up to November 15 had reached the sum of $25,032.82.

An effort was made to send the boys in service a union product, but as the newspaper acts only as the agency by which the fund is collected an appeal to it was of no avail. At a meeting of a certain organization in this city it was suggested that a collection be taken for this fund. When it came time to count the money it was found that several hat and coat checks had been thrown into the collection plates. This did not phase those who were out to increase the tobacco fund, as they immediately presented the checks at the hat room, brought the hats, coats, etc., into the hall and proceeded to sell them at auction. This caused something of a flurry, as can be imagined. It cost one man $8.60 to redeem his coat.

Pledged but to truth, to liberty and law;
No favor shall win us, no fear shall awe.

With the above lyric, the Rhode Island Labor Press introduces itself to the public, making its initial bow as the "official organ of the Providence Central Federated Union" the first of November. The Press will appear monthly until further notice. No one need apologize for it typographically. Its news columns are replete with reading matter pertinent to labor. The Press starts off with some lofty ideals, its field for usefulness is extensive and we hope it will always be true to its Utopian motto. Samuel R. Macready, a member of No. 33, is the editor of the Press.

Liberty day for Liberty bonds in Liberty land was observed in this city on October 24. Various meetings were held in the interests of the loan and every gathering was marked by an outpouring of enthusiasm and patriotism. The city hall, state house and public schools were closed. The various printing and newspaper offices throughout the city were visited by speakers who addressed the gatherings on the subject of the loan.

The bootblacks of this city are now classified as laborers. And they get 10 cents for each pair of cowhides they polish! What profiteth a man with a college education?

EDWARD N. GRIFFITHS.

LAWRENCE, MASS.

Things are going along nicely with No. 51 and everybody is working. The label is being pushed hard and about all the printing that goes out bears the magic sign. This has only been accomplished by constant hammering by the label committee and they will continue their work until the city is 100 per cent label.

Since our October meeting President Medcalf and Secretary Gilliard decided to surrender their cards and they both took positions on the Christian Science Monitor in Boston, Mass. Some day there will be a show-down in that shop and these "card surrenderers" may be a rather sorry lot. The members were surprised at this action by our two officers.

The election of First Vice-President Forrest C. Hinckley as president and of Second Vice-President Linehan as financial secretary was unanimous. Both are well fitted to fill their positions and are popular with the boys. Hinckley is in the employ of the Telegram. Linehan works for the Sun-American. It was voted to have but one vice-president hereafter, and Frank Burke, of the Eagle-Tribune, was elected to that position. He formerly belonged to Lowell Union.

Two applications were received and acted upon at the November meeting and four traveling cards were deposited. This brings the union up to a membership of sixty-six members.

Former Secretary Marquis, of this union, but now a member of Boston Union, was a visitor at the November meeting.

No. 51 has invested in another hundred-dollar Liberty bond of the second vintage.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The following members of No. 12 are now in the United States service: Russell Mules, Dan R. Kipp, J. M. Matthews, E. H. Allers, J. McHugh, A. Levine, J. Frejka; apprentices, G. Haugh, E. Flanagan, T. Bailey, E. Saalsbad, W. James, R. Donovan, P. L. Hoot, E. P. Wooden, —— Lehn, E. Rannells, G. Burrier, R. Bushman, Roth P. Kirk. These have been exempted: E. J. Peoples, Joe Wildner, L. J. Ford, J. H. Sherwood, jr.; C. H. Schultz, S. Blume, jr.; E. Heim, J. Jesse Riley. One hundred and forty-two members of No. 12 have so far reported that they had to register under the first call of the selective draft, but there are some few who have not reported. Of this number, four have enlisted, three have been drafted and eight have been exempted. Sixteen apprentices have also enlisted.

It is a pleasure for me to announce that President Arthur L. Jackson is getting along fine. I called on him recently and he was just eating his dinner, and, believe me, he certainly did put some of the food away. Mrs. Jackson tells me that while "Jack" did not eat much during his illness, he has nearly caught up to where he left off, and she certainly hopes that none of "Jack's" friends will whisper this to Hoover, because she does not care to have him Hooverized for a while.

Jack Dempsey is still confined to his home. While Jack has been home he has had the pleasure of having an addition to the family in another little Dempsey.

George P. Nichols lost his brother-in-law by death on Sunday, October 28.

The shortage in the labor market for printers is beginning to tell seriously on the proprietors in this city, and changes among the forces are occurring weekly. The latest changes that have occurred are A. A. Crabus, linotype operator, from the Franklin Printing Company to the Fleet-McGinley Company; Rodney Thomas, linotype operator, from the Fleet-McGinley Company to the Evening Sun, and there are more changes that will occur in the next several weeks.

The Sun has installed the twenty new linotype machines that were recently purchased from the Mergenthaler company, and Sunday work was the order for Chief Machinist Paul Wolf and his crew in putting them together.

Big inducements are being offered men in the printing trades by out-of-town concerns to come to their assistance in working for them at a higher scale than they are receiving in Baltimore, and it would be well for Baltimore printers to revise the list of their employes' salaries, with a view to keeping their forces intact. Even the newspaper branch of the industry is beginning to make inroads into the commercial branch by offering more salary, and the fact that they have a seven-hour day is a big inducement for the newspapers to hold out, and in the majority of cases the hour a day less counts with the men. Early in the summer I advised a rearrangement of these conditions, and in some instances these matters were attended to, and those who have made this rearrangement seem to be having no trouble. There will be a call in a short time by the government for more men for the national army, and this call will take more men than the first call did. This will also be true of the printers and the allied trades, and the call will hit us much harder than the first one did.

The Sunday morning edition of the Evening News has been a success, and the scheme has given the printing industry more work to look after. The plant recently installed four more new linotypes.

Guy Taylor was the high man in the weekly roll-off of the Morning Sun duckpin league Wednesday, October 24, hitting 116 of the little wooden men in the game. Cosnell and Greenfield were tied for the runner-up position, each having a mark of 115.

Bert Kenner, of the Mules Printing Company, is now instructing the boys of the Boys' Home School the art of printing three evenings a week.

Sam Peters, of the linotype force of the Morning Sun, is now in the composing room linotype force of the Evening News.

William L. Dean, who has been working in the composing room of the Baltimore Bargain House, is now the property man in the composing room of the Evening Sun. Willie will have charge of the type faces for the admen and see that they are supplied at all times. This job was formerly in the hands of boys, but Superintendent Conklin found it very unsatisfactory.

Daniel E. Kipp, of Baltimore, has been qualified by Captain Kirby, of the engineer corps, for active service, and was ordered to report for duty at once at Camp Devens, Mass. He is an adman and linotype operator and will be attached to the printing plant at that camp.

There is one printing employer in Baltimore who is sharing some of his profits with his employes, in recognition of the high cost of living and the cooperation that is being given to him by his employes, and he shares with every one of his employes once a year, even to the smallest-salaried boy in his employ. At Christmas time he distributes the bonus to each and every individual in his employ, whether it be a bookkeeper or an organization man. The bonus runs from $10 to $250. Prof. M. E. Jaffa, of the University of California, who has made a study and a report of the need of readjustment of wages because of the high cost of living, says that the increase has been 33 per cent during the past two years, and that the man with a wife and three children to support, who receives $75 a month, will have $2.50 left to pay for clothing, insurance and other extras, after he has paid for necessary food, rent, and shoes. Many families, in order to make both ends meet, have largely reduced their food consumption, and such reduction is at the expense of proper growth and development of children and impaired efficiency and endurance of adults. Taking rent, which he figures at $20 a month, and light and fuel at $3 (?), respectively, as being items which have not increased in price during the past two years. Professor Jaffa shows that where the average wage-earner expended $57.75 for necessary living expenses a year ago, the increases in food, clothing and shoes now make it necessary for him to pay out $72.50 each month in order properly to nourish, house and clothe himself and family. Shoes in each family that cost $5.25 a month during 1916 now cost $8 monthly, which is inclusive of repair charges; made necessary by the use of poorer materials.

J. M. Matthews, a member of No. 12, has been appointed first sergeant of Company I, First training battalion, Fifty-fourth brigade, at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala. He wants to hear from all of his friends and sends his best regards to his many friends in Baltimore.

J. V. Casey, of the Lucas Brothers Printing Company, has been appointed foreman of the composing room of that concern.

The Baltimore Evening News is publishing a new Sunday edition beginning on Sunday, October 28. The paper appears at 9 A. M. They now issue a Sunday afternoon edition and will continue to publish that paper also, which will make nine papers a week, including a state edition which catches the mail trains at about 7:30 in the evening.

The Baltimore Bargain House, the largest mail order house in the south, has decided to install a monotype keyboard and caster to take care of its constantly increasing business. The composing room is now running linotypes and employs about twenty-five men, but the work of this house is such that it has found that it requires a machine of the monotype make on account of the numerous small illustrations that is carried in the book. The catalog contains at least 500 pages monthly and is sent to all parts of the United States and Canada, acting as a salesman for the house, which does not employ a man on the road. The firm has also decided not to curtail its postage on account of the increase of the first-class matter. Jacob Epstein, the proprietor of this mammoth concern, has also subscribed heavily to the second issue of the Liberty loan bonds.

Believing that the present chairman and assistant chairman of the Sun composing room deserved another term of office, the members of that chapel unanimously re-elected Fred Thomas chairman and William J. Culver assistant chairman at the election held on Tuesday, November 13. The unanimous re-election is a deserved compliment to both gentlemen.

The union at the October meeting decided not to endorse the Sacramento proposition to resurrect the seven-day law. WALTER H. MULES.

MARION, OHIO.

We have between thirty-five and forty members in Marion who work on two daily papers. The "big boss" of each is a man having a national reputation. The one connected with the republican sheet is United States Senator Warren G. Harding, who presided over the last national republican convention. The other man is Thomas Brooks Fletcher, a noted lecturer with the Redpath bureau. Some of our manufactured products are known all over the country, and even beyond its borders. The most notable of these are the steam shovels, tractors and threshing machines. This is the end of a division of the Erie railroad, and, as several other roads go through here, the town is an important railroad center. But it is not a very strongly-organized union town. Aside from us printers, the only other organized workers here are the railroad brotherhoods, the barbers, the brick masons, and about a hundred of the more skilled men at the steel mill. There may be a different story to tell, though, after a while, for our president has been made an organizer for this vicinity for the American Federation of Labor, and we are endeavoring to form a central labor union.

At our last meeting an entertainment committee was appointed. This was done in the hope that it might be able to increase the attendance at the meetings, to get the members to take more interest in union affairs, to arrange a varied program, one feature of which would be along gastronomic lines, another afford entertainment, and a third to be introduced with a view of benefiting the members by having them give numbers of an educational character and participate in discussions of questions affecting the trade or those of current or general interest.

September 23 we renewed our contract for five years. We got a raise of $2 a week for the first year, nothing for the second and $1 a week extra for each of the remaining three years. That made the present rate $21 for machine men and $20 for all other journeymen.

Two of our old operators, Mr. and Mrs. George Tuttle, have taken cards and gone we know not where. A man showed up one morning to fill one of the vacancies. The foreman gave him a "half" with which to get something to eat, but, like the fellow in the old song, he never came back. Perhaps instead of getting something to eat he took on some liquid refreshments and then felt too rich to work. Men of this type are poor specimens of humanity, and should be penalized by the holding up of their cards for a time while they learned a few principles of square dealing.

ARTHUR W. DOWNES.

AUBURN-LEWISTON, ME.

The monthly meetings of No. 532 are becoming more and more interesting. Better attendance and more business transacted. The new members are taking hold in good shape, particularly the ladies. At the November meeting Representative Dallas was present and addressed the union. His remarks were interesting and instructive. He stated that his interviews with the local proprietors were satisfactory, and that by the first of January, 1918, he expected to see a new scale in force and a three-year contract signed up with the two daily papers. Joe is a great favorite with the members of No. 532. He certainly is a good worker. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served by the women members and was much enjoyed by all. Nothing like the "eats" to bring the members out. They are arranging for a better lay-out at the close of the next meeting.

The Sun force has sent a Christmas box containing warm clothing, tobacco and cigarettes to William Wilson, one of the Sun's force, now in France. He is an apprentice member of No. 532 and he enlisted in the Nelson Dingley battery, but was transferred to a motor battery now operating in the trenches.

J. T. MORRISSEY.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

There were a number of interesting happenings at the November meeting. Taking them in the order of happening, the first was the appearance of Secretary-Treasurer Hays, who was there in time to meet early birds before the meeting was called to order. President Scott and Vice-President Hugo Miller were expected, but the former was called to New York and the latter was waylaid by members of Typographia No. 4, so Mr. Hays had a monopoly of the distinguished-visitor role. Chairman Welsh reported that the president of the typothetæ had declined to co-operate in the instruction of apprentices, giving as his reason the belief that it was the intention of the union to so arrange things that all apprentices would eventually become members of the union. This was such an obvious fact that Mr. Welsh did not congratulate him on his reasoning powers, merely remarking that we get them anyway. An ad in one of the papers for a boy to learn steel die and copper-plate engraving with no salary for the first year may have put queer thoughts into the typothetæ mind. The committee is not discouraged and believes that a way will be found for united action on this question.

A delegation from the central labor council was given the privilege of the floor and Mr. McCadden explained that the assessment of 25 cents per capita levied by the council on No. 9 for the entertainment of the American Federation of Labor delegates was perfectly legal. He made no mention as to what form the entertainment would take, but seemed to want to give the impression that the council had a right to levy the tax. Then Mr. Nolan took a hand and assured us that it was necessary for No. 9 to "kick in," as he expressed it, to save its reputation—the council and business men would think we were "pikers" if we didn't. Mr. Nolan's ability as an extractor of funds from trade unions seems to be weakening. Generally he can pull a gold-filled tooth without pain, but he had mitts on his fine Italian hand this time. One cynic remarked that the entertainment seemed off to a good start already and another was of the opinion that the council had levied the assessment and then sent out collectors to get what they could on a percentage basis. However, the union made a donation of $25 and repudiated the assessment.

Treasurer O'Donnell then took the floor and told of the progress No. 9 had made during the years of President Kinskey's administration—the improved working conditions, the increases in the scale of wages, better sanitary conditions, better relations with employers, better education of apprentices—and as an outward and visible sign of appreciation by the membership of his work on behalf of the union presented the president with a check for $140.

President Kinskey did not make a bluff at being surprised. The presentation had been scheduled for the October meeting, but you can't plaster a check on a man who isn't there, and there was no more secrecy about the matter than there is in the diplomacy of the Bolsheviki, so he thanked the union and assured the members that he would go on doing things in the same old way, doing what was best for the organization in the light of the knowledge his position gave him, which was apt to be more accurate than that of the member who had heard but one side and that apt to be biased or prejudiced by personal feeling.

Delegate Coyell then asked for a few words from Secretary-Treasurer Hays, and those present had the pleasure of listening to a very able address, in which the duty of those who stayed at home to those who were doing their "bit" was made clear; and the value of membership in the union, as a strictly business proposition, was emphasized.

The American Federation of Labor convention opened with a bang that was heard at least halfway around the world, for President Wilson was there and the delegates had the pleasure of listening to an address that will rank high even in this era of patriotic oratory. Governor Whitman was there, too, and vied with the president in eloquence and in appreciation of the attitude of the federation in the present struggle for the rights of mankind. A. A. Landon, president of the chamber of commerce and also president of the American Radiator Company, professed to be quite at home with the delegates in his address, for he had been a member of the machinists' union and at one time was president of the trades and labor council in Detroit. He had lots of advice to give and told some of his experiences in getting ammunition to the front. He gave the impression that the tight little isle was in rather bad shape until he got things straightened out. Mr. Landon has been a business man so long that he has lost touch with the practical side of the labor movement, or he would not have such implicit faith in the statements of his English "business" friends and would know that the open season for perjury lasts all the year round when labor problems are discussed by business men, either domestic or foreign. Mr. Hill, the British delegate, had a few things to say in answer to Mr. Landon, but the papers did not give him much space, and we will have to wait until the official proceedings are out for the other side of the question.

Among the printer delegates at the convention, in addition to the International Typographical Union officials, Messrs. Scott, Hays, Stevenson, Morrison and Hayes, were William Lodge, Ottawa, fraternal delegate; Thomas M. Gafney, Syracuse; Frank T. Bryan, Coffeyville, Kan.; J. M. Conley, Dubuque; Walter C. Caraway, Atlanta; James F. Blakely, Milwaukee; Frank L. Rist, Cincinnati; William F. Hoefgen, San Antonio; Patrick M. Draper, Ottawa; Samuel De Nedrey, Washington; R. E. Woodmansee, Springfield, Ill.; James A. Duncan, Seattle; Grant Hamilton, Denver; James E. Egan, Washington; William Roberts, Chicago; T. A. Stevenson, Toronto; T. D. Fitzgerald, Albany, representing state federations or central labor unions, and Frank Crown and John Murray, of Washington, as visitors. No. 9's entertainment committee arranged a banquet in their honor. Secretary Morrison appointed J. H. Johnston, of the Courier, as his assistant. The Union and Times printed the proceedings and the plant was operated twenty-four hours a day keeping up with the work.

John D. Babbage, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, has presented "Ben Franklin, Printer," and the Courier chapel has ordered DeVinne's "Correct Composition" for the union library. Next!

Subscriptions to the second Liberty loan in the newspaper chapels amounted to about $10,000. John Harwood rolled the high score by investing $1,100 in the good cause. HUGH WALLACE.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Our October meeting was well attended and a number of important matters were taken up and disposed of. It does seem that our membership ought to show more interest and attend more regularly. Our meeting is held on the fourth Sunday of the month, not the last, as some have the impression.

The organization committee is about to make another "drive" with the hopes of securing every non-unionist before the first of the year, when the registration fee will be increased. This ought to be a good argument, and good results are looked for. It does seem that this committee is not getting the co-operation it deserves from the members. It is hardly fair to leave it to a few to do all the work. Surely most every one knows some one who is not a member, and it is their duty to talk to them and try to induce them to take out a card. There are plenty of convincing arguments, and a word here or there will help the committee make the work most successful. Let every one "go to it" and make the slogan, "North Adams and 5,000," a reality.

In the resignation of "Billie" Dalquist from the organization committee, we have lost a hard and willing worker. His efforts will be devoted to another committee, which we hope will prove as helpful as they were to the organization committee. He has left the trade and taken up the insurance game. But let me say right here, he is not selling any better protection than the good old International Typographical Union is offering.

No. 47 is certainly doing her share in this war. We now have seven members serving Uncle Sam. Walter J. Hynes, Thomas Healy, F. Raymond Shea, Harry D. Murray, Arthur Kapitsky and Frederick Plank from the Register chapel, and Vincent W. English from the Union chapel, are now doing "their bit," with a number of others subject to call. Plank is a petty officer, with the rank of ship's printers.

Work is normal, but not what it should be, owing to the small registration at Yale, which lets out a good deal of work under normal conditions.

We are about to take up a sick benefit, and have a committee at work on it, which no doubt will have a report to make in the near future.

Fred Neebe (Senator) has announced his intentions of running for mayor of Meriden, where he resides. The senator certainly worked hard in the senate on behalf of organized labor last summer, and he has the good wishes of all laboring men.

The Journal-Courier has added a model 14 linotype to its equipment. FRANK N. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Negotiations were successful for an increase of $1 in the book and job scale, to date from November 1. This brings the job scale, both hand and machine, to a level with that of the afternoon newspaper.

Twenty new members were elected at the October meeting of No. 2.

Bert Brady is in town helping the local officers on some special work. Mr. Brady is successor to the late Booth Thomson as chairman of the apprentice committee of the International Typographical Union.

President Young, Vice-President Phillips and Harry Shaner were re-elected delegates to the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union, the next session of which will be held at Wilkes-Barre in February.

Eugene Madden, a comma chaser (euphemism for proofreader) on the Trades Union News, rounded out his forty-sixth year as a member of the International Typographical Union in October. Mr. Madden, who is a Girard College product, is a gentleman and a scholar.

When the Pennsylvania legislature failed to confirm Bill Young as a member of the workmen's compensation board, Governor Brumbaugh immediately appointed him chief mediator of the Pennsylvania department of labor and industry at a salary of $3,500 a year, plus expenses. No. 2's president brings an abundance of diplomacy and tact to his new position.

John A. Phillips was appointed delegate to the local branch of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy.

Charles C. Boyer, intertype salesman, visited the national capital recently and conferred with Captain Kirby, of the United States army, relative to establishing an American newspaper in France. Said he at the October meeting:

Captain Kirby suggested that he thought it would be a great help to our boys in France to have an American newspaper, and I agreed with him, but said I would get in touch with Secretary Seibold, of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, which I did, and we immediately communicated with International President Marsden G. Scott, who stated that the plan had his approval. The matter has been gone over fully with the war department, and its approval has also been given to the idea. Contracts will be awarded for machinery and the entire equipment will be on its way to France within the next month.

Recording Secretary Larry McCrossin, in reviewing the referendum vote on the second proposition, observed: "Guess those members who voted in the negative would have the International officers work for the Indianapolis Typographical Union scale."

Pete Walsh, once of the North American, has been elevated to assistant foreman on the night side of the Public Ledger.

Miss Varrie Fincher is now billeted on the Evening Ledger.

Training camp and firing line continue to make inroads on our membership, the latest to go being William Heffron, of the Trades Union News chapel, who is at Camp Meade, Admiral, Md. Before leaving Bill's shopmates presented him with a safety razor and other accessories. Earl Meade, son of John Meade, a lifelong union man, as was his father before him, is also stationed at the Maryland cantonment. The merry game of "strikes and spares" is now in full blast in the Curtis League, in which the Evening Ledger composing room is represented. Joe Beatty, Bill Ward, George Simpson and Dick Baker are in the class of near 300 bowlers.

Jake Shaner has flopped to the Kitty League and is now employed at the Westminster Press in the capacity of machinist-operator.

Robert F. Salade's book, "Plate Printing and Steel Die Stamping," is now ready for distribution. It is from the press of the Oswald Publishing Company, New York. Cloth, 74 pages. Illustrated. By mail, $1.10. This book covers both the practical side and the business side of engraving, plate printing, etc. Mr. Salade has written another technical book on "Cutting and Creasing," covering all operations in the larger cutting and creasing plant. This volume will be ready soon.

JAMES P. BOWEN.

LINCOLN, NEB.

The October meeting of No. 209 was attended by the largest company that has been present at any meeting for many a day. There were about fifty men present and three women. The meeting was a most interesting one, and much business for the "good of the order" was taken up. It was voted to appropriate $300 of the defense fund in purchasing Liberty bonds of the third series, which is expected to be called about January 1.

Jack Compton was severely afflicted last month in the loss of his wife, and the union took action in appointing a committee to draft suitable resolutions of condolence in commemoration of the respect the union held for her memory.

An amendment to the constitution was adopted to conform to the International law, with regard to overtime being given out to the first sub appearing, same to be not in force after six months.

Miss Hazel Scott, of Lincoln, was given ten minutes in which to present the particulars of the contest operated by the Omaha Unionist. This is a contest for subscriptions, the Unionist, published at Omaha, being the only paper in the state published in the interest of the union cause. Miss Scott is the representative for Lincoln and vicinity.

Roland D. Sidell, Allen B. Curran and Edwin Gaiser were admitted to membership in the union at the October meeting.

Cards deposited: W. J. Murphy, James M. Mason, William H. Shaw. Cards withdrawn: William H. Shaw, C. S. Jackson, James M. Mason.

Fred Ihringer is ever ready to serve on any committee or in any spot and place in which he may be called. He has served on the labor temple board for some years, and has worked for the interest of unionism in Lincoln to such an extent that the temple is almost out of debt, and soon the unions of Lincoln will be the proud possessors of one of the best properties in the city of Lincoln, and that free and clear from all incumbrances.

HENRY ALLEN BRAINERD.

LONDON, ONT.

The November meeting of No. 133 was a representative one, based on average attendance, members being present who have not attended for many moons. The action of the trades and labor council in nominating George S. Gibbons as labor's candidate for parliament was endorsed. Mr. Gibbons gives notice that, if elected, he will oppose all and sundry legislation that savors of the least antagonism of the labor unions, as he is unqualifiedly a believer in the rights of the toiler to organize for his protection. Mr. Gibbons has been a lifelong liberal. One member-elect received the obligation.

THE JOURNAL intimates that the most important propositions submitted to the referendum have fallen by the wayside. In other words, some 'teen thousand of the membership have spoken for upward of 70,000 union printers, while the great majority, it is to be inferred, have proclaimed by their refusal to exercise the ballot, that the referendum to them means nothing; that the gathering together of hundreds of their representatives in annual convention to debate and devise means for the welfare of the organization is a waste of time and energy, and are not to be considered capable of proper judgment; or is it that these 50,000 or so delinquent voters are not sufficiently informed on these questions as to permit of their casting their ballots intelligently, and, therefore, throw the responsibility upon the shoulders of the "Johnny-on-the-Spotters," whose slogan is kill if the expenditure of a nickel is required to carry out its provisions? If this be so, then that wonderful vehicle of effectiveness (nit), the referendum of the International Typographical Union, is evidently in need of a few new spokes in its wheels. Perhaps a referendum of the local unions instead of the individual members would ameliorate conditions slightly, for through debate on the floor the questions would be thoroughly thrashed out, and thus it is to be presumed that the majority for or against a proposition would entail to no small degree the honest convictions of the elector.

We note that some misguided youths are up in arms because they can't have a special vice-president to look after Canadian affairs. Even were this ludicrous proposition feasible, in view of the fact that we have, year after year, declared by referendum (?) that the great International Typographical Union is too poverty stricken to pay its servants adequate remuneration for their services, we are inclined to the opinion that it would be rather uncharitable, to say the least, to send one of our countrymen over to Indianapolis to take chances of becoming a candidate for the poorhouse. And the fact of our administrative officers being roasted and toasted a Honolulu brown, as one correspondent puts it, for conditions over which they have no control, only goes to confirm our opinion, as above expressed, that a goodly portion of the membership is not fully informed on many propositions of vital import, and are, therefore, unable to vote intelligently.

Frank McKay, treasurer of No. 133 and a member of the Advertiser chapel, has been sitting on one of the exemption tribunals in this district. Frank can be depended upon to see that justice is handed out to all comers.

Alex Woonton, who met with an accident shortly after taking up his duties as foreman of the Garner-Young Press, is back again with the Advertiser Job Printing Company, that institution being so busy at the present time that it is compelled to have composition done outside its office.

The Free Press chapel is sending Christmas boxes to its members at the front in France.

Business as usual, with the high cost of living marking time. A. H. WHEATLEY.

INDIANA STATE CONFERENCE.

The seventeenth semi-annual convention of the Indiana Conference of Typographical Unions will be held at Columbus, Ind., January 19 and 20, under the auspices of Typographical Union No. 450. James S. Creech, the man who did so much to make the Shelbyville convention such a great success, is now devoting much time and labor to make the Columbus session the best in the history of the conference.

A large majority of the unions of the state are now affiliated with the state conference, and we hope to see all represented at the Columbus meeting. Much business of vital importance will be discussed and acted on at this session. Columbus Union will be assisted by the chamber of commerce in the entertaining of the conference, assuring the printers great entertainment during the two-days' session.

All communications in regard to the conference should be addressed to W. F. Enslen, secretary-treasurer of the state conference, 612 East Swayzee street, Marion, Ind., or James S. Creech, 922 Pearl street, Columbus, Ind. W. F. ENSLEN.

REGINA, SASK.

Trade still remains fairly brisk in this part of the world and all members are working.

Just now the only topics of conversation are the Victory loan, the general election and the military service law, which is now in force.

In connection with the general election, a labor party has been formed in Regina, and it is thought that a candidate will be nominated for the federal constituency.

At the November meeting of Regina Union considerable discussion arose on the subject of sending a delegate to the labor convention at which the labor party was formed. The majority was in favor of doing so and John D. Noonan was duly elected as delegate.

By the way: Andy Graham has done his bit; "Uncle Wiggily" Hemstreet has wiggled. A report from Harry Soutter would now be in order. Evans ("Blondy") Ross has won a commission. He is now Lieut. E. Ross. This is believed to be the first instance of a member of the International Typographical Union winning a lieutenancy from the ranks. He went away with the first contingent and is still fighting. H. JOHNSON.

SASKATOON, SASK.

Since our last report the new scale has been signed by all offices in the city and the scale committee relieved of further duties, which, contrary to expectation, were not of a very arduous nature this year. We are congratulating ourselves on securing what we think is the best scale and best agreement in the jurisdiction of the Western Canada Conference, if not in the whole of Canada, with possibly the exception of the British Columbia cities. The committee set out with a determination to obtain a flat scale, and this it was able to accomplish, and in doing so secured a very substantial increase for the floormen, viz.: from $24 days to $28, and from $25 nights to $30, with an increase of $1 to take effect next April. The former scale was $24 and $25 for floor and $25 and $27.50 machine; the present one calls for $28 and $30 flat at once, and $29 and $31 the first of April. The committee was very friendly received by all the employers, and while $29 and $31 were the figures asked by the committee, a counter proposition made by one of the offices of $28 and $30, with $29 and $31 in April, presented in the fair manner that it was, appealed to the committee as reasonable, and on its recommendation was unanimously accepted by the local and the offices signed up on that basis.

Two of the oldest members of this local withdrew their cards last month and left for other parts. E. L. Richards, foreman of the Star job department, has left for the States, and A. J. Matthews, superintendent of the Phœnix, going to the Regina Post. E. George Price, of Port Arthur, has taken Mr. Richards' place on the Star, and Mr. Huffman, formerly of Winnipeg, assumed Mr. Matthews' position on the Phœnix.

A. D. Westwood, a member of this local, died in the Home at Colorado Springs October 13 of tuberculosis. He had been a resident of the Home for about three years. His wife is now residing in Edinburgh, Scotland, and a letter of condolence was sent to her by this local, accompanied by a check for her late husband's mortuary benefit.

"Doc" Broxon, machinist on the Star, also took his card and returned to Winnipeg to take a position on the Free Press.

A recent letter from Pte. Fred Earl, formerly apprentice on the Star and now with the "boys" in France, states that he is enjoying the best of health. He had met several of the Saskatoon printers, among them being Ernie and Jim Cummings and Bob McKay, formerly an apprentice, also on the Star. Keith Perry, at one time a well-known member of this local, was also in Fred's district, and at the time he met him Keith was holding down first base in a baseball game, but was usually employed driving a Red Cross ambulance.

Complying with a resolution adopted at the recent Western Canada Conference this local took up the matter of individual towels and sanitary drinking fountains with the several employers of the city, with the result that the individual towel system was introduced in the Star, and we are given to understand that a drinking fountain has been ordered and will be installed. We have had assurances from the Phœnix office that our wishes in this respect will also be met by that office to some extent, at least.

So far as we can learn not many of our members will be affected by the first draft of the military service act, as almost all eligible members had volunteered their services previously and are now at the front. One member in class A-2 applied in person for exemption on what seemed very reasonable grounds, but was given three months to report for service.

Oliver Horsfall, a member of this local, is expected home from the front in time for Christmas dinner. Oliver has been severely wounded in the left wrist and from all accounts it is expected he will be out of the trade in the future. This will be regretted by all, as Oliver was one of the real earnest workers in the local.

The Daily Star last month carried a 400-line ad in the Toronto Globe calling itself "Saskatchewan's leading newspaper" and displaying boldly its circulation figures, 21,000.

Alex McRobbie, who has had charge of the Regina Post job department for the past year, is returning to this city to assume full charge of the Star job room, his former position before going to Regina. R. J. MOORE.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of No. 305 was held November 13. One apprentice member was elected. The election of officers will be held at the December meeting and the officers installed at the January meeting. A committee, consisting of Vice-President J. H. McCausland, Thomas Carrigan and W. H. Tilton, was appointed to make arrangements for a banquet on the evening of the January meeting, as that will be the twenty-sixth anniversary of the organization of the union.

In connection with the November meeting a "dutch" supper was served. After the eats were disposed of our recording secretary, "Gene" Lanspery, tried to put over an Irish jig, which caused the gathering to break up in a near riot. His music was a Jew's harp, played by himself.

To show their patriotism twenty-two members have bought Liberty bonds to the amount of $2,500.

Why does not No. 305 get jurisdiction over Cornwall, which is six miles from Newburgh? There are now three card men working in the Local Press office. MILTON K. BARRUS.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

What was without doubt the largest meeting the union ever held assembled at the Labor temple Sunday afternoon, October 28. Interest in the gathering had been accentuated by reason of the arbitration award, made at Indianapolis, October 20, the terms of which fixed the wage and hour conditions for San Francisco's newspapers. Oakland Typographical Union was also represented by its executive officers and a large part of the membership, conditions in the composing rooms of the newspapers of that city being affected by the decision in the San Francisco case. Notwithstanding the large attendance and the intense interest of every one present, the meeting progressed and continued for nearly four hours without an unpleasant incident, demonstrating conclusively that the typographical union can meet any condition that confronts the organization and that its membership stands as one man when the welfare of all is at stake. The arbitration award, though extremely distasteful and absolutely without warrant because it reduces wages per hour at a time when men and women in every other line of industry the world over are receiving increased rates because of readjustments made necessary by the decreased purchasing power of their wages, was accepted. The officers and the scale committee were again instructed to present a new scale, the award not having been fixed for any specified time.

An adjourned meeting of the union was held Sunday afternoon, December 4, which brought out only a small attendance, the business to be transacted only including routine affairs. T. M. Murray, of the Daily News, resigned as a delegate to the label section of the labor council and was succeeded by J. J. O'Rourke, of the Bulletin. The action of President Tracy in making a statement to the board of supervisors regarding the reliability of the Neal Publishing Company, in so far as that firm's dealings with the union are concerned, after full discussion and a complete understanding of the matter, was approved without opposition. The meeting adjourned at 3 o'clock.

Edward C. Sewell, who held an interest in the Eagle Printing Company, 59 McAllister street, a well-known member of No. 21, died at his home in this city on Friday, October 26, 1917, gastric hemorrhages being the immediate cause of death. Mr. Sewell was 44 years of age, being a native of California. He is survived by a widow, Mrs. Mildred A. Sewell. Funeral services were held Monday, October 29, at Mission Masonic temple, and were conducted by Amity Lodge, F. and A. M. The large auditorium of the temple was filled to capacity, delegations being present from the Eastern Star, Foresters of America and the typographical union. Interment was at Woodlawn cemetery.

James K. McDaniel, an old member of No. 21, died at the Yountville Soldiers' Home on Sunday, November 11, 1917, age 69 years. Funeral services were held in this city Wednesday, October 14, interment being at Cypress Lawn cemetery. Mr. McDaniel was born in Missouri, but came to California many years ago and was for a number of years active in union affairs. He is survived by a son, G. T. McDaniel, who is a prominent San Francisco dentist.

William R. Meredith, of the Recorder chapel, left Friday, November 9, for London, England, where he will offer his services to the British government in whatever capacity he may be most needed. Before his departure Mr. Meredith was presented with a regulation "fit-all" army packet and the latest style army luggage case or trunk, a gift from his associates on the Recorder.

The Stockton Evening Mail has discontinued publication, the press franchise being taken over by the Evening Record and the plant and equipment by the Morning Independent. The latter paper will remove to the building formerly occupied by the Mail.

A circular letter received from the executive council of the International Typographical Union announces that a final drive is now being made to raise the balance of the Prescott memorial fund. Only a few hundred dollars more are needed and the membership will undoubtedly cheerfully contribute the amount. The delay in the matter has been caused by the difference of opinion existing over the location of the memorial shaft. The shaft should be erected at the Union Printers Home burial plot, where it may be seen by the thousands of visitors who make the pilgrimage to Colorado Springs annually.

George E. Mitchell, representative of the International Typographical Union, was called to Eugene, Ore., recently to assist the union at that place in adjusting its new scale of prices with the employing printers of that city. He reports a satisfactory settlement.

Harvey E. Garman, clerk of the city council of Denver, Colo., with his bride, were recent visitors in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Garman left for San Diego to visit Mr. Garman's son, who is stationed at the military cantonment there. Mr. Garman will probably resign his position in Denver and take up permanent residence in California if he can conclude certain business arrangements now pending.

A recent letter from Rod Payne, at Tucson, Ariz., contains the information that Howard Keener has bought the Patagonian, published at Patagonia, Santa Cruz county, Ariz., and is now an editor, publisher and proprietor; also that West Boynton and Fred Davis are wintering in the Garden state.

Carl H. Koch, one of our young members, having been initiated in January of this year, is the latest addition to No. 21's quota of members who have been called to the colors. He left for American Lake, Wash., Monday, October 22.

Frank Spiegle, who left San Francisco July 12 for Honolulu, where he joined the small colony of American printers in that city, has returned from the Pearl of the Pacific. Spiegle is planning a world trip, expecting to spend several years in Australia, the Orient, and South Africa, returning to this country via the Suez canal. F. C. Dawson, well known in Sacramento and in this city, also returned from a vacation trip to Honolulu during the month.

William B. Rutherford, chairman of the Argonaut chapel, was recently confined at the Fairmont hospital, where he underwent an operation. J. C. Tunnell, of the Bulletin chapel, who has been indisposed for some time, writes from Los Angeles that, acting upon his doctor's advice, he will not resume active duties at the trade for some time to come. GEORGE A. TRACY.

COLUMBIA, MO.

Classes A and B of the biennial contract for the state university printing were awarded to the Missouri Publishing Company, of Mexico, Mo., and class C to the Herald-Statesman Publishing Company, of Columbia, on October 27. There were only three bids submitted for this work, the E. W. Stephens Publishing Company and the Herald-Statesman Publishing Company, both scab shops of Columbia, and the Mexico firm. It became evident to the members here early in the fight that it would be a very difficult matter to get many bids on this printing, as the firms of the larger cities refused to bid. The final outcome of the awarding of the contract was predicted by all local members here, as we were watching the situation and keeping in close touch with it. The Missouri Publishing Company, which got the big end of the contract, amounting to about $18,000 annually, is a non-union office, Mexico being a small, unorganized town. We want to say this, however, about Rolla McIntire, proprietor, that he is a very affable and broad-minded gentleman. The work that he has been unable to turn out heretofore in his small office has always been sent to union firms in the larger cities. He has a kindly feeling toward organized labor, and has made statements that lead us to believe that before many more state contracts are passed out the Missouri Publishing Company will be in possession of the union label.

The strike situation here remains practically the same. The largest shop here, E. W. Stephens Publishing Company, reports show, is a mass of confusion and incompetency, the scabs being about as disgusted as the proprietors. The scabs were started on a piece scale some time ago at the munificent sum of 6 cents per thousand ems, so reports say, but through their unbounded generosity and kindly feeling toward the employes, the proprietor has raised their scale "a few cents." They are holding out great bait to printers who travel through town, but so far have been able to capture only one card man. He carried a card from Tulsa, Okla., and went by the name of Virgil Griffith. No. 160 disposed of his case on short notice.

John P. Hamel, who has been out of town about fifteen months, has deposited his card and is working on the Columbia Morning Times.

Miss Estelle Terry, who has had her card deposited here, has withdrawn her card and is now reporting on the Wichita (Kan.) Beacon. Miss Terry rendered us valuable assistance during the strike. She was a student in journalism in the state university.

President Schwamb and Secretary Creasey were both caught in the draft. Nearly all the members here bought Liberty bonds. V. G. HAWKINS.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.

Organizing on August 1 with a charter list of nineteen, members of No. 357 went to work with a will, and we now number twenty-three. There are also two applications pending and others who are expecting to come in soon. Those familiar with conditions in this city will understand that so far the members have not been slackers, even though gains have been small. The meetings are well attended and enthusiastic, with everybody eager to do his or her part.

An important merger in the newspaper field has just been announced. The Daily State Journal was merged on November 17 with the Parkersburg News. The News secures one of the best-equipped plants in the state by the transaction. The management will discontinue publication of the Journal, this leaving Parkersburg with one morning and one evening newspaper. Just what effect the change will have on the membership of our local can not be told at this time. It is to be hoped that the majority at least may be taken care of here, as some of No. 357's best workers were employed on the Journal. L. BERSON.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Philip W. Fawley, for several years salesman and efficiency man with the Lanston Monotype Company, has been appointed foreman of the Binghamton Press office. He has worked on some of the largest newspapers in the country, besides being several years with the monotype company. He has instituted several changes in the composing room and with the new monotype caster for ad type, recently installed by the Press, expects to handle the holiday rush in good shape. His numerous friends in all parts of the country will wish him success in his new venture.

Two new members, Earl Miller and Joe Yuakoff, were initiated at the last meeting.

Joe Dowling and Fred Rauch resigned their positions on the Press and are now working at the Vail-Ballou Book Company.

Mr. Hummell, of the monotype company's instruction force, who has been here for several weeks, left recently to install a monotype outfit in Syracuse. Mr. Massey, also of the monotype instruction force, expects to leave soon to spend the holidays at his home in Texas. While here the monotype boys have made many friends, who will be sorry to see them leave for other parts.

The fall rush has started and work is very plentiful in this city. The outlook is for a bigger holiday business this year than ever before.

Rupert J. ("Zip") Oliver, one of our members who is in the ambulance service of Uncle Sam, stationed at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., was a recent visitor here. He was on a fifteen days' furlough. Many of the boys were glad to see "Zip" looking so well. John Wyrough, another one of our members, was home on a short furlough from Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J. Johnny was looking fit as a fiddle. Uncle Sam surely treats his boys in good shape.

The Press bowling team is holding its own in the local city league. The team has been strengthened by the acquisition of the bowling ability of the new foreman, Philip Fawley. Big John Walker, the able captain of the team, has the boys working hard all the time and they hope to soon be leading the league. The Press handmen have challenged the operators to bowl a series of nine games, the losers to buy the dinners for the winners. The challenge has been accepted and both sides are practicing faithfully, as a terrible battle is anticipated.

Cards received: R. E. Townsend, William H. Massey, William Williams, Philip W. Fawley, James S. Hayden. JULIAN H. WALKER.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

The November meeting of No. 20 was well attended, with President A. E. Hill in the chair. There was little business before the meeting beyond the regular work. Two new members were received by ballot—G. B. Harrison elected to full membership and H. H. Hflton to apprentice membership.

N. E. Bishop has returned after a six-months' stay in Chicago.

Adolph Bernasky has moved with his family from Indianapolis to this city. He is at work in the adroom of the Tennessean and American.

The firm of Howard & Graves, linotypers, was recently dissolved, and later became Graves & P'Pool. This firm in a few days was taken over by Mr. P'Pool. Mr. Howard is now by himself at the old stand of Howard & Graves, while Mr. P'Pool has quarters elsewhere.

C. B. Hunt, recording secretary of No. 20, is now foreman at the Rich Printing Company. He was formerly with the Benson Printing Company.

Harry Kline recently resigned his position with the Rich Printing Company, and is now with the E. T. Lowe Publishing Company.

Financial Secretary H. J. Loser informs the writer that inquiries have been made in regard to the names of members who are to enter army and navy service, but that there are at present obstacles preventing him securing an accurate list. The list will be made out later as the exemption board work progresses.

Archie Dennis, of the Brandon chapel, has gone for service in Uncle Sam's navy.

J. W. Lowrence, until recently foreman of the E. T. Lowe Publishing Company, has purchased an interest in the Organ Printing Company and has entered upon his duties there.

On October 24 Sterling B. Shearon, perhaps the oldest and one of the best-known members of No. 20, died after a brief illness. He had been a member fifty-five years, and had held nearly every office within the gift of the organization. Mr. Shearon was a native of Nashville, having been born on Church street, June 1, 1839. He received a liberal education, and early in the civil war enlisted on the side of the confederacy. He was wounded and captured at Perryville in 1862, remaining in prison until January, 1863, when he was released and returned to his command, serving until the close. Mr. Shearon was an elder in Grace Presbyterian church, a man of sterling worth and character, and in his death not only has No. 20 suffered the loss of a loved and respected member, but the city has lost a valued and upright citizen. The funeral service was held from Grace Presbyterian church, and the remains laid to rest at Mount Olivet, escorted to the last resting place by members of Company B, Confederate Veterans.

John L. Ambrose, general manager of the Ambrose Printing Company, went to Atlanta the first of November, where he made application, was examined and accepted for aerial service in the United States aviation corps. He was later called to a school of instruction, and will finally be assigned to the flying squadron. Mr. Ambrose is a son of J. H. Ambrose, treasurer of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway, and is a splendid young man in every way. He holds a strong place in the respect and esteem of every employe of the Ambrose Printing Company, and, while they regret his departure, he carries with him the hearty well wishes of all in his patriotic determination.

Work in most of the book and job shops has picked up some, but others are very dull at present. There are plenty of men on hand to take care of the situation.

Information has been received by H. J. Loser to the effect that Col. M. R. Grigsby, who has been seriously ill in an Indianapolis hospital for some time, is improving. Members of No. 20 will be glad to learn this. E. ROY MOORE.

LIMA, OHIO.

At the last meeting of No. 296 officers were nominated for the next year, one new member obligated, and four applications voted on. Oscar North, delegate to the Ohio Typographical Conference at Akron, gave a very interesting report of the big meet, and was given a unanimous vote of thanks.

F. L. Van Pelt, secretary-treasurer, has resigned his position on the Gazette, and purchased a south side job shop. "Van" seems to be getting his share of the south side printing, and has the best wishes of all the boys.

Several changes have been made in the past month. Clyde Weaver, of the News, took a little trip out to Kansas City. The boys accused him of purchasing a round-trip ticket, but Clyde says the climate didn't agree with his delicate constitution. Ralph Warren, of the South Side Star, took out a traveler, and is seeing the west; Paul Runneals, of the Gazette chapel, taking his situation. Alfred Gleaves, of the Times-Democrat, shifted to the Gazette, and "Browney" Brown is holding down the machine job on the Times.

The writer was married on Saturday evening, October 20, to Miss Gladys Jackson, a young lady of this city. They reside on West Wayne street.

"Shorty" Arnold is back in town again, subbing on the Gazette. Several arrivals and several departures are reported, but everything seems settled down for the holiday rush.

Work is good and plenty of help.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The Post management granted the employes an increase to meet the high cost of living. The Times-Star management granted the increase some time ago. It is now rumored that the morning papers are about to get in line. In appreciation of the efforts of M. L. Gross, father of the Post chapel, the members adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, The members of the Post chapel were agreeably surprised by receiving an advance in wages on November 3, 1917, eighteen months before the ending of the scale contract of Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3 with the Post Publishing Company; and,

Whereas, It is our belief that we are deeply in debt to M. L. Gross, father of the Post chapel, for his personal efforts, begun in February, 1917, to secure for the members of the Post chapel some substantial recognition on the part of the management of the Post of the predicament of their employes because of the growing cost of living and no relief to be secured through the parent body, Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, until the expiration of the wage agreement; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Post chapel, in special session assembled, extend to M. L. Gross, in appreciation of his labors in our behalf, out heartfelt and sincere thanks; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions in some suitable form for presentation be presented to our worthy brother.

The angel of death last month invaded the home of Harry Koogle, well known among the oldtimers, his estimable wife passing away after a long illness. In recent years Mr. Koogle has been engaged in the confectionery business. The Commercial Tribune chapel, where Mr. Koogle was last employed, sent a beautiful floral design.

Ben Lambers, for years foreman of the Hennegan plant, has established the Lambers Printing Company at 621 Walnut street. Ben's legion of friends wish him success in the new venture.

Harry Engelhardt was elected mayor of Norwood and James Mullaney councilman-at-large of Cincinnati. Both have been members of No. 3 for years.

Johnny Stack, of Los Angeles, recently mailed several copies of the Good Samaritan to friends in Cincinnati. The sheet grows better with every issue and is the best antidote for gloom on the market.

No. 3 at the November meeting contracted for liberal space in the Scranton convention souvenir. A. J. Langan, secretary of the committee, is working hard to make the convention a success and his many friends hope to see his efforts crowned with glory. Scranton has a bunch of live wires that never met the word failure. Give them a boost.

A neat sum was realized by the committee to look after the comfort of No. 3's soldiers. Christmas they will all receive handsome presents, and the committee is continued for the duration of the war to see that our boys want for nothing in the way of comfort. A more deserving set of young men never graced any organization.

At the November meeting of No. 3 the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company was taken off the "we do not patronize list." This company signed up and now has a thoroughly equipped union printshop.

Ohio had a close call at the November election, the state going wet by about 1,200. Rumors were spread over the country that some rough work was pulled off in the count, even going so far as to say Cincinnati tabulators favored the wet end. The count was as fair as it was possible to make it. In fact, the writer is personally acquainted with the three members of the election board, and they would not stand for any rough work. It will make job printing good next year. A race of this kind awakens interest and makes tight ones on both ends loosen up. JAMES W. DOUGHERTY, SR.

Charles H. Rembold, the benevolent manager of the Cincinnati Times-Star, again showed his appreciation and kindness by having framed the group picture of the convention held at Colorado Springs, 1917, and presenting it to the chapel. The members of the Times-Star chapel were highly elated and heralded it quite extensively among the printing fraternity and extended their most heartfelt thanks.

The members of the Cincinnati Post chapel were certainly made glad last month by receiving an increase in salary of $3 per week. The following resolutions presented by the members were heartily adopted by Typographical Union No. 3:

Whereas, The Cincinnati Post, with the week ended November 3, 1917, began paying all members of Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3 in its employ $3 more than the established scale of prices agreed upon with this union, which does not expire until May 1, 1919; and,

Whereas, This additional compensation has been given to our members without exacting any obligation, but solely with the idea of enabling the employes to maintain the standard of living to which they have been accustomed; therefore, be it

Resolved, by Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, That it is with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that we receive this news of generosity on the part of the Post Publishing Company, particularly so at this time, because during the past few years the cost of everything that enters into the making of a daily newspaper has increased with such amazing rapidity. Be it further

Resolved, That the endeavors of the Post to assist those of our members on its pay roll to meet the increased cost of living thrust upon us by the world-devastating conflict raging in Europe is appreciated by every member of our union, and we tender to the Post Publishing Company our heartiest and sincerest thanks for its thoughtfulness. Be it further Resolved, These resolutions be spread upon our minutes, that a copy be transmitted to the Post Publishing Company through Frank W. Rostock, the Post editor-in-chief, of whose efforts in connection with this unselfish act we take due cognizance, and that a copy be sent to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL for publication.

JOSEPH F. ILLIG.

MONTREAL, P. Q.

Notwithstanding the frequency with which scales are negotiated in the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, every time this important matter has to be dealt with new problems present themselves, local coloring is a determining factor, and there arises in the minds of those who undertake this unthankful but necessary task the disturbing element of doubt as to whether just the right action has been taken in carrying out the desire of the membership, the final court of appeal. A good text for a scale committee would be somewhat in this strain: "If ye thinkest that thou canst satisfy all, verily, verily ye will be sadly disappointed." The one and only motive that should actuate a committee of men who set out to negotiate a scale is to endeavor to play the game fairly and impartially, respecting the rights of others, tenaciously adhering to what is conceded to be only common justice for the membership, viewing the question from the broad standpoint of the International Typographical Union as a whole; procuring the best terms for the greatest number, obliterating self and putting forth every effort to so conduct the business that the union as such shall command and demand the respect of all who have dealings with it.

These fundamentals were in the minds of the scale committee appointed by Thomas Black, president of Montreal Union No. 176, and composed of the following: "Stoney" Jackson (Herald), "Tom" O'Keefe (Gazette), Alex Hird (Mail, now defunct —not Alex, but the paper), and H. E. Smith (Star). The work assigned to the committee was the negotiating of a new scale of prices and conditions with the morning and evening proprietors, to take the place of the one which was expiring on September 15.

The difficulties that presented themselves as the negotiations proceeded loomed so large as to appear almost insurmountable. There were several local aspects of the question that offered an opening for an acrimonious controversy. Notwithstanding the temptation to become personal and resort to bitter reproach, such a course was studiously avoided, and throughout the whole of the negotiations a spirit of courteous forbearance was manifested. The demand of the union was for certain modifications of the existing contract, the abolition of piecework, an advance of wages from $23 to $30 per week and changes in keeping with International law. At the first session the proprietors' representatives offered an increase of $1, which President Black would not consider. The view held by the union was that the cost of the necessities of life had mounted so high that the increase of $7 per week asked for was not excessive; indeed, compared with the year 1910, when the wage was $15, there had been a rise in living expenses equivalent to 108 per cent. It was conceded, of course, that the publishers were also sufferers in the enhanced cost of material utilized in the production of a newspaper, and due consideration was given to this phase of the question.

When the $1 was rejected as totally inadequate, the next problem reached was that of piecework.

The proprietors desired to retain the right to adopt either a time or piece work system at will, and, as no progress seemed possible, the matter was laid before the special meeting of the union, and by a unanimous vote the members decided that piecework would have to go. Another meeting of the scale negotiating committee was convened, and, whether arbitration was in the minds of the newspaper proprietors or not, it certainly did not find a responsive echo on the part of the union representatives. Several meetings followed, but nothing was really accomplished, and time was on the wing. Indeed, as matters had every indication of dragging on after the old scale had expired, the union indicated that the back pay would have to be considered, and Mr. Slack, the manager of the Gazette, signified his willingness to pay the new scale from September 15 and for any reasonable time thereafter.

As an outcome of a further study of the situation, another offer was made of $25.50, and the proprietors of the evening papers withdrew their demand for piecework and agreed to the present priority clause as it stands amended by the referendum taken on this question. This was laid before the union at the October meeting, but the offer was not favorably entertained. A vote of confidence was passed in the committee, which was instructed to proceed with the negotiations, and to call in the aid of the International officials in order to arrive at a speedy decision one way or the other. This was done, and President Black received word that First Vice-President Walter W. Barrett would undertake the difficult task of endeavoring to untangle the knotty points and bring about a settlement on a fair basis.

The men of Montreal felt that the International president had fully recognized the gravity of the situation, and the appointment of Mr. Barrett gave a distinct feeling of satisfaction and confidence to the membership of No. 176. Business delayed the first vice-president, but on Saturday, October 13, Mr. Barrett arrived from Indianapolis, and the members of the committee were there to greet him, as well as Secretary James Philip, Representative "Jim" Drury, Harry Jones (night foreman of the Gazette) and "Jack" Letham (chairman of the Star chapel). There was no brass band on hand, for the presence of the International official was not in the nature of a social function, but stern, unrelenting business was the order of the day. Mr. Barrett at once intimated that the matter to be considered should be taken up immediately, and on the following day he saw several members of the committee and other visitors. Mr. Barrett favorably impressed all who met him by his calm, businesslike manner, yet running all through his make-up is that saving quality of humor which helped to dispel many a dark and lowering cloud of doubt and difficulty.

It is unnecessary to enlarge upon the many interviews, deliberations, etc., only to say that for two busy weeks—a record of time for an International official to remain in any one city—Mr. Barrett and the committee plunged into the matter and struggled with the problem from every conceivable standpoint. The loyal, kindly, wise guidance that actuated every action of the International Typographical Union official stamped him a real man, without any frills, but intensely in earnest, and judicial in the weighing of every point. Once Mr. Barrett had become conversant with the Montreal situation, he never deviated from the path that led to a fair and just conclusion. He never insisted on imposing his views in an arbitrary fashion, but the arguments used never failed to convince that his viewpoint was shorn of all narrow prejudices and looked only to the intent and purpose of the laws of the International body. In dealing with the matter of the publication of the Standard on Saturday afternoon, which was being produced at overtime rate, in accordance with the award of the previous year, Mr. Barrett pointed out that the International Typographical Union had spent a vast sum of money to inaugurate an eight-hour day, and the spirit of that law was still in the forefront in all deliberations. The proprietors of the Standard had asked to be enabled to produce their publication on a single-time basis, and Mr. Barrett took the stand that they were within their rights, and whatever the feelings of the committee and others may have been, it was obvious that the request could not be reasonably refused in view of the reading of the law. On the other hand, when there seemed to be doubt in the minds of some as to whether the back pay would be forthcoming, owing to the lapse of time, Mr. Barrett was just as insistent on behalf of the men, and, up to the last moment, refused to submit any proposition that did not provide for the payment of the new wage schedule from September 15; and he won his point, and a few thousand dollars went into the pockets of the employes as a result of the stand he took. When the evening situation was about concluded, Mr. Slack, of the Gazette, was visited, and the committee found him keenly alive to the necessity of having a contented staff. Mr.

Slack is a business man from top to bottom, and he has fully grasped the principle that good men are worth good remuneration, and this he pays, with results that are eminently satisfactory to all, and guarantees one of the best offices and staffs in the city. There was a little hitch, at the ninth hour, relative to the piecework system, but all ended amicably, and the resultant morning scale is a splendid one, and benefits other night hands to the same extent.

The momentous meeting of the union was called for October 27, and the excitement was great. Prior to the meeting, Mr. Barrett had several conversations with those higher up, and history will no doubt show that he did the right thing. When President Black called the meeting to order there was a packed house, and the men behaved in a manner that was alike creditable and magnanimous. As the scale provisions were read, many points that had been counted locally of immense importance had been modified and changed, and there were disappointing features, which were fully recognized by the committee in common with the members. But to the everlasting credit of the newsmen of No. 176, they acted in a spirit that was remarkably free from personal sentiment, and accepted the findings and results of the scale committee's work in such a manner as to prove conclusively that they were men enough to rise to the occasion and place on record the belief that those who had negotiated the scale had done the best possible under all the circumstances. The result may be summed up as follows:

All day hands receive an increase from $23 to $26 for two years; $26.50 for one year; $27 for one year; $27.50 for one year (five years).

All night hands receive an increase from $24 (operators, $25) to $28.50 for two years, and $29.50 for three years.

Overtime: Price and one-half for three hours; double time after; double time for holidays and Sundays on day shifts.

Piecework abolished in all offices for the first time in the history of Montreal Union.

In conclusion, Montreal places on record, in big type, its deep appreciation of the work of Mr. Barrett, and when he left Montreal on that Sunday morning he left behind him many, many friends who will ever remember Walter W. Barrett as a perfect gentleman, and a credit to the great International Typographical Union. To President Black is tendered the thanks of No. 176 for his courteous and loyal conduct through all the trying situations that arose; and among others who are to be thanked are "Jim" Drury (you know him), "Jack" Letham, and the office manager, our only "Jim" Philip—presumably Scotch.

H. E. Smith.

It is with deep regret and much sympathy for their families that we chronicle the death of two of our members, and also to the losses sustained by death in the families of three others.

Gerald J. Mahoney died at Rainhill, near England, on October 6, of general paralysis, and was interred in St. Helen's cemetery nearby. "Jerry" was well known among the newspaper members, being for many years employed on the Montreal Herald, and passed through the famous Herald disaster. It has been admitted that Jerry never completely recovered from that strenuous nerve-racking experience of being left clinging to the window and seeing his machine going down among the wreckage. He leaves a widow and three sons.

Gunner Kerwin Coughlin died in France, the result of an accident. He came to Montreal from Kalamazoo, Mich., and prior to enlistment had been employed in the newsrooms of the Daily Mail and Montreal Star. He leaves a widow and two children. His chapel (the Star) had just forwarded a Christmas parcel.

Sympathy is extended to Jim Dempsey, of the Herald Press, on the death of his wife; to Percy Hayward, of the Sterling Press, on the sudden death of his wife after so short an illness, and to the Messrs. Beacon on the recent death of one of their brothers. Percy Hayward had been married just six months.

Word has been received that Fred Thomas, of the S. B. Foote chapel, has been admitted to No. 22 casualty clearing station, suffering from gas poisoning. William J. Alty, son of Tom Alty, of the Gazette news chapel, has been reported from No. 64 casualty clearing station as suffering from gas poisoning. Victor R. Edward, son of John T. Edward, vice-president of the union, has been admitted to No. 149 field ambulance hospital, suffering from gunshot wounds. Murdock Gordon has again been reported wounded. He was the recipient of the military medal recently, and before enlisting was an apprentice with the Financial Times Press.

Both the chapels of the Gazette and Star have forwarded Christmas presents of a very useful nature to all the members of their respective chapels now overseas. Other chapels please note.

In the casualty lists recently published appeared the name of Lachlan Fraser. Many members thought it was our "Lauchie." The writer states that the number as printed does not correspond with that held by our member.

The following extract from the Scottish Typographical Journal will be of interest to the members of the Herald Press chapel, and to jobmen locally, and which is as follows:

A signal honor has been conferred on Private Peter Taylor, M. M. Lewis gun section, cyclists' battalion, for bringing down a German aeroplane in France, thus saving the life of an allied airman and preventing the discovery of a British battery. His officer wired congratulations to Private Taylor on his excellent shooting in bringing down our first "Hun" bird. Private Taylor has been two years at the front, and was wounded once.

The military service act has not at the time of writing placed any of our members in the first class on the local honor roll.

The local has subscribed $300 and the allied printing trades council $200 toward the Victory loan. Many of our members are sporting buttons denoting them as bondholders.

The label committee is now active, and a printed list of label offices should by this time be in the hands of all the members. Printed matter not bearing the label, and especially election literature, will be received by any of the committee, Messrs. Carter, Gollifer, Tilley, Read and Macdonald. Don't leave it to the committee to do all the collecting. Let us all unite.

Eddie Tardif attended the labor party convention held Saturday, November 3 and 4, and was appointed to the constitution committee. Over two hundred delegates from all over the Province of Quebec reported.

The local trades and labor council has recently been passing through some stormy sessions. It looks like new blood will have to be sent. In the opinion of the writer, the withdrawal of Gus Francq from the local labor movement is a distinct loss. While not seeing eye to eye on all his activities, he was whole-hearted in whatever duty he took up.

The printers' bowling league, which holds its weekly contests at the Steel alleys, is enjoying a most successful season and attracting a large attendance of bowling fans. Jim Menzies was elected president for the season and Herb Mold, secretary. Tom Flawn, retiring president, was elected honorable president. The following is a list of the teams and players: Gazette—Macpherson, Strickland, Halsey, Trepanier. Witness—Menzies, Hughes, Gibbs, Mould, Kenney. Star—Byrant, Fitzgerald, Wright, Carter, Brittain, Tattley. Herald—Pyke, Arthurs, Armstrong, Houghton, Johnston. Financial Times—Robinson, Keenan, Muir, Vidal, Taylor. Southam—Vincent, Ewing, Irons, Cairns, Rollins. S. B. Foote—Drew, Charon, Baxter, Roberts, Genets. Lovell—Janelle, Potter, Barrette, Denman, Bristow.

From information to hand the strike of the printing pressmen and assistants has been settled with the employing printers' association. There now remains only one large concern not signed. Messrs. Cantwell, Edward and Schmytz are investigating a case of a member of No. 176 going to work as a pressman during this strike.

The legal fight begun by D. Lorne McGibbon to retain publication of the Montreal Herald under the Herald Publishing Company, instead of permitting Lord Atholstan, proprietor of the Montreal Star, who owns a large share of the Herald stock, to get possession of the paper and have it published by the British American Publishing Company (formed for this special purpose), has been settled out of court, and the Herald stays in statu quo.

It is stated that the total claims in the liquidation of the Montreal Daily Mail and Evening News amounted to about $535,000, numbering over two hundred creditors, 124 being former employes, whose claims to unpaid salary vary from $25 to $1,600.

The attendance at the November meeting was miserable, compared to the attendance at the special meeting held the Saturday night previous, at which the newspaper scale was passed through.

The rebate system seems to be working out the attendance problem in many cities, from the accounts in THE JOURNAL notes.

The Gazette has installed a Ludlow caster in the news composing room.

The news scale has been settled with the Jewish proprietors and a contract satisfactory to all has been the outcome.

The members of the Gazette news chapel presented Vice-President Barrett with a small souvenir on the occasion of his recent visit to Montreal in connection with the newspaper scale situation.

Business conditions fairly good, but the high cost of living and the want of energy by the food controller is still with us. JAMES PHILIP.

Jacques-Cartier No. 145.

Our last meeting was one of the best attended. Most of the time was spent in the election of delegates to different organizations—labor party, allied printing trades council, trades and labor council and two delegates to the convention called by the Dominion Trades Congress, according to the wish expressed at its convention in Ottawa in September last, having for its object the establishment of an independent labor party in Canada along the lines of the British labor party. The convention was held in the labor temple of this city, when 200 delegates of the different labor organizations of the Province of Quebec decided to found the labor party of Canada, section of the Province of Quebec.

Very few of our members will be affected by the military service act, especially under the first call. The question of keeping our members in good standing has been decided long ago, since we have a few members already kept in good standing.

The Mercantile Printing Company is the first shop under the jurisdiction of No. 145 to adopt the allied printing trades label, having a completely organized plant. Congratulations, and hope that many will follow.

Our euchre-dance committee has reported work going fine. Every one help.

R. Valiquette, an oldtimer of No. 145, lately of No. 176, is back again with his original local, and is now hitting the keyboard of the third machine for the Mercantile Printing Company.

The pressmen trouble in Montreal is not quite finished; nevertheless, the last news is that an understanding is soon to be agreed upon with the few shops still unsettled. The vice-president from headquarters paid a short visit to No. 145 at our last meeting, and we have had the pleasure of hearing a very eloquent address in which he explained the legitimate demands of the pressmen and confidence in an early adjustment and asking our moral support.

Le Reveil, which ceased its publication some time ago, was sold at auction.

The commercial printing business seems fair and newspapers are also very busy, some employing extra hands, owing mostly to the general elections to be held this month. ARTHUR LECLAIRE.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

There seems to be a more spirited race for delegatorial honors to the Missouri Valley Conference in January at Oklahoma City at this writing than usual, and No. 40 will no doubt elect its full quota of delegates. At the last meeting a committee was appointed for the purpose of making arrangements for a ball to raise funds for the purpose, and the committee announced December 5 as the date for the function. The general committee has selected its sub-committees and, from all reports, it looks as if the affair will be a success both socially and financially. And, by Gadd, No. 40 will land some live wires in Oklahoma City next January to keep the Ball a-rolling.

The book and job scale committee made its report at the last meeting, and after some minor changes have arranged for a scale of $24.50 per week for both hand and machine men for day work and $25 for night work. From the discussion which took place we are of the opinion that the majority of the members think the scale is a very reasonable one, considering the high cost of living and the various war taxes now placed on the workingman. The old scale will expire on the last day of December, and let us hope the job men will start the new year with the slight increase.

The News-Press has installed two new Mergenthalers, a No. 9 and an 18, and the Gazette, not to be outdone by its rival, duplicated the order.

Louis Campbell, for many years associated with the American Printing Company, accepted a situation on the News-Press, and is some help in filling the columns of the paper with slugs from the "Merg."

The relief committee has not made a report for the past three months, not even a headache being reported by the committee, and St. Joseph has not gone dry, either. We hope the health of our boys still continues until the relief fund reaches the maximum.

T. M. Jenkins, who attended the Colorado Springs convention, stopped off in St. Joseph to see some of the friends he met there at the convention, and was forced to work a week before his departure for Kansas City and Chicago. Jenkins made many friends here during his short stay.

Guy Hart, who learned his trade on the Gazette, and who has been one of the make-ups for years, resigned his situation to accept one in Oklahoma City. Guy was well liked by his associates and all wish him good luck in his new field.

Earle ("Jerry") Wing, formerly foreman of the Combe Printing Company, resigned that position and has gone to farming, and occasionally puts in a night on the Gazette to keep in practice. He brought in a sack of pumpkins lately for some of the force, and they were so small that one of the men began to peel his, thinking it was an orange.

Hallis Alexander, who has been a resident of the Union Printers Home during the summer, has returned to St. Joseph in fine condition, and is now subbing on the Gazette. He was one of the best waiters at the Home day barbecue and saw to it that all the boys from Boston got plenty of beans.

J. E. Murphy.

PASADENA, CAL.

Tom Schultz, for several years an active member of No. 583, is now editor and manager of the Peoria (Ariz.) Enterprise, a new paper in a prosperous town. It carries the union label.

The printers of the Star-News got out a small paper called "The Schrapnel," containing items of interest and much very original dope, and sent it to the Pasadena printers now in the different cantonments. Messrs. Bramhall and Watson are the proud ammunition assemblers, or at least they were proud until they saw how many "bulls" there were in the paper. However, The Schrapnel will be published monthly and Mr. Bramhall has offered a reward for each typographical error found in the next issue.

President Swerdfiger has returned from his trip to the Hawaiian Islands and his whole conversation is about the great volcano.

John Westring had a swift ride to Los Angeles recently in the police auto. No, he wasn't a prisoner. He was taken over to see if he could identify any of the loot which the police uncovered when they captured a crook, for John had been relieved of about $200 worth during a Sunday afternoon, when burglars entered his home.

The new scale committee is composed of Messrs. Bramhall, Hartzell, Stevens, Benedict and Gair.

Among those mentioned last month as having abandoned the pay-envelop route was Ed H. Morse. Mr. Morse came to Pasadena twelve years ago and took charge of the battery of machines on the News, thereby relieving several tired-out would-be machinists of a lot of worry. The new machinist soon brought order out of junk and remained on the job until the merger of the Star and the News. He is rightly regarded as a genius—an inventive genius—and the linotype carries some of his ideas. Perhaps the most practical device he has produced is a gas-controller which may be used for linotype machines or for anything where gas is used. There are those who can testify that during the three years that this controller was used in the old News office they were not once bothered with metal being either too hot or too cold. Mr. Morse several years ago made an eight-inch reflecting telescope, frame and all, and set it up in his yard, and in order to do this he perfected the machinery to grind the glass. When Ed has finished a big day's work on his No. 19 linotype, grinding out slugs for the trade, and there seems to be "nothing to do till tomorrow," he reads the Scientific American or enjoys dust-covered classics.

Philip G. Gair.

BAY CITY, MICH.

Conditions here at present time are normal, with work just a little more than regular forces can handle. The war thus far has taken none of our members, but nothing for the immediate future can be prophesied. Liberty bonds are a popular idea among printers here, most of them owning some and more waiting for subsequent issues.

C. H. S. Cummings, an old Bay City printer of twenty years ago, has returned, deposited his card, and is enjoying visits, exchanging reminiscences with the oldtimers. Albert C. Clark, who for twelve years occupied a "sit" on the machine side at the Times chapel, has departed for warmer climes. He writes a letter dated Miami, Fla., announcing wonderful weather, which lately has required an addition to his wardrobe in the form of a Palm Beach suit. Quite a difficult thing for us "northerners" to imagine when November blasts and shivers play tag up and down a fellow's spine. (We won't say a word about coal bills.)

At the last meeting election of officers was held and a capable list of men were selected (with the exception possibly of the vice-president) for the ensuing year. With the co-operation of the entire local, we should enjoy a banner year.

Al L. Maus.

DULUTH, MINN.

Harry H. Turner, for several years past proofreader on the Herald, has gone to Florida with the avowed purpose to engage in the occupation of horticulture under more salubrious climatic conditions than obtain at the head of the lakes.

Herbert Zuelkhe departed for Milwaukee, but returned the next day. Conditions in the port of Superior interrupted his passage.

Billie Eich came in from his annual hunting expedition and was kept busy explaining to the game warden that it wasn't him that shot all the deer in St. Louis county.

H. V. Looten, of the Marshall-Wells chapel, is reported on the sick list.

At the last meeting of the union reports on the vote to increase the local dues 50 cents a month for each member to be used in maintaining the sick fund, were read. The proposition was defeated.

The Wendtlandt Printing and Binding Company has signed the book and job scale of No. 136 and made application to the allied printing trades council for the use of the label.

The Herald has made application for the label and the allied printing trades council has the matter in hand pending the organization of the stereotypers working there.

The F. H. Lounsberry Company has installed a monotype keyboard and caster. This makes four of these machines now operating in this jurisdiction.

SOLDIERS' DEPARTMENT OF REMEMBRANCE.

At the present time, while our country is at war, and the young men of our country are called upon to fight for our flag, we all know we must fight, we can not all go to the front. But fight we must and hard to win democracy.

Now we all know many of our young members were selected to fight, and perhaps to give up their life for the noble cause—and they are doing it.

So the members of No. 3, that are at home decided to fight—not with guns, etc., but with ammunition of "remembrance." A committee was appointed, of which Charles Mathews was made chairman, he having a son, Stanley Mathews, corporal, in the Rainbow division, now "Somewhere in France."

This committee started to do something immediately. They sent out tickets, stating by a contribution of 25 cents a ticket you would be given an opportunity to procure a wrist watch. Well, it didn't take long, and the wherewithal to accumulate a fund for the boys at the front and their Christmas gifts were assured. For this purpose they at first started the fighting, but due to the generous offering that emanated from the printers at home, it was decided not only to use it for Christmas gifts, but to use part of the fund for the soldier boys' "department of remembrance." That is, if at any time the committee should think it advisable, and the soldier boys need a little change, they will forward same. This is indeed a grand undertaking. "For you know our boys are going all the way—why should we not go half?"

We believe that all local unions should do likewise and if perhaps they would desire further information in reference to same, write to Chairman Charles Mathews, care of Typographical Union No. 3, Cincinnati, Ohio. JOSEPH F. ILLIG.

OFFICIAL MATTERS

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL

ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH
AT ROOMS 640–650 NEWTON CLAYPOOL BUILDING
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

J. W. HAYS, Editor and Publisher.

Entered at the postoffice, Indianapolis, Ind., as second-class matter.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—One dollar per annum to any part of the United States or Canada; foreign, $1.50 per annum; single copies, 10 cents each.

To insure prompt insertion, all official matter and communications should reach this office BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF THE MONTH PRECEDING PUBLICATION.

All letters and remittances should be addressed to the editor and publisher.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES AND CORRESPONDENTS.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

Communications for the correspondence department of THE JOURNAL must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. No communication will be published that does not bear the full name of the writer.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a cardholder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 20th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of a list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. Hays, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

YANKEELAND.

[It may be interesting to know that this song-and-dance act was composed long before the United States soldier boys ever stepped a foot in France. The writer served in two United States regular artilleries and the national guard of New Jersey, and has a young son in the United States naval service. Any one who wishes is at liberty to adapt it for private entertainment. The composer has had some success with dramatic composition. —O. W. HUMPHREY, Home Resident.]

Characters—Uncle Sam; American soldier boy dressed in khaki; girl in French vivandierre costume.

Nature of act requires quick, bouncing dance step; must be danced and sung with vim and vigor.

PRELUDE.

Yankee Doodle.

Yankee Doodle came to town,
Riding on a pony.
They stuck a feather in his hat
And called him Macaroni.
(Fife and drum accompaniment.)

SONG AND DANCE.

Old-time air—Captain Jenks.

FIRST STANZA.

The Stars and Stripes abroad shall go;
I'm a soldier in the army.
To France and England, friends, you know;
I'm a soldier in the army.
(Repeat last two lines.)

SECOND STANZA.

In Germany and Turkey land;
I'm a soldier in the army.
The American flag will take its stand;
I'm a soldier in the army.
(Repeat last two lines.)

THIRD STANZA.

The Yankee boys our flag will flaunt;
I'm a soldier in the army.
And nothing will their courage daunt;
I'm a soldier in the army.
(Repeat last two lines.)

FOURTH STANZA.

The Hun, and Turk, and Bulgar queer;
I'm a soldier in the army.
Will find them brave, they have no fear;
I'm a soldier in the army.
(Repeat last two lines.)

FIFTH STANZA.

The girls of France will greet the Stars;
I'm a soldier in the army.
And meet the Yankee sons of Mars;
I'm a soldier in the army.
(Repeat last two lines.)

SIXTH STANZA.

The American girl will do and dare;
I'm a soldier in the army.
And she'll salute the Russian bear;
I'm a soldier in the army.
(Repeat last two lines.)

FINALE.

Yankee Doodle, ha, ha, ha!
Yankee Doodle dandy!
Yankee Doodle, ha, ha, ha!
Yankee Doodle dandy!

(Wave small American, French and English flags. Fife and drum accompaniment.)

FOR REVENUE ONLY.

Who robs, in prices set on food,
The widow and her orphan brood?
Who seems possessed of little soul,
And only loves his big bank roll?
The food shark.

When winter whitens town and wold,
And icy winds their revels hold,
Who robs alike the rich and poor,
Nor cares what pain the last endure?
The coal baron.

Who makes your dollar's power less?
Who adds to poverty's distress?
Who now robs wives and little ones
Of brave men gone to fight the Huns?
The speculator.

Though clouds of foreign menace lower,
And dangers threaten every hour,
Who harkens to the voice of greed,
Regardless of their country's need?
The food shark,
The coal baron,
The speculator.

Indianapolis, Ind. SAM CHRISTY.

SUPPLEMENT TO

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL

J. W. HAYS, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA
ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH

VOLUME LI AUGUST 1917 NUMBER TWO

REPORT OF PRESIDENT

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—In no period of its history has the International Typographical Union made greater progress than during the fiscal year which ended on May 31, 1917. During the past twelve months the gross earnings of the members of this union increased nearly four million dollars as compared with our earnings for the preceding year. Here are the figures:

Earnings for the year ending May 31, 1917	$66,652,431
Earnings for the year ending May 31, 1916	62,711,805
Increase for the year ending May 31, 1917	$3,940,626

Since the gross earnings of our members reflect our annual sales of skill, efficiency and service, the remarkable increase for 1917 is most gratifying. This increase is more than double the gain made in 1916. Here is the comparison:

Increase in earnings for the year ending May 31, 1917	$3,940,626
Increase in earnings for the year ending May 31, 1916	1,556,520
Increase in 1917 over the gain in 1916	$2,384,106

The steady progress made by the members of this union in recent years is shown in the following summary of our gross earnings for the past nine years:

For the year ending May 31, 1909, our members earned	$40,293,738
For the year ending May 31, 1910, our members earned	45,602,944
For the year ending May 31, 1911, our members earned	49,770,668
For the year ending May 31, 1912, our members earned	53,378,902
For the year ending May 31, 1913, our members earned	56,944,486
For the year ending May 31, 1914, our members earned	61,050,332
For the year ending May 31, 1915, our members earned	61,155,285
For the year ending May 31, 1916, our members earned	62,711,805
For the year ending May 31, 1917, our members earned	66,652,431

The average earnings per member for the past year shows an increase of $45.25 per member over the average for the preceding year. The following table shows these average earnings for the past nine years:

Majority in Favor of Job Arbitration Agreement, 12,475.

On May 23 last the members of this International Union again emphatically reaffirmed their repeated declarations in favor of conciliation and arbitration. The majority vote in favor of the job arbitration agreement is most convincing. At another time and in another place some of the disreputable methods used in futile attempts to defeat the adoption of this agreement may be discussed in detail.

Out of a total vote of 41,039 the proposition received a majority of 12,475 votes. There were 26,757 votes in favor of the agreement and 14,282 votes against it.

Returns were received from 574 subordinate unions. In 441 of these unions the agreement was endorsed, in 11 the vote was evenly divided, and in 122 there was a majority against the adoption of the agreement.

Again the statement may be reiterated: The members of the International Typographical Union are in favor of a policy of conciliation and arbitration in the adjustment of disputes with employers and in the readjustment of wage scales.

Having voted to enter into this agreement with the Closed Shop Division it becomes the duty of the members of this union to co-operate fully with employers in the formation of local closed shop divisions in every jurisdiction. The commercial branch of our industry demands this full co-operation, and we must not be slackers.

New International Arbitration Agreements Issued.

Up to and including June 13 last, 172 International arbitration agreements for 1917-1922 have been issued, of which 140 cover composing rooms and 32 are for mailing departments. On the corresponding date in 1912, 132 agreements for 1912-1917 had been issued, of which 111 covered composing rooms and 21 were for mailing departments.

Scale negotiations conducted under the provisions of this agreement during the past year have resulted in decisions favorable to our subordinate unions in practically every instance. Failure to observe the explicit provisions of the code of procedure has resulted in one appeal, which is now pending before the International Board. The proceedings of the several meetings of the International Board of Arbitration are included in the report of the executive council.

Situations of Members in War Service.

Immediately following the declaration of war between the United States and Germany, action was taken by your International officers to protect the situations of members called for service during the war.

At a meeting of the executive council of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America held on April 20 the following action was taken:

That the executive council of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America, in session assembled, recommends to its members that in all cases where employes leave the employment of its members to enter the service of the country for war purposes of any character, that such employes have their employment restored to them without prejudice at the termination of such war service.

It will be noted that the above is a recommendation, and to be made effective a memorandum covering its acceptance must be agreed to by employers, signed and attached to existing local contracts.

At a meeting of the International Board of Arbitration held in New York City on April 24 the following action was taken:

First. The International Board of Arbitration hereby accepts the following as a proper provision to be included in local contracts entered into under the International Arbitration Agreement on and after May 1, 1917:

"Section —. In cases where members of the International Typographical Union enlist for active service in time of war, or members of the national guard who may be ordered to war, their situations may be filled by the foreman. Provided, That upon reporting for duty the situations formerly held by these members shall be restored to them."

Second. The International Board, in accepting the above section, includes under its provisions apprentices who are registered as such at the time of their enlistment or enrollment.

Third. The International Board recommends that publishers and local unions parties to existing contracts entered into under the International agreement shall amend such contracts to include the section quoted.

Fourth. The International Board specifically directs attention to the fact that the board has no authority to declare that this provision shall amend any local contract signed prior to May 1, 1917, unless included therein or attached thereto by and with the signed acceptance of both parties to such local contract.

Fifth. It is agreed and understood that if during the absence of an employe there has been a reduction in the force which includes the situation held by such employe, the union can not require the employer to restore a situation which does not exist.

Sixth. The International Board authorizes and instructs Chairman Kellogg and President Scott to prepare a statement to publishers and to subordinate unions covering in further detail the understanding of the board on this subject.

At the convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association held in New York City the following action was taken on April 27:

Whereas, The International Arbitration Board has accepted that part of section 127 of the International Typographical Union laws of 1917 reading as follows:
